PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., pastor of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

God is our refuge and our strength. I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

Let us pray:

Almighty God, we, Thy servants, here assembled humbly acknowledge our constant need of divine guidance. Especially amid all the tumult and confusion of these days of decision through which our people are passing, when our hearts are anxious and our minds perplexed, we are made deeply conscious, in a very new and real sense, of our dependence on the wisdom and the counsel that cometh down from above, and is ever profitable to direct.

Behold the needs of these representatives of the people. Give them strength of body, clarity of mind, and honesty of heart, that they may counsel and act together for the welfare of our Nation and the world. Strengthen any who are especially burdened among us, and give us fortitude of spirit for all our undertakings. God bless our land, defend our liberties, preserve our unity, and give us peace. In the name of Jesus Christ the Prince of Peace. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, September 30, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 253. An act to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 3636. An act to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes;

S. 3868. An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration;

S. 4258. An act to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, N. Y.; and

S. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution providing for the acquisition by the Railroad Retirement Board of data needed in carrying out the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. FRIES, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and Mr. REES of Kansas were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 8868. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc.; and

H. R. 9722. An act to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 3481. An act for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy; and

H. R. 4126. An act for the relief of Warren Zimmerman.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDINGS, FROID, MONT.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 301

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, the enrolled bill S. 1450, which would authorize an appropriation of $30,000 for cooperation with school district numbered 15, Froid, Mont., for the extension and improvement of public-school buildings.

Of a total school enrollment for the Froid district for the current year of 214, the Indian enrollment is only 14. Less than 7 percent, in other words, of the enrollment in the Froid district is comprised of children whose education is a responsibility of the Indian Service. Tuition for these Indian children is paid at the rate of 30 cents per day, with 10 cents a day per child additional for the noonday lunch.

In view of this ratio of Indian to white school children, and of the payment of tuition on account of the Indian children, it does not seem to me that the improvement of school facilities in the amount proposed in this bill may properly be regarded as a responsibility of the Indian Service.

While the bill provides for the recoupment by the United States, through reduction or elimination of the annual Federal tuition payments, of the amount to be expended, with interest at 3 percent per annum, within a period of 30 years, it is apparent that such recoupment would not be effected in view of the fact that the amount required to be paid to the Government for the first year would be $1,900 ($1,000 principal, and $900 interest), whereas the amount that would be earned by the school district on account of tuition for the Indian children—if in the same amount as for the last year—would be only $658.

For the foregoing reasons I am compelled to withhold approval of the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 1, 1940.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION INVESTIGATION OF PENNSYLVANIA SUBSIDIARIES OF ASSOCIATED GAS & ELECTRIC SYSTEM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting copies of the order and opinion of the Commission in its investigation of six Pennsylvania subsidiaries of the Associated Gas & Electric System, also a copy of the trial examiner's report approved by the Commission, and making reference to holding companies, affiliates, and operating companies, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4218) to extend to the Virgin Islands the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2189) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 8333. An act for the relief of Ralph W. Daggett, formerly lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army (Rept. No. 2190); and

H. R. 8613. An act to amend the act to provide for the retirement of disabled nurses of the Army and the Navy (Rept. No. 2191).

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4363) granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Whetstone Diversion Channel at or near Ortonville, Minn., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2192) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. BAILEY introduced a bill (S. 4392) for the relief of Thomas P. Waters, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN BRITISH POSSESSIONS AND REDUCTION OF GREAT BRITAIN'S INDEBTEDNESS TO THE UNITED STATES—REFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced Senate bill 4391, to authorize negotiations for the acquisition of certain British possessions, to provide for reducing the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States, and for other purposes. The bill is upon the table. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where I think it is appropriate for it to go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. OVERTON submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the standing rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 5 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:

"GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"For payment to Mrs. Katherine Clagett and to the estate of Dr. John Fitzpatrick $2,700 and $6,666.66, respectively, for services rendered the George Washington Bicentennial Commission in connection with the compilation of the definitive writings of George Washington, $9,366.66: Provided, That the payment to the said Mrs. Katherine Clagett shall be in full, complete, and final compensation of any and all claims arising out of services rendered to the George Washington Bicentennial Commission prior to June 30, 1940."

Mr. OVERTON also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10539, supra, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

AMENDMENT TO MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936—MOTION TO RECONSIDER WITHDRAWN

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I interposed in the absence of a Senator a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 9581) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, was passed. I desire now to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider having been withdrawn, the bill stands passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR LUCAS AT GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

[Mr. BROWN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator LUCAS at Grand Rapids, Mich., on Monday, September 23, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

EDUCATION'S DEFENSE OF DEMOCRACY—ADDRESS BY DANIEL L. MARSH

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Honorable Daniel L. Marsh, president of Boston University, at the Boston University summer school commencement on August 10, 1940, on education's defense of democracy, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY HON. GEORGE C. PEERY ON LIMITATION OF PRESIDENTIAL TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the statement of Hon. George C. Peery, formerly Governor of Virginia, before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on the question of the limitation of the Presidential term, which appears in the Appendix.]

EDITORIAL FROM MILWAUKEE SENTINEL ON THE THIRD TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Milwaukee Sentinel of July 6, 1939, on the subject of a third Presidential term, which appears in the Appendix.]

ENGLISH PREDICTIONS OF AMERICAN ACTION

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "English Publications Predict the Action of the United States With Great Accuracy," which appears in the Appendix.

PROFITS OF CORPORATIONS

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the REDORD an article entitled "War Profits," which appears in the Appendix.]

GERMAN-ITALIAN-JAPANESE PACT

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several articles on the subject of the German-Italian-Japanese pact, which appears in the Appendix.]

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH IN FABRICS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the conference report on what is known as the truth-in-fabrics bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report on Senate bill 162.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is unnecessary. The question is already before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to advise the Senate that I wish to be heard before a vote is taken on the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is debatable.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield to the proponent of the bill if he cares to take the time now.

Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. SCHWARTZ addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

S. FORRY LAUCKS AND THE YORK SAFE & LOCK CO.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, on Monday, September 23, 1940, the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] addressed the Senate on the subject of politics in national defense. During the course of his remarks the Senator referred to Mr. S. Forry Laucks, president of the York Safe & Lock Co. The Senator read a statement published in a York newspaper concerning Mr. Laucks' appointment as head of a Statewide organization to form Roosevelt-Wallace clubs.

The Senator further referred to another item in the paper announcing the awarding of an artillery material contract to the York Safe & Lock Co. in the amount of $2,914,720. The Senator referred to other contracts awarded the York Safe & Lock Co. He stated that he had found a half-page advertisement of the York Safe & Lock Co. in the Democratic campaign book of this year, and that the company paid approximately, "he imagined," $4,000 for that.

Any reasonable man who heard or read the Senator's remarks about Mr. Laucks could not help concluding that he, the Senator, was inferring, if not actually stating, that Mr. Laucks and his company were obtaining their business from the Government on a political or favor-granting basis.

I cannot permit that inference to stand unchallenged. I have known Mr. Laucks for many years. He is one of the most public-spirited citizens with whom I or anyone else could come in contact. He is well-to-do, and became thus, not through inheritance or speculation, but through his ability to build up and operate in an efficient manner one of the finest plants in this country engaged in his particular kind of business.

The wherewithal which he has earned as an honest businessman is used to a considerable extent in support of worthy charities in the community of which he has been a part for many years.

There are employed in his plant many men of the highest skill in their respective trades. They have been with him for years.

When the depression hit this country during the Hoover administration, and corporations without souls were laying off men right and left, in order that they might conserve their capital, Mr. Laucks, who practically owns the York Safe & Lock Co., continued his men on the pay roll, even though they could not be kept busy, at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars to himself.

These men had been with him for years. They had been faithful to him. He was faithful to them, and would not throw them out upon the community when he knew they would be unable to find employment at that time. He is that kind of man.

Mr. Laucks is a Democrat of long standing. To my personal knowledge he was one prior to the election of Woodrow Wilson. He has been a generous contributor to Democratic campaign funds for many years. He contributed his share, or more, even, when the party was out of power. He did so because he believes in the principles of the party.

He did place an advertisement in this year's Democratic yearbook. He paid $1,000 for that ad, and not $4,000, as the junior Senator from West Virginia imagined. I have in my possession the receipt covering the advertising contract.

The junior Senator from West Virginia referred to the following contracts awarded the York Safe & Lock Co. by the Government:

Artillery matériel Ordnance Department, contract worth $2,914,720.

War Department, gun mounts worth $604,188.

Navy Department, gun mounts worth $59,846.27.

War Department, cradle assemblies worth $57,050.

War Department, gun carriages worth $794,300.

Every single one of those contracts was obtained as a result of competitive bidding, and I want to emphasize the word "competitive." In each and every instance the York Safe & Lock Co. was the low bidder.

The $2,914,724 contract for artillery matériel was obtained in competition with the National Pneumatic Co., whose bid amounted to $3,264,000. The York Safe & Lock Co. underbid that firm $349,276.

The $604,188 contract for gun mounts was obtained in competition with the Buckeye Traction Ditcher Co., of Findley, Ohio, and the Baldwin Locomotive Co., of Eddystone, Pa. The bids of the Buckeye Traction Ditcher Co., and the Baldwin Locomotive Co. were $752,960 and $838,760, respectively, as compared with the York Safe & Lock Co.'s bid of $604,188.

The $59,846.27 contract for gun mounts was obtained in competition with the Buckeye Traction Ditcher Co., of Findley, Ohio, the Westinghouse Electric Elevator Co., of Jersey City, N. J., and the Pollack Manufacturing Co., of Arlington, N. J.

These companies bid $60,253.01, $87,057, and $124,055.05, as compared with the York Safe & Lock Co. bid of $59,846.27.

The $57,050 contract for cradle assemblies was obtained in competition with the Harvey Machinery Co. of Los Angeles, Calif., and the Tucker Manufacturing Co. of Detroit, Mich. The latter two companies bid $57,258.64 and $79,038.70, respectively, as compared with the York Safe & Lock Co. bid of $57,050.

The $794,300 contract for gun carriages was obtained in competition with the Western Austin Co. of Harvey, Ill., and the Duplex Printing Press Co. of Battle Creek, Mich. These latter two companies bid $963,300 and $975,468, respectively, as compared with the York Safe & Lock Co. bid of $794,300.

The figures and statements just given and made by me are matters of public record and are available to those of us who care to take the time to see them. There is nothing in the record to warrant impugning the integrity of Mr. S. Forry Laucks or the York Safe & Lock Co. The junior Senator from West Virginia has done so by inference. If he is willing to accept facts, he should be glad to apologize to Mr. Laucks and the York Safe & Lock Co. I hope he will do so.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD following my remarks a front-page article printed in the York (Pa.) Gazette and Daily, under date of September 25, 1940, entitled "S. Forry Laucks Hits Back at Senator HOLT"; a column from the same paper of the same date entitled "Around the Town"; and a column entitled "Around the Town" printed in the same paper under date of September 26.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the York (Pa.) Gazette and Daily of September 25, 1940]

S. FORRY LAUCKS HITS BACK AT SENATOR HOLT—POINTS OUT ALL CONTRACTS AWARDED TO YORK SAFE & LOCK CO. WERE AWARDED ON OPEN BIDS IN WHICH THE COMPANY WAS THE LOW BIDDER—HAS LONG BEEN A DEMOCRAT

S. Forry Laucks, president of the York Safe & Lock Co., last night denounced Senator RUSH D. HOLT, of West Virginia, for impugning the integrity of the Army and Navy procurement divisions in the matter of defense contracts awarded to the York Safe & Lock Co.

"All the contracts awarded our company," stated Mr. Laucks, "were awarded on open bids; and our company was the low bidder. The actual facts about them could have been ascertained by Senator HOLT if he had chosen to secure accurate information instead of just using the forum of the Senate to make misstatements about the national defense in order to raise suspicion of Federal officials at a time when the United States is going through a critical period.

NOTHING TO HIDE

"So far as orders placed with the York Safe & Lock Co. are concerned, we have nothing to hide. Every transaction is a matter of public record. We have no objection to that record being made public, but we deserve to have any citation of that record conform with the facts.

"We are proud of the fact that the York Safe & Lock Co. has been the successful bidder on a number of Government contracts. We entered the field of providing defense materials as soon as the need for better defense was apparent. We did not try to hold up the Government for high profits and special concessions as many manufacturing concerns have.

"Our plant is peculiarly adapted for making ordnance materials that require precision. It would be unpatriotic of us not to make this plant and its machine tools available to the Government when the Government needs it. We did it during the World War when we converted 95 percent of our plant capacity to war work. We shall continue that practice, and we will strain every effort to make as much of our plant as the Government needs available for Government work in spite of Senator HOLT or anybody else.

"On one contract to which Senator HOLT referred, we were low bidder by $349,276. On another contract we were low bidder by $208.64, and we assured delivery in 280 days as against 550 days by the second lowest bidder. On another contract we were low bidder by $169,000 and promised delivery 150 days earlier than the second lowest bidder. On still another contract we were low bidder by $406.74.

FROM LONG LINE OF DEMOCRATS

"I have been a Democrat all my life. My father was a Democrat all his life and he died in 1916 at the age of 92. His father before him was a Democrat when he died at the age of 81. On my mother's side my grandfather was a Democrat and attended a Democratic Convention in York in 1836 and was a member of the resolutions committee of the convention.

"All my life I have been a contributor to the Democratic Party. I am happy to do my little bit now to help reelect Franklin D. Roosevelt, whom I supported in 1932 and 1936. What I contribute to the cause of the Democratic Party is in line with the Democratic tradition in which I was reared and has no connection whatever with my business.

"It seems strange, indeed, that a lifelong Democrat should have his integrity impugned, and that Federal officials should be made suspicious, when contracts are awarded on open bidding, but no question is raised when large numbers of firms who are now supporting the Republican candidate are given defense contracts by negotiation.

"The interest of the York Safe & Lock Co. in defense contracts is an interest in helping to provide for the defense of the country we love and in bringing into the community, in which I have spent my entire life, work for the highly skilled workmen for which York has an international reputation."

[From the York (Pa.) Gazette and Daily of September 25, 1940]

AROUND THE TOWN

York industry came in for a bit of free publicity in the Senate of the United States on Monday.

"Lame duck" Senator RUSH D. HOLT, who has an almost perfect record in the Senate for being misinformed and obnoxious, who will be retired to private life when the Senate adjourns, brought the matter up.

Senator HOLT would have us believe that the Democratic Party is macing firms receiving defense contracts for contributions to the Democratic Party.

He cited the case of Mr. S. Forry Laucks, whose firm, the York Safe & Lock Co., has been receiving numerous defense contracts.

Mr. Laucks, he says, paid $4,000 for an ad in the Democratic campaign book.

Senator HOLT picked a very unhappy example. We who live in York and York County, if we are at all acquainted with the political situation, know a little something of Forry Laucks' allegiance to the Democratic Party. Laucks was a Democrat before Woodrow Wilson became President. That was about the time Senator HOLT was falling out of his cradle.

Laucks has been a generous contributor to Democratic campaign funds for many years. Even when Democrats were out of power Laucks contributed more than his share to Democratic campaign funds.

It so happens that the York Safe & Lock Co. was engaged in a type of manufacturing that is peculiarly adaptable to conversion for defense materials. The York Safe & Lock Co. was among the first companies on the job. It wasn't holding back waiting for a chance to gouge the Government on orders. It began to expand its plant and equipment before other firms even got the notion that by concerted pressure they might get the Government to pay for expansion.

It didn't wait for contracts to be negotiated. It bid on Government orders and got those orders because it was the lowest bidder.

York industries have as a whole been cooperative with the national-defense program. They have been among the first to receive contracts. They might have been among that group which has been holding up the national defense in the hope of gouging higher profits and special concessions.

Other York industries that have Government contracts are the Read Machinery Co., the York Ice Machinery Co., the S. Morgan Smith Co., the American Chain & Cable Co., the A. B. Farquhar Co., and Joseph Black & Sons. There may be others.

Why Senator HOLT should have picked the one industry whose president has always been a Democratic angel we don't know, except that one might attribute it to the Senator's penchant for being wrong all the time.

York industries have a good record for cooperation with the Government's national-defense program. We hope they keep it up. Senator HOLT'S charges of macing are simply ridiculous.

[From the York (Pa.) Gazette and Daily of September 26, 1940]

AROUND THE TOWN

Since Senator RUSH D. HOLT'S attack on the York Safe & Lock Co., and its president, S. Forry Laucks, connecting Mr. Laucks' contributions to the Democratic Party with Government contracts, we have gone a little deeper into the matter of Government contracts.

What we find is that Willkie supporters in York are among those who received substantial contracts from the Government.

If the Democrats were making support of Roosevelt as a condition of receiving Government contracts, York industries would be in the doldrums.

The American Chain Co. has Government contracts. Its local plants manager is a registered Republican.

The International Chain Co. has Government contracts. Its executives have been outspoken Willkie supporters.

The Joseph Black & Sons Hosiery Co. has Government contracts. One of its executives is active in organizing Willkie clubs.

The York Ice Machinery Co. has Government contracts. The chairman of the board, Mr. William S. Shipley, is actively supporting the Willkie candidacy. So are other executives of the company.

The P. H. Glatfelter Co., Spring Grove, has large Government contracts. Its president, Philip Glatfelter, is a vociferous supporter of Willkie.

The Hanover Shoe Co. has Government contracts. The Sheppards and the Myers are strong Republicans.

The S. Morgan Smith Co. has received many Government contracts during the Roosevelt administration. Only recently this company was awarded a contract to furnish turbines in the amount of $763,000. This is small compared with previous Government contracts received by this firm.

But the Smiths were among the original Willkie supporters. Members of the Smith family were active in circulating Willkie petitions among the country-club set when the people were supposed to be demanding that the Republicans nominate Willkie.

A. B. Farquhar Co. has received Government contracts. The president of this company is a Democrat and the vice president a Republican.

Senator HOLT implied that it paid the York Safe & Lock Co. to be on the right side. He also charged macing by the Democrats on Government contracts.

If the Democrats were being maced, it would seem that the Farquhar Co. would have been maced. If all industrialists were being maced on Government contracts, then all of these many Republican industrialists must have been maced.

If such is the case, these Republican industrialists can elect Willkie. All they need to do is come forward and show that they have been blackjacked into contributions for Government orders. The reaction would be such that Roosevelt wouldn't have a chance.

If they have not been maced, then it would seem that they owe it to their fellow industrialist, Forry Laucks, to come out and say so and to join in denunciation of Senator HOLT's accusations.

We confess that we feel rather good about so many York firms getting Government contracts. It shows they have been active. It shows they have been right on the job when the country needed them. It shows that they are not overly greedy for profits.

But we are also glad about it because these Government contracts have brought millions of dollars' worth of work to York, providing our workmen with opportunities to use their skills, providing our merchants with a population that has purchasing power, and making York a good market for consumers' goods.

And we don't care whether the leaders of York's industries are Republicans or Democrats. We'd hate to think, however, that the contracts were secured because they were on the right side and contributing to party campaign funds in order to get them. We don't believe this is the case in any instance.

The mixture of the Smith family, the S. Morgan Smith Co., the Commonwealth & Southern Co., and Government contracts is interesting. It seems a case of the right hand ignoring what the left hand is doing.

The S. Morgan Smith Co. built turbines for the Georgia Power Co. Later on the Smith family became heavy security holders in the Georgia Power Co. One of the family sat on its board of directors for many years. In 1929 when Commonwealth & Southern was being formed by the Morgans, the Georgia Power Co. became an operating unit in the Commonwealth & Southern system. Members of the Smith family became heavily interested in Commonwealth & Southern.

When the Tennessee Valley Authority was created, the Georgia Power Co. became one of the foremost opponents of public power in the Tennesssee Valley. The parent company, Commonwealth & Southern, and Wendell Willkie, in particular, formed the spearhead of the drive against the Tennessee Valley Authority. The issue was public power versus private power. Public ownership was being severely condemned.

But all the while this fight against public power was going on, the S. Morgan Smith Co. was building hydroelectric-power equipment for Government controlled power development. And all the while, even up to the present time, that the Smith family were closely associated with the fight against public power, the Smith Co. was helping to bring public power to reality by building the machinery necessary. The latest contract of the S. Morgan Smith Co. for hydroelectric equipment for the Tennessee Valley Authority amounts to $763,000.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield until preliminary matters are disposed of, when I shall claim the floor again in my own right.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, relative to the remarks of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], he has not disputed a single, solitary statement I made on the floor of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent at this point in my remarks to have printed what I said on the floor of the Senate on the 23d day of September this year, as it appears on page 12449 of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the matter suggested by the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICS IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, for a long while we have heard the statement that there should be no politics in national defense. I agree with that; I feel that we should have an adequate, strong national defense, but I do object to politics in the awarding of contracts.

The other day there was sent to me a newspaper containing a very significant item, which could be duplicated, I think, in many instances. It is a newspaper published in York, Pa., and the article is headed "Heads State Drive." It reads in this way:

"Appointment of S. Forry Laucks, president of the York Safe & Lock Co., as head of a State-wide organization to form Roosevelt-Wallace clubs, was announced yesterday by Dr. Luther A. Harr, Pennsylvania Democratic campaign chairman, at Harrisburg. The appointment was made by National Chairman Edward J. Flynn.

" 'It is my purpose to establish Roosevelt-Wallace clubs in every county,' Mr. Laucks said in a statement, 'and through their membership to prosecute a vigorous campaign, not only for these able candidates on our national ticket but for the reelection of United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey and for G. Harold Wagner for State treasurer and for F. Clair Ross for auditor general.

" 'In addition, the clubs will give special attention, too, to the candidacies of every Democratic aspirant to a seat in the State senate and in the house of representatives.' "

There is nothing particularly significant about that; Mr. Laucks has a perfect right to be chairman, but in the same newspaper I find this item:

"Local firms get war contracts totaling $3,046,120."

This is what is said under the heading—I will not burden the Senate by reading the complete list but in naming the contracts the newspaper says:

"Largest was an artillery matériel Ordnance Department contract awarded to the York Safe & Lock Co. and worth $2,914,720."

The York Safe & Lock Co. has as its president Mr. S. Forry Laucks, who, on the very day he got a contract for $3,000,000 from the United States Army, was named as chairman of the Pennsylvania Roosevelt-Wallace Clubs. It may only be a coincidence; I do not know; but it is quite an unusual thing to pick up a newspaper and see a man named as State chairman who at the same time gets $3,000,000 worth of contracts from the United States Government.

So I thought I would look a little further into the York Safe & Lock Co. I find that Mr. Laucks has a perfectly good reason to be for the ticket. I am not discussing whether he should or should not be, but here is what I find:

During the week of January 13, 1940, the York Safe & Lock Co. got a contract from the War Department for $604,188 worth of gun mounts, to be delivered on the 15th day of September. Then on the 10th of February 1940 I find the Navy gave a contract to the York Safe & Lock Co.—the Army had given them the other one—the Navy gave them a contract for $59,846.27 worth of gun mounts.

Not satisfied with that we find that on February 24, 1940, the War Department again gave the same York Safe & Lock Co. a $57,050 contract for cradle assemblies.

By the way, we find that delivery was to be made on the 2d day of November 1940. Of course, November 2, 1940, is a very good time to have the factories going.

Here is another thing. We find that in the week of August 24, 1940, the same York Safe & Lock Co. got a contract from the War Department for gun carriages amounting to $794,300. Add to those the recent contract given to the York Safe & Lock Co. amounting to $2,914,720, and it will be seen that it pays to be on the right side.

It will be remembered that in 1937 I discussed the Democratic campaign book of 1936. I picked up the Democratic campaign book of this year with the words "Price, 25 cents" marked out. I turn to page 114, and I find a half-page advertisement of the York Safe & Lock Co. They paid approximately, I imagine, $4,000 for that. Of course, that was a pretty good investment; there can be no doubt about that, because we find that in September they got a $3,000,000 contract from the Government.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I stated that a copy of the York paper containing matter relative to Mr. S. Forry Laucks had been sent to me, and I have the paper in my hand at this time. At the head of one column is the line "Heads State Drive," and then it is shown that Mr. S. Forry Laucks had been named as president of the Roosevelt-Wallace Clubs in Pennsylvania as president of the York Safe & Lock Co.

On the same identical front page of the same paper, down in the fifth column from the left, is the reference, "Local firms get war contracts totalling $3,046,120," and it states what I said on the floor of the Senate:

Largest was an artillery matériel Ordnance Department contract awarded to the York Safe & Lock Co. and worth $2,914,720.

I listed contracts which were given to Mr. S. Forry Laucks, and I found that I did not list them all. But, let me state the situation.

Mr. Laucks, as president of the York Safe & Lock Co., donated money to the Democratic campaign fund in direct violation of section 313 of the Corrupt Practice Law, which provides:

It is unlawful for any national bank or any corporation * * * to make a contribution * * * in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a

Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section.

I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania does not want the Senate to think that the activities in Pennsylvania are as pure as the icicles which hung from Diana's temple. He might be able to tell that to the people of Afghanistan or Zanzibar, but he cannot tell it to the United States Senate.

I say that Mr. S. Forry Laucks took a half page "ad" in the Democratic campaign book. I say that the very day when he was awarded a $2,000,000 contract, as shown by the York paper, he came out publicly not only for the President and Vice President, but for the Senator from Pennsylvania and all other candidates on the ticket. I say that he rendered himself liable for this public indictment when he did so, taking Government contracts under those circumstances.

I do not blame the Senator from Pennsylvania for replying to me; and I say this with no personal ill will at all, and I want him to know that. I know that he told the truth when he said that S. Forry Laucks had been a great contributor to the party. No one denies that. I find that on March 23, 1940, Mr. S. Forry Laucks donated to the Joseph F. Guffey State campaign committee in Philadelphia $2,500. I find that on the 20th day of April 1940, Mr. S. Forry Laucks donated $500 more to the York County Joseph F. Guffey campaign committee.

I have not checked all the record. That has been impossible, I have had so much work to do, but the Senator from Pennsylvania had told the truth about Mr. Laucks, because I find that during the months of March and April of this year he donated $3,000 to the Guffey campaign committee, and, of course, I do not blame the Senator for defending him on the floor of the Senate. However, I do not want him to think there is any personal feeling about the matter.

I also read in the York Dispatch under date of April 20, 1940, Mr. Laucks' paid advertisement, for which he paid the Dispatch Publishing Co. $48, and the purpose of that advertisement, which I have here, is indicated in the reading:

> To all Democrats who wish for fair play and success of their party. Why GUFFEY should be renominated.

That is in the York Dispatch of April 20.

I find that he also paid $48 for the same kind of an advertisement in the York Gazette and Daily as to why JOSEPH F. GUFFEY should be elected to the United States Senate.

Mr. President, I say that no one can dispute the fact that Mr. Laucks, as president of the York Safe & Lock Co., did take an advertisement in the Democratic campaign book. What he paid for it I do not know, and I said I did not know. If he got the advertisement for $1,000 it was pretty cheap advertisement and a very good investment. No one denies that. But I say that he received millions of dollars worth of contracts. Anyone who reads the record will find that out.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if Mr. Laucks did not win, in open competition, every contract the Senator looked up?

Mr. HOLT. I am coming to that.

Mr. GUFFEY. I ask, did he not win it in open competition?

Mr. HOLT. I will answer the Senator in just a moment. I will say that I tried to get those contracts. I have called the office of the Chief of Ordnance of the War Department, I have called the Assistant Secretary of War, and they say they cannot find those contracts anywhere. I do not know where they are. I am not saying where they are. But it is unusual when a Member of the Senate calls up and they cannot even find the contracts. One person said over the telephone—I do not recall who it was in the Department—"He did not get any contracts in 1940." I said, "If you will look back on a certain date you will find one." My office gave him the date, gave him what the contract was for, and who the contract was to, and he said, "We cannot find that information unless you get us the contract number."

How in the world could a Member of the Senate, or anyone else, know what contract number was assigned? I have tried to find out, but cannot. I say that on the face of it—

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. Why did the Senator not offer a resolution asking for that information from both the War Department and the Navy Department? If the Senator does that he will get that information. I have a copy of the contract here from Mr. Laucks' files. The Senator can obtain it if he offers the proper resolution asking for it.

The Senator is trying to impugn Mr. Laucks' motives and actions. I have known Mr. Laucks since 1912. He was a large contributor to the Woodrow Wilson campaign fund, and he has contributed to the party campaign fund ever since, whether he had contracts or not. The Senator can obtain the information if he honestly desires to obtain it, by offering a resolution; but the trouble is that the Senator does not honestly want to obtain it. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HOLT. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I did not think it was necessary for a Member of the United States Senate to introduce a resolution for that purpose when I personally have tried to get the information from the War Department by means of telephone calls time after time. I do not know what is in those contracts, but I do say, knowing how competitive bidding is done in the State of Pennsylvania which the Senator from Pennsylvania discussed in connection with a gravel contract last spring—I know how competitive bidding is done. Everyone knows how it is done. Competition in Pennsylvania is easy. If you allow me to write the contract, I will tell you who will get the contract without question. And I repeat again on the floor of the Senate what I have previously said, that Mr. S. Forry Laucks took the campaign leadership on the day that he got his contract for $3,000,000 and became president of the Roosevelt-Wallace clubs. I have shown here today that the Senator from Pennsylvania's campaign received $3,000 at the very time this man Laucks was getting Government contracts.

I do not think the Senator's speech was worth $3,000 to him, but nevertheless the fact is here. The contracts are known. Mr. Laucks indicts himself by his actions. I make no apology to Mr. Laucks, and I make the statement that his actions do indict his own record, because at the very time he was getting contracts he should not have accepted this political appointment.

I want the RECORD to show that every statement I have made is based on facts. Mr. Laucks, in my opinion, has been a good party worker in Pennsylvania—I do not deny that—he has been paid well for that party work.

I have been told recently another very interesting thing in connection with Mr. Laucks and the Government, and I will come back and discuss that a little later on. I did not intend to go into the matter this morning. I did not know that the Senator from Pennsylvania was going to speak, but I do wish the RECORD to show that I told the truth, and now I want to add to it the fact that Mr. Laucks donated to the Senator from Pennsylvania $3,000 at the time that Mr. Laucks was getting Government contracts.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH IN FABRICS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the motion pending before the Senate is to agree to the conference committee report on Senate bill 162. The bill with respect to which the conference report assumes to bring about an agreement, relates to wool. The bill is sometimes called a truth-in-fabrics bill. The proposed legislation has been pending before the Congress for 38 years. Members have come to Congress, have introduced bills designed to solve this problem, have tried to secure their passage, and have failed. Many years ago the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] introduced such a bill in the Senate and at the same time Representative French introduced a similar bill in the House. They tried to write bills which would enable the consumer to know what kind of cloth was contained in a garment; but they decided they could not write such legislation.

Mr. President, we are now dealing with the subject of wool. The purpose of the bill is to raise the price of wool. This particular bill was introduced in the Senate early in the present Congress. The bill was referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee made many amendments to the bill, and reported it to the Senate.

The Senate made some amendments to the bill, and sent it on to the House of Representatives. The House made 25 amendments to the bill, and sent it back to this body. At that time a motion was made that the Senate agree to the House amendments. I objected to that motion, and after discussing it for some time it was agreed that the bill should go to conference. The bill went to conference. Conferees were appointed on behalf of the Senate and likewise on behalf of the House.

I made objection to the bill because, first, it is an anticotton bill. I made objection, secondly, because the bill would raise the price of wool, which means that it would raise the price of wool products, the price of wool cloth, and the price of many textile articles which must be bought for the United States Army that is now in process of making.

I made the charge, Mr. President, that the bill would regiment one of the great industries of America, that is, the woolen industry. I made the further charge that the bill, if passed, would set a precedent for the regimentation of every class of industry, and because no good purpose could be served by the passage of the bill, I opposed it, and I oppose it now.

Mr. President, because the bill has had little consideration on the floor of the Senate, I shall take what time is necessary to make a statement for the RECORD. I do not expect Senators to stay on the floor and listen to me speak. They have not done so in the past, and I cannot expect them to do so now. But the RECORD will show, I hope, the reasons I have for voting against the bill and for opposing the adoption of the conference report. I shall not take a moment's time that I do not conceive to be necessary to explain what the bill means. It has to do with wool. It is a bill, so I understand, to provide a plan by which the public may ascertain the "truth in fabric," and, wool being the main part of the fabric that is referred to, I asked the question on a former occasion if some Member of the Senate could define wool, and as I remember, not a Member on the floor could define wool. There were two or three Members present on that occasion, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the author of the bill, the senior Member from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who did have some understanding about this piece of proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the conference committee. It was a carefully selected committee. I make no complaint about that, because the author of the bill has the right to submit his recommendations in that respect. The author of the bill selected a conference committee on behalf of the Senate. The chairman of the committee was the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I made the charge that this was an anticotton bill; and, of course, there is no cotton grown in the State of Montana.

The second member of the committee was the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. Of course, there is no cotton grown in the State of New Hampshire.

The third member was the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. There is no cotton grown in that State, so far as I know.

The fourth member of the committee was the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. There may be a little cotton grown in Kansas, but I doubt it. I think cotton does not grow that far north. Certainly no cotton of any consequence or value is grown in Kansas.

The fifth member of the committee was the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]; and there is no cotton grown in the State of Colorado.

So the members of the conference committee on behalf of the Senate were selected from non-cotton-growing States. They were selected from States which produce wool. I make no complaint about that, but I do make complaint that when the committee, appointed as it was, conferred with the conferees on the part of the House—they did not have a conference, they had a meeting, and that is all they had.

The conference report reads as follows:

Having met—

Well, the conferees met all right—

after full and free conference—

That they did not have. I was not present. I was not a member of the conference committee, but I understand from three members of the House conference committee, who did not sign the report, that there was no conference; that the moment the conferees got together the Senate conferees said, "We accept the House bill," and the majority of the House members said, "We have passed the House bill, and we have nothing to concede; you accept our amendment; therefore there is no occasion for a conference." So in this particular case the Senate conferees accepted the 25 amendments of the House without discussion.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to one of the amendments which the Senate conferees accepted. On page 9 of the conference committee's confidential print we find amendment No. 17. Amendment No. 17 relates to the word "wood." In some manner as the bill passed the House it contained the word "wood"—w-o-o-d, instead of the word "wool," w-o-o-l. So the bill came to this body with the word "wood" in it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not expect to interrupt the Senator, but I simply wish to say, in respect to his suggestion as to the word "wood," that if the Senator will read the RECORD he will find that the bill which the House was discussing was read into the RECORD in full, and it uses the word "wool," and not "wood."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I can only know what we see before us. Amendment No. 17 refers to the word "wood," and the conferees did not give sufficient consideration to the 25 amendments to correct the word "wood" to what it should be, the word "wool." We are now asked to agree to a conference report relating to wood. So I make the positive statement, Mr. President, that there was no full conference; there was no free conference. The Senate conferees met with the House conferees, and the Senate conferees accepted 25 amendments at one fell swoop, and the report is sent back to the Senate with the recommendation that the Senate agree to the House action, containing 25 amendments to the Senate bill. We have before us a copy of the Senate bill, and by turning to page 16 of the text of the bill we find there are 25 amendments.

The last amendment, the twenty-fifth amendment, is an entirely new section, which exempts furniture cloth from the provisions of the bill. I desire to read the twenty-fifth amendment:

EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 14. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, delivery for shipment, shipment, sale, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries, nor to any person manufacturing, delivering for shipment, shipping, selling, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries.

I am not opposed to that amendment. I think such articles should be excepted from the bill, because oftentimes the materials which go into furniture cloth are largely materials other than wool. They are a mixture of fibers. Perhaps there is some wool in the cloth used for upholstering. It may also contain cotton, rayon, or perhaps silk. So there is no excuse, so far as I can see, for not excepting the cloth used in connection with furniture. But the same reason which applies to the cloth used to make furniture should exempt every other class of cloth made from wool.

Mr. President, in my judgment, those who vote for the conference report vote for higher prices for wool. If wool were at a low price, I should not complain about that. I like to see reasonably high prices; but at the present time wool is selling at 120 percent of parity. We have been striving for 100-percent parity. We like to have wool up to 100 percent of parity. The same statement applies to wheat, cotton, and all other agricultural products. Parity means a price bearing the same relation to the price of the finished product as the price of the finished product bears to 100. Today wool is selling at 120 percent of parity.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to what happened yesterday. I read a news item from today's Washington Post. It is on page 21, under the heading "Woolen Prices Up 5 Cents a Yard." That was yesterday, Mr. President. I read:

WOOLEN PRICES UP 5 CENTS A YARD

NEW YORK, September 30.—The American Woolen Co. announced today a boost of 5 cents a yard on woolen and worsted goods and 2½ cents a yard on tropical and blended lines. The price changes apply to spring goods recently put on the market.

Textile prices have been stiffening as result of heavy buying both for military and civilian needs.

In the wool top futures market, a sharp rise in price continued. At one time contracts were up about 3 cents a pound today.

We now have pending before the Senate a bill proposing to raise the price of wool still higher, when it is now at 120 percent of parity, and went up yesterday 3 cents per pound. I cannot vote for such a bill. Those who desire to do so will have the privilege later today to vote for a still higher price for wool. That means a higher price for wool products—woolen cloth, woolen suits, and woolen coats. It means a higher price for every uniform worn by an American soldier or sailor when we are assembling a force to protect the property and people of the United States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The argument of the Senator from Oklahoma sounds very plausible, but he forgets that it is possibly the fault of Congress that the prices of wool are now what they are. I do not think they are outrageous. I think the wool growers have gone through as much agony as have the cotton growers or any other producers of commodities. Only lately have the wool growers been able to obtain sufficiently high prices to pay the cost of production of their product. Congress itself set a limit on the profits.

Only a few short months ago we passed an appropriation bill for the War Department which contained an item for wool. Some of us, even from wool-growing States—and I happen to be one of that number—wanted to limit the profit. Nevertheless, Congress did otherwise.

If anyone needs protection, it is the wool grower. I do not mean that he should be the only one protected. I feel that the cotton grower should have protection as well, but the wool grower has certainly suffered sufficiently at the hands of Congress. I do not think Congress would be doing too much for the wool grower if it should pass a bill providing, in effect, that if one asks for a wool blanket it shall be a wool blanket. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am not complaining against fair prices for wool; I stand for fair prices for wool. My State produces wool in abundance. My State likewise produces cotton; it can produce 1,000,000 bales of cotton. I maintain that the bill is an anticotton bill. If the bill increases the demand for wool, it decreases the demand for products such as cotton, silk, rayon, nylon, and other substitutes for wool.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The only reason why the price of wool is what it now is, and the only reason why the wool grower is not bankrupt this very day, is the fact that Congress passed a bill containing an item of $75,000,000 to buy the necessary woolen cloth for the soldiers whom we are trying to take care of, to provide them with suits, coats, trousers, underwear, hats, blankets, and so forth. That is the only reason why the price of wool is at a reasonable level. Otherwise the wool growers would be in worse condition than are the cotton growers.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. At a time such as this, when we cannot foresee when we shall not be in the market for wool, I maintain that we should not place upon the statute books a law which would still further increase the price of wool.

Mr. President, those who vote for the conference report will vote for higher prices for wool. There can be no doubt about that. Those who vote for the conference report will vote for higher prices to be paid for Army uniforms, overcoats, blankets, underwear, socks, sweaters, and gloves.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not wish to impose upon the good nature of the Senator; but is it not true that the only reason why industries in general, including the steel industry, the munitions industry, powder makers, and explosives makers, are receiving any profit whatsoever is because of the emergency of the moment? It is not because anyone wants to provide some special benefit for the wool grower. It happens that there is an emergency at the moment, and that is the only reason why the wool grower is now able to pay his sheep herders.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So far as I know, there is no bill before the Senate to increase the price of steel. So far as I know, there is no bill before the Senate to increase the price of copper or the prices of foodstuffs to the American people.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct; but this is the first bill in a lifetime wherein the wool grower has been in some measure protected, even though it had to happen during the emergency.

No one can tell me that the dividends to the steel companies or copper producers will not be larger than those received by wool growers. Whether or not the United States can produce copper more cheaply than it can be produced elsewhere is immaterial. We have an emergency, and we need copper at this particular moment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from New Mexico has now qualified as a wool expert, and I wish to ask him some questions. He is almost the only Senator who is willing to listen to me, and I presume he is glad to answer questions.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill relates to wool; does it not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is wool?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall try to answer as best I can. Wool is the fleece of the sheep.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not so defined in the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think it is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me read the definition to the Senator.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We are not talking about shoddy. We are talking about wool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the terms of the bill, wool means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb. The Senator left out lambs.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I hope the Senator will not quibble over the difference between a sheep and a lamb.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The definition also includes the hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat. Is that wool?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is a fleece.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the hair of a goat wool?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It answers the same purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Shoddy would answer the same purpose.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Except that it is of a different quality.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are different qualities of sheep; are there not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. A shirt is a shirt; but a shirt may be made of wool or of cotton.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill defines wool as a fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb, or the hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat. The Senator was not present the other day when this matter was being discussed. The fleece of a goat would include his whiskers; would it not? Under the terms of the bill, a billy goat's whiskers are defined as virgin wool. Does the Senator believe that to be correct?

Mr. CHAVEZ. In the case of cotton, there is Delta cotton, New Mexico cotton, long-staple cotton, and short-staple cotton.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill makes no distinction. I shall come to that question later. The bill also defines wool as the fiber from the hair of a camel. Is camel's hair wool?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am asking the Senator from New Mexico some questions. I shall be glad later to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If I may——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am asking the Senator from New Mexico some questions.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall try to answer the question. The hair of a camel is used for certain purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bristles of a hog are used for certain purposes, but they are certainly not virgin wool.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct; but the fleece of an Angora goat is used for the same purpose as is the fleece of a sheep, lamb, or wether, or whatever one may choose to call it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the terms of the bill, the hair of an alpaca is wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the terms of the bill the hair of a llama is wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I will not yield now. I am asking the Senator from New Mexico some questions.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator from New Mexico has resumed his seat.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator from Oklahoma said that no Member of the Senate seems to be able to give a definition of wool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I hold in my hand the American Wool Handbook, which is the textbook of the wool industry and of the textile industry. It is used in the Columbia University Textile College, and it has the indorsement of Mr. Besse, who is the head of the wool industry. I wish to read his definition of wool. I ask the Senator to bear in mind that we are not dealing with wool from the biological standpoint alone. We are dealing with wool as it enters into commerce; so we are interested in the commercial definition of wool as well as the biological definition. This is the definition given by the handbook:

> Wool. The hair of the sheep. Commercially includes the hairs of alpaca, Angora goat, camel, Cashmere goat, llama, and vicuna.

I will say for the benefit of the Senator, inasmuch as we are discussing this particular subject at this time, that every one of those hairs and every one of those special fibers is more expensive than wool. Although in one section of the bill those fibers are included in the definition of wool, under another section of the bill the Federal Trade Commission may give them a special classification.

The Senator just asked the Senator from New Mexico again as to whether whiskers are wool. I want to say to the Senator that, while it may be all very fine to engage in some poor bucolic humor, this is a serious matter. However, the Senator was talking about the whiskers of the Angora goat, and the other day he referred to the fact that he used to be a school teacher. I never taught school, but I have talked to many school teachers. When I was in the primary grades I believed everything I was told; when I reached high school I began to have some doubt, and when I come into the Senate and hear a school teacher begin to talk, I want to take some exception. I show to the Senator an article [exhibiting] which contains sheep wool and also Angora goat wool. If he will look at it, he will see that it is as soft as a baby's kiss, as white and pure as a maiden's dream, and as warm as the love of a good woman. [Laughter.] Yet the Senator talks about the whiskers of the Angora goat.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on a former occasion——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I should like to show the Senator one more sample. Here is a cloth, a tapestry. The pile of it is Angora; all of it is mohair.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on a former occasion, I exhibited to the Senate a sample of a pure wool sock. It was made for a man who wore about a No. 11½ or 12 shoe. The sock was sufficiently large so that a man with a foot of that size could get both feet into one sock. After the sock had been laundered three times it was too small for any man to wear, and only a very small youngster could get the sock upon his foot. I am not sure what this is. It seems to be a dollar pair of Woodward & Lothrop's socks, and, from what I know about socks, if this pair should be laundered about twice it would be suitable for a baby to wear.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator has brought up the matter of the socks. The other day the Senator held up a sock and said it was a No. 11, adapted to fit his feet. Here [exhibiting] is a No. 11, 100-percent wool sock, and I assume it is just about what the Senator bought. It has a lot of loose wool in it so as to give warmth to keep the Senator's "tootsies" warm, but it is also well-knit, though rather loosely here and there, so as to ventilate his feet. I wish to state to the Senator that this particular sock has on it a label with which the Senator was not familiar or did not take the trouble to read. Every housewise in America knows how to launder a wool sock so that it will not shrink.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is more than the laundryman knows sometimes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. But every laundryman should know. On occasions the dudes and dudeens from down East go West and there they wash their own socks. So the average dealer puts a label on them telling how to wash them. That is done also for the benefit of the tenderfeet who come from the sunburned stretches of Oklahoma and go to Alaska in the middle of the summer with the idea that there is a very cold climate there when really the Alaskan climate is salubrious and mild. This [exhibiting] is the sock about which the Senator spoke. He said he sent that sock to the laundry, and this [exhibiting] is what came back. When he was talking about that sock the distinguished senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was acting as interlocutor, and I thought I saw a naughty twinkle in his eye. On first blush—and I thought he was blushing—I thought I had an answer, but I did not express it, because knowing the Senator as I do, having traveled all over the United States with him by air, I knew that blushing was not necessary in his case, but this is the thought that occurred to me—

> Little Bo Peep
> Lost her sheep (her socks)
> And did not know where to find them.
> She let them alone, and finally they came home
> In the Senator's laundry.

[Laughter.]

But that was not what happened. What happened was he sent his socks to the laundry in good faith, to some laundry that did not happen to know or did not take the trouble to find out how the socks should be ironed. That is one suggestion as to what happened to the Senator's socks. But the more probable one is that his laundry, by mistake, took a pair of ladies' little socks and sent them back to the Senator, and the Senator, in his innocence, assumed that the socks he sent to the laundry had shrunk and lost their wool content, and whereas before they may have weighed some 3 or 4 ounces when they got back, for some mysterious reason, they did not weigh more than an ounce.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is very interesting to hear the Senator talk about presumption. The facts are that this large pair of socks was made large because the maker knew that they would shrink, and when they were sent to the laundry they did shrink. The more they are laundered the more they shrink, the more they shrink the smaller they get, and, after a while, they are worthless for any purpose whatever. For that reason, one cannot buy such hose at the same place he bought them a while ago, because they are not serviceable, they will not wear well, they shrink, and the store quits selling them anymore. The kind that I had reference to had legs as long as the whole sock the Senator exhibits.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. What the Senator had were ribbed, making them a little longer, and the ones that came back even had about the top the pretty little red stripe of which the Senator spoke. But as for saying that one cannot get them, everybody knows that every yarn-and-sock manufacturer in the United States makes them of all wool, and makes them for use in cold climates. This particular one, I want to say, was made by the Hand Knit Hosiery Co., of Sheboygan, Wis., and any dealer who understands woolen goods and woolen socks will say that that particular concern does not make any socks that have shoddy in them. They make a good, all-wool sock for all-wool purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I admit that these socks are apparently made out of what is called virgin wool, but because they are made out of virgin wool, when they are laundered, when they are boiled in water, they shrink.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am going to make my own speech for a while, and the Senator can have the floor in his own time.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Very well, but anybody who would boil that sock would expect it to shrink.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is often necessary to boil socks, and because they do shrink they are not serviceable. Imagine a soldier being equipped with a full virgin woolen suit of underclothing.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask the Senator to let me proceed if he will.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. But the Senator looked at me and asked me a question about something we know does not happen.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It does happen.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The soldier does not wear a 100-percent-wool sock.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. He may wear a woolen undersuit. Imagine a soldier clothed in a 100-percent virgin wool suit of underclothing, a pair of socks of 100-percent virgin wool, with a blouse made out of 100-percent virgin wool, then a pair of trousers made of wool 100-percent virgin, a coat made out of wool 100 percent virgin, and a 100-percent virgin-wool overcoat and a sweater, going forth to battle. The storms come and the rain descends and he gets wringing wet. He might be in a tropical country. The water might not be boiling, but it might be warm, and the next morning when the soldier gets up to put on his outfit what would he find? The Senator has demonstrated what he would find. He could not get into his underclothing, he could not get into his socks, he could not get into his trousers, he could not get into his blouse, he could not get into his coat, and he could not wear his overcoat. For that reason the Army does not specify 100 percent virgin wool to be used in making some of the clothing the soldier has to wear.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. But, generally, the soldier wears woolen goods instead of cotton goods.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true; he wears woolen rather than cotton, and that is one reason I have, for being against this bill; namely, that it discriminates against cotton. Many of the blankets issued to soldiers contain cotton; many of the clothes that are worn by the public contain cotton. This bill places cotton below shoddy; it provides that any garment which is made of all wool, no matter what kind of wool, just so it is wool, so it is a wool product, it is all right; but if it contains the finest cotton in the world it is discriminated against because the public would not want to buy an all-wool suit presumably and then find out later on it had a percentage of cotton in it. Cotton gives it strength and color. Rayon will give it strength and color; silk will give it strength and color. Yet under this bill they are discriminated against and the cheapest grade of shoddy under this bill has a higher ranking in the public estimation—for, otherwise, the bill is of no effect—than the highest grade of silk, the highest grade of rayon, the highest grade of nylon, or the highest grade of cotton.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think the Senator from Oklahoma has the wrong idea of the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is not to discriminate against cotton. The purpose of the bill is to protect wool where wool should be protected. Cotton has its uses. The Army is not discriminating against cotton. It is buying cotton for particular purposes for which it is needed just as the Army, with $75,000,000 that was provided by the Congress of the United States, is buying wool for the purposes for which wool is needed.

All this bill seeks to do is to cause the manufacturer to tell the American housewife, who is interested, whether she is getting cotton or shoddy or wool when she purchases an article at Woodward & Lothrop's, or elsewhere. If she wants wool, she should be protected to the extent of knowing that what she buys is not a reworked suit of old clothes which has been torn to pieces and remade into cloth. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If that is the understanding the Senator has of this bill he is not voting for that kind of a bill, because, if this bill becomes a law, there is no power under the heaven, save by constant inspection from the beginning, that can tell the housewife what she is getting in a garment that she buys. There is no test known to man that can detect the presence of worked wool or reprocessed wool in a garment. The War Department, in order to protect itself, provides its own system of inspection.

Mr. President, under the terms of this bill, the lowest quality of wool that is grown on the runtiest sheep that lives stands on the same pinnacle with the finest fleece grown on the back of a full-blooded merino sheep. The housewife may go to a store, such as Woodward & Lothrop's, and buy an all-woolen product of virgin wool, and yet that virgin wool may have sold in the beginning at from 2 to 5 cents a pound.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some charts which I have had placed on the wall.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I have here a letter from a manufacturing company of my State, and I should like, if the Senator will permit me to take a moment, to read a part of it into the RECORD, and then ask the Senator if the conclusions stated are correct. The writer of the letter, among other things, says:

1. No fair manufacturer objects to a practical truth-in-fabric bill if such can be worked out.
2. The impracticability lies in the fact that research laboratories are unable to distinguish virgin from reworked wool.
3. This statement is acknowledged by all reliable laboratories, including the Bureau of Standards.
4. Because identification is impossible, such a law invites rather than stops unfair labeling of fabrics by those manufacturers who take advantage of this situation.

5. Therefore the honest manufacturer is punished through being compelled to compete against an unfair fabric; also,
6. There are two sources of wool:
a. As clipped from the sheep.
b. As pulled from the pelt of slaughtered animals.
7. Proposed bill unfairly excludes pulled wool from being labeled virgin wool.
8. Fair-practice rules must be workable or they are a decided detriment rather than a help.

I am wondering whether in the Senator's judgment that is a fair synopsis of what the bill provides.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will not represent myself on the floor of the Senate as an expert on wool. If there be any experts on wool on the floor of the Senate, I should like to know them, and I should like to have them analyze the bill, and tell the Senate, the woolen industry, the sheep-growing industry, the consumers of the United States, and the taxpayers of the United State, what the bill means.

Mr. President, as I understand the matter, the statements made in the letter just read are 100 percent correct. Under the terms of the bill it makes no difference from what part of the sheep the wool comes; it is all on a par.

I have here a chart on the wall showing comparative values. Then there is a chart on the wall to my right likewise showing comparative values.

The chart to the left is a list of virgin wools, and the chart on the right gives a list of wool wastes.

First, there is the top sort. That is a type of wool. I suppose Senators somewhere, if not on the floor, know what "top sort" means. That comes from the back of the sheep. It is the best wool that grows on a sheep's back, or on the sides, or anywhere else where the sheep grows wool. That is the best part of the fleece. It is "tops." Tops sell at the present time for about 90 cents a pound.

The second is stained wool. That is scoured wool. As the wool comes from the sheep's back, it is full of grease, it is full of oil from the back of the sheep. The wool fiber is hollow. The tube or fiber of wool being hollow, is full of a substance, and that substance is called grease. When the wool comes from the sheep's back it is discolored, it is stained, it is dirty, and it takes over 2 pounds of the raw wool to make 1 pound of scoured wool. When it is washed and cleaned thoroughly, 2 pounds of raw wool dwindle into 1 pound of scoured wool.

So the stained wool is the wool that grows on a part of the sheep that becomes stained, and it does not bring as high a price as tops.

The next is gray wool. It is really gray, and that is why it is so called.

"Paint" wool is another definition of wool. When a sheep grower shears his sheep he rolls the fleece into a bundle, but occasionally, like the cotton growers, he puts a little paint on the bundle to identify the bundle as coming from ranch No. 1 or ranch No. 2. This grade is the wool which contains the paint. The paint comes off readily, but when it first reaches the factory it is a cheaper grade of wool.

Then there are the breech wool, the seedy wool, and the dead wool. They are all virgin types of wool. The top one is selling for 90 cents a pound, and as we go down the list it becomes cheaper, until we come to burry wool and vat wool. Then there follow tanners' wool, shank wool, and tags.

Mr. President, this bill, if enacted, would convey by legislative fiat the inference, if not the statement, that tags, the cheapest form of wool, are elevated to a parity with tops. That is what it means, for tags are virgin wool. The Senator from Wyoming or the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Arizona, doing me the honor to listen to me now, could have a suit of clothes made of tags, selling for from 2 to 5 cents a pound, and the suit would be virgin wool and could be so labeled not only by the processor, not only by the weaver, not only by the spinner, not only by the coatmaker, but it would be virgin wool under the terms of the bill, although the wool would be so cheap and so inferior and so worthless as to command on the markets of the country a price of only from 2 to 5 cents a pound. I am opposed to trying to pass a measure equalizing by legislation the different grades of wool. It cannot be done. The bill cannot make tops out of tags.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator referred to the Senator from Wyoming and stated I could buy a suit of clothes made out of breeches and tags. As a matter of fact, I suppose the Senator understands, or he should understand, that the small, weak wools about which he is speaking now cannot be carded and made into a suit of clothes unless one wants to buy a garment which, when it is picked up, he can run his finger through. There are purposes for which that class of wool can be used.

Again I wish to refer to the American Wool Handbook and give the definitions of a couple of these "offsorts" the Senator has been discussing. I first refer to breech wool. The Senator put in a good deal of time a few days ago in dilating upon the breech wool found on the back end of a sheep. This is the definition:

Breech: Wool from the extremity of the hindquarters, usually the coarsest in the fleece and often dung-matted and urine-stained. It is one of the less desirable offsorts, and is often used for the same purpose as carpet wool.

That is what it is used for. The other definition to which the Senator referred is of belly wool. The Senator put in a good deal of time a few days ago in prospecting around on the bellies of the ewes to find out what kind of wool there was there. This is what the handbook says:

Bellies (or belly wool): From the belly of the sheep; shorter, heavier, more wasty and tender. Often less uniform, more likely to be urine- and dung-stained.

Of course, as a matter of fact, these particular "offs," these particular low grades, which constitute probably 3 or 4 percent of the fleece, are short, coarse, thick, and weak. The quality of a wool is, of course, not determined entirely by its length; it is determined by the fineness and the diameter of the particular wool. The high-grade wools—tops, as the Senator was discussing them—have a diameter of possibly 19 to 20 microns, and when we come to the wools about which he is now talking they have a thickness up to a diameter of 46 microns and greater. So they are not used in the making of ordinary garments or ordinary clothing, but are used for fillings in heavy overcoats. When a man buys a cheap overcoat that is quite heavy, and thinks he is getting a lot of warmth he is getting weight instead of warmth. Further, they are used to make felt, and felt is used for many purposes, but it is mixed with cow's hair, and goes into many articles.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in the last few moments the Senator has confessed that the bill is not a truth-in-fabric bill but is just the reverse. The Senator from New Mexico said the housewife should be able to go to the store and be able to tell from the label what she is buying. The Senator from Wyoming, the author of the bill, has just admitted that the housewife can go to a store in Washington and demand a 100-percent virgin-wool garment, and that garment can be made out of breech wool, can be made out of tag wool, can be made out of shank wool, can be made out of tanner's wool, or any other kind of wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I said it might be so fabricated that it would hold together, but no housewife or anyone else would buy it, because if she started to hold it up to look at it, it would tear apart.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have many telegrams supplementing what the Senator from Oklahoma has said. He referred to the detrimental effect the proposed legislation would have upon the cotton growers, also the effect it would have upon even the wool growers themselves, and even the effect it would have upon the consumers.

I find among the telegrams this phrase:

This legislation not in public interest as would tend to fraud by unscrupulous manufacturers and deception of consumer.

This is from the American Felt Association, and it seems to bear out just what the Senator has said.

Let me in this connection call the attention of the Senator to a letter which I have received from a felt manufacturer, in which he says:

The felt manufacturer depends on the shorter wools, as for instance the short fall Texas and the noils, for felting; he also depends on the fine garnetted woolen and worsted threads for cushioning effects. Under the proposed labeling bill one of our finest products, used for corn plasters for instance, because of being made of fine garnetted stocks and noils, even though it sells for well over $2 per pound, would have to be labeled "Made of wool substitutes," which just doesn't make sense.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. What did the Senator say the article was?

Mr. WALSH. The letter is from a felt manufacturer. He said articles they make which sell for $2 a pound would have to be labeled "Made of wool substitutes." I think this confirms what the Senator from Oklahoma has said about the deception which the bill is likely to bring about.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Possibly the value is reflected in the felt that goes into the hat which is rabbit fur, and the rabbit fur imported from France sells for $5.65 a pound. Perhaps that is the reason why this particular felt has such a high value.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know about that. But the communication is for the purpose of calling attention to a very expensive article which would have to be labeled for the public as being made of wool substitutes. That is the point I assume he is trying to make.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Of course, there is nothing to prevent the manufacturer stating what is in the garment, what is in the particular product, in addition to the small amount of wool. He can state that expensive rabbit fur is in it, or what the particular stuff is that gives the value.

Mr. WALSH. I shall ask the Senator from Oklahoma, who has so ably and so effectively called attention to the shortcomings and dangers of the proposed legislation, to explain later about the labeling provisions of the bill and give the details as to how the bill would operate.

In the meantime, I call attention to another expression on which I should like to have his opinion:

Proper enforcement is impossible, and we are greatly disturbed that operation under this bill will favor importations greatly.

I should like to have the Senator's view upon that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will give it now, Mr. President. The Navy Department and the War Department have had more to do with the making of cloth than anyone else, save the manufacturers themselves. The Navy Department and the War Department have very explicit specifications. The Navy and War Departments understand that they cannot tell when the cloth is delivered whether or not it is made of virgin wool, or reworked wool, or reprocessed wool. So, in order that they may be sure, they send inspectors to the factory, who receive the wool from the growers, the producers, and who keep track of the wool from the time it reaches the factory until it comes out in the form of the finished product. It takes 22 inspectors to follow wool from the back of the sheep to the finished uniform. I cannot give all the steps, but I will state a few of them. When the wool comes in it is a roll or mass of fibers from the sheep's back. There is an inspector who examines it as it arrives. The inspector sees to it that the best part of the fleece is taken out of the mass.

That is the tops. That is laid over on one pile. Then the inferior parts of that fluff are torn from this mass and laid aside in another pile. That is called the sorting. An inspector must be present to see to it that the wool is properly sorted when it first reaches the factory from the producer. The wool as yet is in its dirty shape, in its greasy form. After there has been obtained a sufficient quantity of the better part of the wool from the back of the sheep. so that it can be scoured, it goes to the scouring department. The inspector follows that wool from the sorting room to the scouring room, and he sees to it that no mixtures are placed in the wool; that the sorted wool is properly scoured; that the grease is all removed so that when the wool reaches the sorting room the inspector who is there can see that it is properly scoured.

The Senator from Massachusetts asked me a question and I am trying to answer it, but, not being an expert, I may omit something, so I will not depend upon my memory but shall call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the Technical Manual of the War Department relating to inspection of textiles. I want to read at this point the number of inspectors that are necessary to follow the wool from its receipt at the factory until it comes out as a finished product.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, no such inspection is possible for imported woolen cloth and goods.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so.

Mr. WALSH. And, therefore, it would be quite possible for importers, unless a larger army of inspectors were available, to deceive the public and avoid this proposed law and to bootleg so-called woolen goods into the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is 100-percent correct.

I do not want to be put in the attitude of criticising the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. He is undertaking to solve an unsolvable problem. He has worked hard on this matter for years, and I congratulate him for the success he has had. He has brought the matter to the attention of at least the United States Senate and the House of Representatives. I compliment him for his success, but I am sorry that after all these months and years he has come to such a point with this bill that if it should be passed, it would bring harm to America rather than good. If the bill should be passed, it would discriminate against every mill in America, and favor every mill outside America.

Mr. WALSH. I will say that I have found that to be the universal opinion among the mill owners in my section of the country. I am glad the Senator from Oklahoma does not happen to live in an industrial section, because he then would be accused of seeing only the viewpoint of the manufacturer. The Senator's service is of extraordinarily high character and useful to the country becaue he comes from the section of the country he does, and because he has a disinterested viewpoint, at least as compared with the viewpoint of the manufacturer.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall yield to a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Very well, I will ask the Senator a question then. The Senator stated that he sympathized with me because of the work I had done upon this bill, and said in effect that it would not protect the consumer and would not accomplish the results sought to be accomplished. Does not the Senator realize that possibly he is mistaken, and that it would accomplish the result sought to be accomplished, and if that be true, while I, of course, appreciate the Senator's sympathy, I certainly do not need it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has put his finger on one of the weak points of the bill. It is admitted by everyone who knows anything about the wool industry that there is no test known to man or known to science by which it can be detected whether or not wool is virgin wool, or reprocessed wool, or used wool, and I shall come to that later on.

Mr. WALSH. That is the universal opinion I received from manufacturers.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator in connection with every angle of the bill as he discusses it says, "It must be admitted by everybody that they do not know this, or that that or the other is true." We who are sitting here want to keep silent, but we do not want our silence to be an admission with respect to anything the Senator says as being admitted by everybody.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now yield, Mr. President, so that the distinguished Senator from Wyoming may place in the RECORD the test that will determine whether or not the wool in this coat, if it be wool, is virgin wool, or reprocessed wool, or shoddy.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I will endeavor to answer possibly in more detail later on, but I will try to answer the question that seems to be bothering the Senator from Oklahoma. I shall have to refer to something he said the other day also.

In the first place, he quoted the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] as having said that there was no method by which the presence of reworked wool, with virgin wool, could be ascertained. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas said that in 1937, and that was true at that time. Nobody disputed it.

The Senator also said that some time in 1938, I think it was, I had said in reply to a letter from Mr. Besse that we did not rely upon any scientific test and examination or microphotography to make a scientific test, but that we relied principally upon the records kept by the manufacturer. That was true at that time. That is largely true today so far as the value and the practical applicability of this measure is concerned, because every manufacturer, when he makes a garment, knows to a pound out of a thousand just how much new wool he has put into it; just how much reworked wool he has put into it; he knows exactly what amount of each kind of wool is put into it; so that his own records will always show exactly what goes into any lot of garments. We are still assuming that the great bulk of the manufacturers are honest, and those who are not honest will have to keep the records anyway, and the records are always available and must be kept for 3 years, under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator speak of the test that may be made to determine the contents of imported woolen cloth?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes. On February 21, 1939, I received a letter from J. R. Mohler, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, which appears on page 37 of the Senate committee hearings on the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939. Mr. Mohler wrote an even better letter later on. In the letter of February 21, 1939, he said:

1. The presence of reclaimed wool fiber of any grade in a wool product can be determined scientifically.

2. The relative contents of virgin wool and reclaimed wool fibers in a fabric containing only these two kinds of fibers can, according to recent investigations, be determined within 10 percent of the actual content of these fibers.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the fact that prior to the time activity began in connection with wool-labeling legislation there had been no effort made by the Bureau of Standards and no effort made by general manufacturers to make scientific tests; so the development of scientific tests on these dates was not advanced as far as it is now advanced. On March 18, 1939, Mr. Mohler, of the Department of Agriculture, wrote a letter, which appears on page 407 of the House hearings, addressed to Mr. F. R. Randolph, assistant committee clerk, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which he said:

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 11, with reference to H. R. 944, and stating that the subcommittee would appreciate at its hearings the appearance of a representative from this Bureau to give testimony concerning fiber analysis. The Bureau will be glad to send a representative to such hearings as you may designate.

The questions you asked are listed and answered below:

1. Can your Department determine the presence of reworked wool (or shoddy) in fabrics and garments? Yes.

2. Can you detect the percentage of reworked wool in a fabric composed of virgin wool and reclaimed wool, and can you detect the percentage of virgin wool in such fabrics? The percentage of virgin wool and reworked wool in a fabric may be determined. Based upon the Bureau's research with microscopical methods upon fabrics of known fiber content in which only new and reworked wool are present, the content of reworked wool or virgin wool may be detected within 10 percent.

And Dr. Hardy said:

I might mention first one thing which made it difficult for us to get close results—earlier work done in the examination of the fibers, the examinations were made for damage on all fibers as they would appear in the field under the microscope, regardless of location along the fiber; but we discovered a few months ago that if we confined our efforts to the ends of the fibers that greater accuracy might be achieved.

The present method which we are following is to mount the fibers in glycerin. First, we separate the fibers of the yarn on the slide and arrange the ends parallel to each other so that you can just see the ends, and then they are projected with a microprojector and magnified from 200 to 500 diameters magnification, and an examination is made of the ends of the fibers for damage. It is examined there [indicating]. We have here illustrations of 10 different types of damage which may be found in reworked wool fibers. They are taken from actual cases showing the ends of the fibers as we saw them. I will just pass this exhibit around.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Thus we have the answer, Mr. President, to my question. The answer is that someone, some place, states that he can take old, worn, slick shoddy, and tell that it has been worn some time. That is true. There is only one way to detect whether or not wool has been worn, and I will state what it is. A wool fiber is a little hollow tube. It might look like a pipestem if it were enlarged, especially as many times as referred to in the letter the Senator from Wyoming read. This little pipestem is covered with scales. If the scales are not removed or disturbed the wool has not been used, and if the wool has simply been washed and spun and woven into cloth and never worn, the scales have not been disturbed. Then if that cloth is torn apart and reduced back to the fluffiness it had when it came from the sheep's back, the scales are not disturbed, and there is no process known to science that can detect whether or not that wool has ever been in the form of yarn, or even in the form of cloth.

It is true that the Senator might have a very fine suit of clothes, which he might wear for a long time. Certain parts of that suit would become shiny. I have seen shiny clothes; I have seen shiny wool. Why does a good suit of woolen cloth become shiny? The answer is simple. It is worn, it is rubbed against some substance. The scales on the little fibers are worn off. When the scales are worn off, that leaves exposed a little stem; if the suit continues to be used, the stem rubbing against something wears off the place where the scale was attached to the fiber, and if the suit is still further worn, even after this, it leaves there the slick, shiny fiber of the wool. It is often said that one can see himself in the back of a man's coat. That is the reason. The scales are gone. Even the places where the scales are attached to the fiber are erased. Friction erases them, and there is nothing left but the polished fiber or wool. When that stage of wear is reached the scales are gone, and the suit is shiny. If such a suit should be sent in as rags, and anyone with a microscope should be given the task of examining the wool fibers, he could easily tell that the scales were gone and that the wool had been used. It would be rubbed so much that even the places where the scales were attached to the fibers would be gone. So it would not take very much of a scientist to tell that the wool had been used. That is the only way in which science can detect whether or not the woolen fiber has been used.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2103. An act to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended;

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 55) recommending that any parties or organizations advocating overthrow of the United States Government be prohibited from entering candidates in any State or national election, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CORPORATION-INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For what purpose, may I ask?

Mr. HARRISON. The purpose is to present the conference report on the excess profits tax bill, which I think will not require any great length of time.

I very much dislike to interfere with the pending conference report but, as everyone realizes, the conference report on the excess profits tax bill is a very important matter. It was agreed to in the House earlier today and is now on the Vice President's desk. I should very much like to have it disposed of.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, has the Senator any idea how long a time will be required to dispose of it?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there is any disposition to speak at length on the conference report. I wish to make a very brief explanation, which I think will require not more than 10 minutes. I think the Senate is entitled to such an explanation. I do not believe there will be any prolonged discussion of the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Can the Senator from Oklahoma give us any idea how long he desires to talk on the pending conference report?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Until Senators have some opportunity to understand the bill, which they do not now have, and which I fear they never will have.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That means that the Senator intends to talk forever.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I would if I could.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I desire to be present during the discussion. I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

I recall that when the other conference report was before us for consideration, the very able Senator from Oklahoma pointed out that the adoption of that conference report would have a very bad effect on the marketing of cotton. I wish to know if that objection has been removed by the new conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The new report is no different from the motion made in the first instance. The motion was to accept the House bill. The conference report accepts the House bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, referring to the request of the Senator from Mississippi, it is perfectly agreeable to me to proceed to consider the conference report on the tax bill, with the understanding that when that report shall have been disposed of we shall resume consideration of the pending conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. That is my understanding.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

[For conference report see p. 12945 of the proceedings of the House of Representatives.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it the intention of the Senator to call for a quorum?

Mr. HARRISON. It was not my intention; but if the Senator feels that a quorum should be present on so important a bill, it is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall not suggest the absence of a quorum at this moment. However, it is understood that I shall suggest the absence of a quorum if the tax bill conference report becomes the order of business.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the excess profits tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Andrews	Ellender	King	Shipstead
Ashurst	Frazier	McKellar	Smathers
Austin	George	McNary	Stewart
Bailey	Gerry	Maloney	Taft
Barkley	Gillette	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bilbo	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Green	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Guffey	Norris	Tobey
Burke	Gurney	Nye	Townsend
Byrd	Hale	O'Mahoney	Truman
Byrnes	Harrison	Overton	Tydings
Capper	Hatch	Pepper	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Van Nuys
Chavez	Herring	Radcliffe	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Reed	Wheeler
Connally	Holt	Russell	White
Danaher	Hughes	Schwartz	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to explain briefly the conference report on the tax bill.

First, I will discuss the important changes.

Under the Senate bill there were three important changes over the House bill.

First, the Senate bill increased the ordinary corporation tax on all corporations by 3.1 percent.

Second, the Senate bill removed the penalty of 4.1 percent on corporations electing the average-earnings method as well as the 5-percent differential in brackets of the rate schedule with respect to those corporations electing the average-earnings method. In the conference report, of course, both methods are left in the bill, and the taxpayer may elect as to which one he chooses in the computation of his excess-profits taxes.

Third, the Senate bill increased the specific exemption allowed corporations, for the purpose of the excess-profits tax, from $5,000 to $10,000.

Under the conference we were able to reach the following agreement:

The 3.1 percent increase in the normal rate was retained with respect to corporations with net incomes in excess of $25,000. Those with income less than $25,000 were removed from the increased normal corporate taxes.

The 4.1-percent penalty and the 5-percent differential in rate schedules between those electing the average-earnings method and those electing the invested-capital method were eliminated. In lieu of these, it was agreed to permit corporations electing the average-earnings method to use only 95 percent of their base-period earnings as a credit in computing their excess-profits tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand the Senator, then, there is still a penalty against the average-earnings option. Is that correct?

Mr. HARRISON. In computing and arriving at the average-earnings method there is a difference of 2½ percent with respect to the largest corporations, but in the average case it would not exceed 1¾ percent. The method, too, is a very simple one.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the 95-percent base result in increasing the revenue from the excess-profits tax?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. It was very difficult to get a true estimate of it, but the bill, as finally agreed upon, will bring slightly more revenue than either the bill as it passed the House or the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I should think that fixing the base at 95 percent in determining the excess-profits tax upon incomes for the 4 years prior to this year would result in some increase.

Mr. HARRISON. It would result in some increase, estimated to be about $40,000,000, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. From that one change which has been made in the House and the Senate bills?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. That provision will result in a material increase in the revenue.

Mr. WALSH. I think that is desirable and beneficial.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that under the estimates of the Treasury experts—their very conservative estimates—there will be realized a gross revenue yield of between four hundred and five and five hundred and twenty-five million dollars in 1940 from the bill as agreed to in conference. I may state, however, that the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, in whom I have great confidence, estimates $532,000,000 in revenue for the year 1940 and for the year 1941 a yield of $905,000,000. The Treasury Department, as Senators will see from a table which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, makes a breakdown of its estimates in connection with this bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Second revenue act of 1940 [1]—estimated yield at estimated calendar year 1940 income levels and under arbitrary assumptions as to increase in net income over the lower estimates for calendar year 1940

[Millions of dollars]

	1940 levels [2]	Assuming arbitrary income increase
		10 percent	15 percent	20 percent	25 percent	30 percent

Mr. WALSH. That is for all income?

Mr. HARRISON. We will get over $900,000,000 in revenue from this bill in 1941, according to the estimates of the joint committee staff.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I to understand the Senator to say that out of the excess profits tax section of the bill we are to get five hundred or six hundred million dollars this year?

Mr. HARRISON. No; under the excess profits tax section of the bill it was estimated by the Treasury that for 1940 between $185,000,000 and $295,000,000 would be derived, and on the increase in the normal tax of 3.1 percent on all corporations having incomes over $25,000 there would be derived between $220,000,000 and $230,000,000, making a total of between $405,000,000 and $525,000,000. That is the estimate the Treasury has given us for 1940.

Of course, the Senator realizes that it has been made plain to the committee that work under the national-defense program will not fully get under way until 1941. In 1941 the revenue will increase quite perceptibly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should be glad to have the Senator explain the matter to me at a point at which I am finding it difficult to follow him. The excess-profits tax for the present year was estimated at $100,000,000 as the bill left the Senate. Now the exemption has been increased to $25,000, which would take off $20,000,000. That would leave a net of $80,000,000. What has happened to increase the excess profits tax revenue for this year from $80,000,000 to $250,000,000?

Mr. HARRISON. It would take me until doomsday to explain to the Senator the different formulas which were placed on the blackboard and the different arguments upon the part of the experts and to show him how the 2½-percent differential would make the return from the excess-profits taxes somewhat higher than it was in the bill as it left the Senate. I am unable to explain how the experts arrive at their estimates, but there must have been other factors besides this 2½-percent differential.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not going to press the Senator, because I will concede in advance that it will take him and me until doomsday to understand anything that is in this particular bill.

Mr. HARRISON. It is much simpler than when it came from the House, and I am inclined to think that it is somewhat simpler than as passed by the Senate. So, roughly, it is estimated that from this bill we will get a billion dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Next year?

Mr. HARRISON. For 1941, and between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 in 1940.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of which the Senator now attributes $250,000,000 to the excess-profits tax?

Mr. HARRISON. The Treasury estimates between one hundred and eighty-five and two hundred and ninety-five million dollars in 1940 from the excess-profits tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the Senator says I will have to wait until doomsday to find out how that estimate was reached.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I said if I had to explain it, it would be doomsday before I could convince the Senator or explain it definitely. I hope the Senator will realize that that is a very frank statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I appreciate the Senator's candor; I underwrite it and endorse it, because I think doomsday is an excellent word to describe what he has presented.

Mr. HARRISON. As I have said, the 3.1-percent increase in the normal rate was retained with respect to corporations with incomes in excess of $25,000.

The 4.1-percent penalty and the 5-percent differential in rate schedules between those electing the average-earnings method and those electing the invested-capital method were eliminated; and in lieu of that there was imposed what amounts to about 2½-percent differential between the two methods. The differential under such a plan could never exceed 2½ percent with respect to the largest corporations, and in the average case it would not exceed 1¾ percent.

The method is a very simple one.

The conference report restores the $5,000 specific exemption allowed under the House bill. However, the small corporation was protected by not applying the increase of 3.1 percent to them.

The Senate provision allowing an exemption of 8 percent of the invested capital of the taxable year was accepted by the conference. That provision remains as recommended by the Senate. This was also true with respect to the Senate provision making an allowance of 50 percent for borrowed capital. That was recommended by the Senate.

A single rate schedule was adopted which applied to all corporations, whether they elected the average-earnings method or the invested-capital method. This was the rate schedule adopted by the Senate Finance Committee. Because of loss in revenue, the rate schedule which was added to the Senate bill on the floor was not accepted.

In regard to the amortization provisions, the Senate changes were accepted by the conference, with the exception of the date after which the construction, reconstruction, erection, or installation of any facility must have been completed or its acquisition have taken place in order that the cost thereof may be subject to amortization. Under the Senate bill, amortization was allowed when the facility was constructed or acquired after January 1, 1940. The House bill had as its date July 10, 1940. The conferees agreed to the date of June 10, 1940, which was the date of the Ways and Means Committee report on the first Revenue Act of 1940. The Ways and Means Committee's report stated that the subject should be studied with a view toward enacting legislation which might apply to incomes earned in 1940. We felt that when that report was made it was notice to the taxpayers of the country that some allowance would be made for amortization.

In this report, the conference agreed to relieve what we termed hard cases, such as the following:

First. Under the Senate bill, for instance, losses from the sale of depreciable assets were allowed to be deducted in computing the income for the taxable year. This was agreed to.

Second. The Senate bill did not require refunds and interest on Agricultural Adjustment Act taxes to be included in income for the purposes of the excess-profits tax. That was agreed to in conference.

Third. The Senate bill allowed corporations electing the average-earnings method to deduct in full dividends received from other corporations, whether domestic or foreign. A similar deduction was allowed under the House bill to corporations electing the average-earnings method. Under the conference agreement, the Senate provision was retained as to domestic dividends. In the case of foreign dividends, relief was granted under the abnormality or general relief section.

Fourth. With respect to awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, the Senate bill provided that such awards should not be subject to the excess-profits tax. It was pointed out that these awards were already covered by the general relief provision of the bill with respect to abnormalities in income, and that under that provision they would not be subject to the excess-profits tax. With this in mind, and an agreement to put in the conference report a specific statement to that effect, the specific provision of the Senate bill dealing with the subject was eliminated.

Fifth. The Senate bill exempted from the excess profits tax income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if such debt was deductible from gross income for any taxable year prior to January 1, 1940. This was agreed to.

Sixth. The Senate bill prevented income in the base period from being reduced by deductions on account of retirement or discharge of bonds. This was agreed to.

Seventh. The Senate bill prevented income in the base period from being reduced by losses arising from demolition, abandonment, or loss of useful value of property not compensated for by insurance. This was agreed to.

Eighth. The Senate bill prevented income in the base period from being reduced by deductions attributable to claims, awards, or judgments against the taxpayer, or interest thereon, if, in the light of the taxpayer's business, it was abnormal for the taxpayer to incur a liability of such character, or if the amount of such liability in the tax period was grossly disproportionate to the amount of such liability in the 4 previous years. This was agreed to.

Substantially all the special relief provisions which were incorporated in the Senate bill were adopted by the conference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, were there any Senate relief provisions which were not incorporated in the conference report?

Mr. HARRISON. I know of only one special relief provision which was not so incorporated. That was the one which was offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], to give relief relative to an unrecovered debt in connection with a loan made by a parent corporation to its subsidiary; and the House conferees would not accept that amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that that provision went out on the insistence of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. Which raises a question, after all, whether the Congress or somebody else writes these bills.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that the question is frequently raised whether Congress itself writes any bills, or whether they come from the executive department.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I was interested, as the Senator recalls, in the consideration of the record with respect to development of a process, patents, and so forth, of the predecessor corporation, or copartnership, or other form of business organization, of a taxpayer in figuring the excess-profits tax. I understand that while the provision I introduced in the Senate was stricken out of section 721, section 722 was added, which reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this subchapter, the Commissioner shall also have authority to make such adjustments as may be necessary to adjust abnormalities affecting income or capital—

With the right of appeal to the United States Board of Tax Appeals. Under that section, does the Senator think the relief could be given to corporations which had been formed out of prior corporations or partnerships substantially similar in ownership, as is given to a taxpayer who had no change in its corporate organization?

Mr. HARRISON. If, as the result of such a situation, there developed an abnormality of income, it is entirely possible that section 722 would afford relief.

Mr. BROWN. May I ask if section 722 is taken from the Excess-Profits Tax Act of 1918? Is it substantially the same provision that is in that act?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is substantially the provision of the Senate bill. I may say, in that respect, that in my opinion the general-relief provision is one of the most important features in this bill. Indeed, I would have liked to have seen it perfected; but the Senator will recall that when the relief provision was recommended by the Senate Finance Committee, some doubt was expressed by the drafting experts and the Treasury Department representatives as to whether or not they could draft it in perfect form, and so forth. We gave them the time to do it in the way that they insisted it be done, and brought in a draft dealing only with abnormalities in income for the taxable year. This was subject to some criticism, and on the floor the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] offered another provision giving the Commissioner general authority to make adjustments where abnormalities existed in income or capital and giving the Board of Tax Appeals the right to review the decision of the Commissioner.

One of the hardest fights made in the conference was the attempt of the Senate conferees to get this Senate amendment or the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] adopted. The Senate amendment, with slight modifications, was finally adopted and the Treasury and the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation were instructed by the conference to study the entire problem covered by this section, and report to the appropriate committees on the subject as soon as possible.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the idea is that the report will be made soon enough so that the Congress may legislate upon that subject, with effect upon the tax returns for the calendar year 1940?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BROWN. And the Senator feels that section 722, on page 14 of the bill, which is a very general relief section, may be used for the purpose of assisting corporations which have been formed out of other corporations, partnerships, or individuals with substantially the same ownership?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct. Of course, the Senator is aware of the fact that the whole Finance Committee was insistent that something like the 1918 law, with some discretion vested in the Commissioner or the Board of Tax Appeals, should be written into the law.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will recall that the Finance Committee unanimously approved the general proposition that the development period and earnings, or lack of earnings, of predecessor corporations, predecessor partnerships, and predecessor individuals should be considered in the calculation of the excess-profits tax base.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct. I merely wish to say that we did our best to hold that provision, so that there would be no question about the matter.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I am interested, as are all those from the mining sections, in the provision in reference to abnormal incomes, incomes which appear as a result of a process of development and research carried on over a period of years which result in a substantial profit in 1 year because of the activities of the preceding year or years. That matter was before the Finance Committee, of course, and before the conference committee.

As the bill came from the Senate committee it contained relief provisions, and gave authority to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary, to make adjustments. On the floor an effort was made by an amendment to not only give the authority to make such adjustments, but to make it compulsory, and to establish a mathematical method by which they should be applied. In other words, it provided that if a process of development, say in a mine, had been carried on for 5 years, and there had been loss for 4 years, and if, at the end of the fifth year, if a fortunate mineral discovery were made, the profit should be distributed back over the period of 5 years. That has been taken out. The conference committee recommends the elimination of this mathematical formula for the distribution. As the bill comes from the conference committee power is given the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to make adjustments, but, as I read it, there is absolutely no compulsion upon the Commissioner to make any such adjustments. We are left absolutely at the mercy of the judgment and decision of the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. That has relation to the amendment the Senator offered, the 5-year amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. We believe that the bill as now written absolutely requires the Commissioner to make the allocation of the income to the proper year.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator be good enough to satisfy my mind a little, to ease it, by telling me where the provision is?

Mr. HARRISON. Under section 21 of the bill as agreed to in conference, the amount attributable to any previous taxable year or years is to be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of income from exploration, and so forth, the Commissioner is required under the language of this section to allocate so much of such income as is not attributed to the taxable year to each of the preceding years.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is reading the statement as to the Senate amendment, but not a statement as to the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. I am referring to the section of the law itself and the interpretation placed upon it by both the Treasury and our own experts.

It was the viewpoint of every expert in our conference—those representing our joint committee and those representing the Treasury—that we had taken care of the very situation the Senator pointed out in his amendment; that explorations might not run back just 5 years, but might run back 20 years, and that the Commissioner would be required to make the adjustments.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is quite correct that the authority exists in the Treasury Department to make the adjustments, but in the conference report there is no compulsion upon the Treasury Department to make the adjustments. It is all within their discretion.

The amount to be attributed to previous years is to be determined by the Commissioner or the Treasury Department. Then the subsections which follow deal with the amount to be attributed to previous years; but the amount to be attributed comes from the exercise of the discretion of the Treasury Department. In other words, there is not a particle of compulsion upon the Treasury Department to meet the problem. Of course, I am hopeful that the Treasury Department will recognize the implications of the language rather than the unrestricted discretion.

Mr. HARRISON. If anyone was misled and there could be the interpretation the Senator fears, we were the ones who were misled, because, as I have stated, we were told by every representative of the Treasury Department, and it was as well the belief of our own staff, that the situation was taken care of.

I give the Senator this assurance, that, so far as I am concerned, if, when the question arises, it should be held that what I have stated is not the correct interpretation and construction of the law, we will certainly make every effort to amend the law in order to take care of the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. I am very hopeful that the Senator's views in the matter will be carried out. Of course, the Treasury Department naturally, as is true of every other great department, likes to have the power vested in it to make decisions. I am not saying they would not do as the Senator expects, but I am saying that they are not compelled to, under the proposed law, and out of the bill has gone the provision which would have compelled them.

Mr. HARRISON. Because we were all very sympathetic with what the Senator had in his mind, when he restricted the matter to 5 years, we thought we were giving him more than his own amendment was giving him by eliminating the 5-year limitation. There may be a difference between the construction on the part of the conferees and the Senator's construction, but I give him every assurance that if there should be any doubt about the construction the Treasury puts on this provision, when the question arises, we will join hands with the Senator in remedying the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. I am very happy to have the Senator's assurance. I hope he will not have any occasion to act upon it.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope so, too.

Mr. President, agreement was reached on the subject of bad debts, and it is incorporated in the report.

In the Senate bill we allowed a 2-year carry-over of the unused exemption with respect to the canning and mining industries. We finally compromised, after a long discussion, by providing a 1-year carry-over of the unused exemption to be applied to all corporations whose income did not exceed $25,000 for the taxable year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have been unable to discover that section. Will not the Senator give me a reference to it?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will find that section on page 3 of the conference report.

As to the Senate amendment which the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] offered, and which was adopted by the Senate, dealing with strategic metals, we were able to work out a compromise confining the exemption to the mining of such metals by domestic corporations within the United States. That was the very best arrangement that could be made.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] offered another amendment which would have permitted a corporation to take 3 out of the 4 base years in computing its tax under the average earnings method, but because of changes in other parts of the bill, and because of the large loss in revenue which would result from such an amendment the conferees were unwilling to accept it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator explain again the matter of exemption of taxation of the profits derived from the mining of strategic metals? What is his understanding with regard to the change made in the provision.

Mr. HARRISON. I stated that there were some six or seven metals represented or dealt with in the Senator's amendment. We were not able to get the House conferees to agree to the exact language of the Senate amendment, but we were able to point out that the President in a message to the Congress, as I recall—I do not know that he included all of these metals—had asked us to enact legislation to preserve these strategic metals in the United States for our own defense.

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply wanted to see how it was worded.

Mr. HARRISON. It is section 731 of the committee report. It reads as follows:

> In the case of any domestic corporation engaged in the mining of tungsten, quicksilver, manganese, platinum, antimony, chromite, or tin, the portion of the adjusted excess-profits net income attributable to such mining in the United States shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subchapter. The tax on the remaining portion of such adjusted excess-profits net income shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the tax computed without regard to this section as such remaining portion bears to the entire adjusted excess-profits net income.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does that mean there is no excess-profits tax charged against the profits derived from that character of industry?

Mr. HARRISON. In effect, yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I could not tell from reading it what it means.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what it means.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The question of personal-service corporations was advanced in the debate. We were unable to get the House conferees to agree to the Senate amendments in toto. However, under the conference agreement, the definition of a personal service corporation was defined to mean a corporation where income was attributed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and are the owners at all times during the taxable year of at least 70 percent in value of each class of stock of the corporation and in which capital is not a material income-producing factor. Under the House bill, the persons actively engaged in the business had to own 80 percent of the stock.

In the case of determining whether the shareholders own the requisite shares of stock the Senate provision was adopted, which permitted that the individual shall be considered as owning stock owned not only by his spouse or minor child but by any guardian or trustee representing them.

So we did the best we could in trying to work out that very delicate question.

The Senate amendment permitting credit against the Federal unemployment tax was offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. The Senate amendment permits credit against the Federal unemployment tax for the calendar years 1936, 1937, 1938, or 1939 on employers of eight or more employees for contributions paid by the employer before the sixtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act into an unemployment fund under a State law. The conference limits the credit for 1939 to 90 percent of the amount which would have been allowable to conform to the limitation of existing law.

An important amendment was offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] relative to social-security legislation affecting persons to be called into the military or naval service. A more general provision was later offered as a substitute in order that all of these problems might be studied by the conferees. The conferees were able to report on two of the most urgent problems, one relating to insurance and the other to the railroad-retirement provisions.

Part I of amendment No. 35 permits persons in military service to take out national service life insurance up to $10,000. This insurance is similar to war-risk insurance with certain modifications based on experience gained over the past 20 years. This new insurance permits waiver of premiums upon total disability, but benefits are not payable for such disability as was the case under war-risk insurance. The new insurance will be 5-year term insurance with the right to convert to life, 20-year life, or 30-year life. Premium rates based on the average age—25 years—will be 67 cents per thousand per month. Rights of World War veterans under existing law with respect to war-risk insurance is not changed.

Because that fund had been built up by the older men who served in the World War, we did not feel we ought to impair or injure it. It would also cause a great deal of controversy and trouble, so we did not affect that fund at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to determine from the report where the responsibility is lodged for setting up the national service life insurance and for operating it. Where does that responsibility go?

Mr. HARRISON. To the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It goes to the Veterans' Bureau rather than to the Social Security Board?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; to the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it presumed to be built comparably with and on the basis of war-risk insurance?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. There is not much difference between the two. They are along the same line, but separate and distinct insurance policies are issued under these two services.

Part II of the amendment permits individuals who are covered under the Railroad Retirement Acts to use past military service in a war-service period for the purpose of determining eligibility for and the amount of annuities. If a man had 2 years military service during the World War and 28 years railroad service, he could use the 2 years to compute his annuity, based on 30 years' service.

So we took care of those phases of the problem, but we have to make a further study of the social security features that were embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now as I understand it, amendment No. 35, which is the outgrowth of my original suggestion, does not cover a protection of the conscript, the National Guardsman, taken into military service, with respect to any of his rights under the Social Security Act?

Mr. HARRISON. It takes care of none of the provisions with reference to the Social Security Act, because we found there were so many angles to it, that it was so complicated, and that without question it would be better and wiser not to go into that matter in a conference committee, and if we had done so we would have been unable to submit a conference report within any reasonable time. Moreover, public hearings would have been necessary before the problem could have been fairly dealt with.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am inclined to agree with the Senator that the thing is so complex that it would probably require further study, although it is probably no more complex than about 98 percent of the other subjects dealt with in the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. There are plenty of complexities in the measure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What does the Senator propose that we shall do with respect to these rights under the Social Security Act? Is he proposing that there shall be a specific study made?

Mr. HARRISON. I personally thought that was a very good way to do it—that is, to have those who will consider this question appointed by the Presiding Officer of this body, and the Presiding Officer of the House, and thus have a joint committee, but the conferees did not all agree with me. So they are going to proceed in the House, because legislation pertaining to social security must originate in the House, and it will go through the regular channels as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suppose our special committee on the exploration of the Social Security Act which the able Senator appointed in the Finance Committee could take jurisdiction of the subject on its own motion if it chose to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that would be very well, although I think the subcommittee which was named will have its hands full when it gets to work. However, I am sure there will be no trouble about that question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator agrees that it is something which ought to be covered?

Mr. HARRISON. I agree; and the whole conference was in agreement on that point.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Dr. Altmeyer and various other representatives of Federal agencies connected with social security, public welfare, and so forth, were before the committee. We had considerable discussion trying to work out some plan by which we might take care of the question suggested by my dear friend from Michigan, but many matters were in nebulous form, and we did not have the concrete evidence and facts before us. So we finally concluded that it would be unwise for us to cover the entire ground of social security and make adjustments in the tax bill. For that reason, as indicated by our chairman, the matter was pretermitted for the present, and it was understood that both the House and Senate, through appropriate committees if a joint committee were not appointed, would address themselves immediately to the consideration of those very complicated questions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that completes about all I desire to say with reference to the conference report. The report was signed by every member of the conference—seven Members of the House and five Members of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has not indicated what happened to the Connally amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I neglected to refer to the action taken on that amendment. Twice we have passed the Connally amendment in the Senate. Twice it has been to conference. The conferees in the first instance were pretty much the same as the conferees in this instance. On Sunday we took a last whack at trying to persuade the House conferees to accept the Connally amendment. We failed, so there was nothing for us to do but recede or not have a conference agreement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was I misinformed in hearing that at one point the Senate conferees were almost in a panic when they learned that the House conferees were about to agree with them on the Connally amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. No. In this political year the Senator is probably seeing hobgoblins. There is nothing in that rumor. From the very beginning I was favorable to the Connally amendment. I disliked to have to go through the whole business we went through. This was not by any means an easy conference. The Connally amendment was written by a subcommittee of the Finance Committee which studied the matter carefully. In the event war should come, the rates would have to be increased materially. It might be a good idea for some persons to be a little frightened at the taxes they would have to pay if war should come. We did what we could for the Connally amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from Mississippi advise us whether or not the House conferees ever understood what the Connally amendment was all about?

Mr. HARRISON. I am informed that they understood it, although I have a wee bit of doubt as to whether or not they understood it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was it because of jealousy on the part of the House toward the Senate, the House being supposed to initiate revenue legislation; or was it simply because the House did not want any war-profits taxes in time of war?

Mr. HARRISON. The House conferees were not very sympathetic with the war profits tax bill. I do not know whether or not they were influenced by jealousy, rivalry, or feeling against the Senate. I should not say that, because I am too glad to have got out of the confused state which existed for a long time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the conference report was signed by all the conferees. That does not mean that all of the conferees agreed to the provisions of the measure submitted by the conferees. Speaking frankly, there are many provisions of the bill embodied in the conference report with which I do not agree. I declined to sign the conference report at the conclusion of the conference, and also for some time thereafter, though, as I was advised, all other conferees had affixed their signatures to the same. I had numerous objections to the conference report, believing that the measure agreed upon contained provisions to which valid and substantial objections could be made. Upon further consideration, and weighing all of the questions—ethical and otherwise—involved, I concluded to join with my colleagues in signing the conference report.

Though I still have objections to many of the provisions of the pending measure, I am frank to confess that it is far superior to the bill which came from the House. The Senate bill made important changes in the House bill, and I regret that the conferees did not accept the Senate bill with a few suggested changes. As stated, I reached the conclusion that, notwithstanding my objections to the House bill and to many of the provisions of the bill agreed upon in conference, I would not be justified in attempting to defeat the will of the conferees. I realized that because differences of opinion existed conferees are appointed for the purpose of reconciling the differences between the two Houses in order that legislation may be enacted. Perhaps there is a question of ethics as to how far a conferee is under obligation to sacrifice his own views and to join in a conference report in order to secure legislation. When conferees are appointed, it is with the understanding that they will reach an agreement, if possible, to reconcile the differences between the two Houses in order to obtain legislation. Perhaps this imposes upon each conferee a duty, after striving valiantly to secure the adoption of the views of the body which appointed him, to yield if and when it becomes apparent that failing so to do no agreement would be possible and the bill under consideration might therefore fail.

Because the measure agreed upon in conference contained objectionable provisions, as indicated, I was not disposed to sign the conference report. Upon further consideration, and appreciating the fact that I represented the Senate and was expected to cooperate with the conferees of the House and the Senate to the end that a measure might be agreed upon, I finally signed the conference report.

I repeat when I state that I contended earnestly for the Senate bill. I believed it to be a better bill and a more just measure than the House bill or the one which had been reported to both Houses. As I have stated, the bill agreed upon, though imperfect I know, and as much as I should desire, is better and fairer than the House bill, and I therefore felt warranted in waiving my objections to the report in its present form.

I appreciate the fact that scarcely any measure—certainly no measure of great importance—which has been the subject of consideration by both branches of Congress is free from objections and will command the approval of conferees representing the House and the Senate. On important and indeed vital questions it is not expected that conferees of both branches of Congress will be in agreement upon all provisions; and it is obvious that conferees will have differences of opinion with respect to many provisions of important legislation.

The revenue measure before us was the subject of study by the Treasury Department and its experts. Undoubtedly there were differences of opinion among the representatives of the Treasury Department. The Committee on Ways and Means of the House contains many men of great ability. Some of them have been members of the committee for many years, and all of them have been students of plans for the raising of revenue to meet the expenses of the Federal Government. It is to be expected that in their studies their views upon tax measures and tax policies would not be entirely harmonious. After hearings were conducted by the Committee on Ways and Means, the members formulated a tax bill which received approval at the hands of the House of Representatives. Upon the bill being received by the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and that committee devoted itself for some time to a study of the House bill and to a consideration of the questions pertinent to the issues involved and to the consideration of the testimony submitted by a large number of persons from various walks of life. There was considerable criticism by witnesses and by various segments of the public of the House bill; and the Senate hearings, in my opinion, justified much of the criticism and warranted the Committee on Finance in insisting upon important modifications of the House bill and important changes in some of its provisions.

I know that the members of the Committee on Finance addressed themselves in a patriotic way to the discharge of the duty resting upon them. They were anxious to agree upon a sound and just tax measure and to that end were willing to modify in many respects the views which individually, if not collectively, they entertained.

There is no exact science of taxation, and differences of opinion are bound to arise when measures are being devised to raise revenue. Taxes mean that the heavy hand of the Government will be laid upon individuals and upon their property, and all tax measures will contain provisions that are not entirely just and which do not bear equally upon all individuals and classes.

With an industrial and economic system such as that prevailing in the United States, many complicated and difficult situations arise which have to be met in the formulation of revenue measures. We do not have a unitary form or system of government; the States and their political subdivisions have to meet heavy burdens and provide revenues for their growing and expanding needs. The Federal Government reaches out its powerful hands and makes heavy exactions upon States and their political subdivisions and their citizens.

Notwithstanding these heavy burdens deficits, Federal and State, are increasing, and it is certain that though taxes may and will be increased, deficits will likewise increase and reach mountainous, if not dangerous heights. There are some persons who seem quite indifferent to the exactions which are made under the guise of taxation. There are some who would look with concern upon tax levies which would destroy private capital and pave the way to State socialism.

Undoubtedly Federal expenditures will increase, and this will call for heavier taxes. Congress has passed two tax bills during this year and the one under consideration will add at least a billion dollars more to the burdens of the people. Only a few weeks ago Congress increased the taxes imposed upon the people, but it is evident that the billion dollars which will be provided by the pending measure will be wholly inadequate to meet the needs and pressing demands of the Federal Government for additional revenue.

I might add that I was not in favor of enacting a tax bill at this time. I knew that the next session of Congress, which will meet in January, will have the duty resting upon it to enact a tax measure which will call for not alone one billion, but many billions of dollars, because of the enormous expenditures which are being made by the Federal Government.

It seemed to me that the wise and proper course to pursue was to enact a law dealing with amortization alone.

The administration, including the National Defense Council, called attention to the fact that the defense program was being delayed because no provisions were being made for the amortization of facilities required in the execution of the national-defense program.

Many individuals and corporations were ready to enter into contracts for the production of military and naval supplies, but until reasonable provisions were made for amortization of facilities which were required, they hesitated to enter into contracts which might result in heavy liabilities.

As indicated, in view of the fact that within a few weeks—or, at least, a few months—Congress would be called upon to enact another tax bill—one which, as I have stated, will call for billions of dollars of revenue—it seemed unwise to attempt to enact a tax bill during the closing days of this session. It is obvious that when Congress frames a new tax bill within the next few months, it will be called upon to invade fields covered by the bill under consideration. Many of its provisions will be modified. Undoubtedly some will be repealed, and the work of this session, so far as that work is represented in the bill under consideration, will be largely nugatory. If we had passed an amortization bill several weeks ago, undoubtedly the work of national defense would have been further advanced, and, as I have stated, no little part of the framework of the bill before us will be undermined, if not wholly destroyed. So I have felt that we were engaged in a work of futility aside from the provision of the pending measure which deals with amortization.

In the consideration of a revenue measure when Congress meets in January, all revenue measures then in force will have to be considered; their provisions examined; and, as I have stated, subjected to material changes and, in many respects, to complete destruction.

A comprehensive and far-reaching tax bill, such as will be required when Congress again meets, of necessity will cover fields which have been invaded by revenue laws; and, as I have stated—and I am repeating—such laws will be changed and modified and many of them absolutely repealed. The tax measures now on the statute books, burdensome as many of them are, will prove wholly inadequate to meet the increasing demands of the Federal Government. With increasing expenditures and mounting deficits, obviously heavier burdens must be laid upon the people and every avenue explored for the purpose of finding and obtaining additional revenues. Only a few years ago the Federal expenditures were less than $1,000,000,000. We know that the appropriations for the next fiscal year will, perhaps, exceed $20,000,000,000, and the tax burdens placed upon the people may reach the stupendous sum of $12,000,000,000. Indeed, it is impossible to determine, in view of the confused condition of the world, what our Government will be compelled to expend in order to meet the heavy responsibility which will rest upon it. Notwithstanding billions of taxes will be collected and expended, there will be deficits aggregating many billions of dollars. It is a serious condition confronting the American people, and in order to meet that condition there must be a united purpose, a high degree of patriotism, and an unflinching determination that this Republic shall carry high the standard of liberty and justice.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a very few words about the conference report, because there are some very important principles in it to which I wish to direct a very brief observation.

I have been interested in looking at the newspaper comments throughout the country on the bill. So far as I have been able to find them since the conference report was made, they are generally summarized in one or two editorials from which I wish to quote briefly. Practically all the newspapers of the United States—at least all the respectable publications—recognize that there is a certain unsoundness in this tax bill. In order that the record may be kept perfectly straight, I wish to put into the RECORD a brief statement from the Baltimore Sun which covers the point.

Speaking of the conference report, the Baltimore Sun has this to say:

One of these objections touched the basic provisions for deciding when profit becomes excessive. There are two obvious methods for making such a decision. Profits which exceed earnings made in average and normal years may be called excessive. Or profits which exceed a certain percentage of return on invested capital may be called excessive. Equity required that taxpayers have a free choice between the two methods. The House bill allowed a choice but, under Treasury pressure in behalf of the invested-capital method, it penalized corporations using the other method.

They were to be taxed on excess profits not merely at higher rates, but a special tax of 4.1 percent was to be imposed on their normal incomes.

The conferees have now agreed to strike away the penalty tax on normal income where corporations chose the average earnings base. The discriminatory rates are also stricken away. But a free choice between the two methods is still not offered. For the conferees propose to credit corporations using average earnings as a base, not with 100 percent of those earnings against excess-profits taxation, but with only 95 percent. Five percent of earnings agreed to be perfectly normal, in brief, will be taxed as excess profits.

Again, the aspect of excess profits which ought to be taxed is clearly their excessiveness. But the bill which passed the House taxed excess profit in accordance with mere dollar volume. It is clear that a large corporation may make an excess profit large in dollar volume, but exceeding allowable normal earnings by only a slight margin. On the other hand, a company with a profit small in dollar volume may actually be exceeding its allowable normal earnings by a very wide margin. The Senate accepted, from the floor, an amendment which brought margin of excess into the picture as a measure of the tax. The conferees have dropped this provision. The bill as it stands, then, is a tax not on the excessiveness of profits, but on mere bigness of excess profits, a different thing.

That, Mr. President, is quoted from the Baltimore Sun of October 1. The New York Times has substantially the same comment to make upon the conference report. I quote from the New York Times of the current date, October 1, 1940:

The compromise removes the penalties of the House bill on corporations choosing the prearmament "average earnings" basis for taxation—which ought to be the primary basis of an excess-profits tax—at the same time as it retains the much fairer allowance of an 8 percent "normal" profit on invested capital as provided in the Senate bill. Yet the new bill also retains many quite unnecessary complications. One of these is the graduated scale of taxation based on the absolute amount of "excess" earnings. As applied to corporations this is a mere tax on bigness which penalizes mass production methods but bears only a capricious relationship to the individual incomes on which it must ultimately fall.

A needless complication is introduced in the bill when it taxes everything above 95 percent of pre-1940 income, instead of merely taxing the excess above the whole of such income. This is doubtless a compromise granted to the House as a return for its abandonment of other penalties on corporations choosing 1936–39 earnings. But its effect is to tax as "excess" earnings which might, in fact, be somewhat smaller than before the armament program.

Mr. President, I will not read further from the press of today, but substantially, throughout the country, those are the comments.

I wish to make my own record perfectly clear. There is no possible justification in an excess profits tax bill for taxing earnings which are purely normal; but we were compelled to agree to reduce the normal earnings in the period not fairly representative of corporate earnings in this country by 5 percent in order to effect an agreement with the House conferees. For that reason, and for that reason only, I agreed to this particular provision of the bill.

Furthermore, Mr. President, on this floor I offered the amendment which is commented upon in these editorials and in nearly all other editorials, which would have imposed the excess-profits tax not upon brackets arranged according to the mere dollar income of a corporation, but upon the proper relationship between the earnings and profits and the excess-profits credit. That has been pronounced sound by every reasonable commentator who has commented upon this bill. That, I thought, was one of the most important provisions of the bill. It is one of the provisions for which I fought hardest and longest in conference, as my colleagues will attest.

While I have agreed to the report upon the basis that there must be agreement in order to obtain a report, I want my record to be perfectly clear, that this arrangement of the excess profits upon a mere dollar-bracket basis, is one of the most unsound, one of the most inequitable, and one of the most indefensible provisions that ever was written into a harsh bill such as the excess profits tax bill, and it is done for the sole purpose of taxing bigness according to somebody's idea of bigness, without any possible consideration of how the burden falls upon the individual owner of stock which must be made less valuable and less productive under such a crude arrangement as this.

Mr. President, I wanted to make my position clear on these two points, particularly in this bill.

There is one other feature of the bill to which I wish to refer. On the floor, in addition to the specific provisions for relief made in extreme hardship cases in section 721, I offered an amendment known as section 721½. That amendment, in substance—and I think as it was intended to mean at the time—is contained in the bill as section 722. Broadly, it gives authority to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make adjustments in the case of abnormally affected income or capital and also makes his decision reviewable by the Board of Tax Appeals. Not only, Mr. President, is that in the bill, but it is in the bill with my express concurrence; but coupled with the statement that at the very first opportunity, on bills that must be favorably considered by the House and Senate, I propose to offer and carry through, if it is humanly possible, additional provisions to make effective, and provide the method of procedure by which it can be made effective, this broad provision in this bill, because in no other way can exceptional hardship cases be saved under this particular bill.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. On page 51 of the report, under the subsection in regard to the predecessor-corporation proposition, in which I have taken a good deal of interest, appears this statement:

Income resulting from activities of such a character carried on by a predecessor corporation is not entitled to the treatment provided in section 721.

Then following section 721 in the conference report—the bill as it is about to pass—is section 722, which, I understand, is the section which the Senator from Georgia drafted and which reads:

For the purposes of this subchapter the Commissioner shall also have authority to make such adjustments as may be necessary—

To take care of these abnormalities. Would the relief provided for in section 722, in his opinion, be open to a taxpayer whose predecessor, substantially identical in ownership, was the business organization that had developed the patent or process which resulted in the profit for the taxable year? I ask this in view of the fact that such relief is denied under section 721; could it be granted under section 722?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think it would specifically come within section 722, except under these circumstances: If the failure to permit the history of the predecessor to be considered resulted in an abnormality either in capital investment or in income, then that abnormality, if it resulted in exceptional hardship, would clearly come within the spirit of the section.

Mr. BROWN. I am satisfied with that answer, because, as I understand, relief is not given in any case unless there is an abnormality.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. BROWN. If the abnormality existed because of the predecessor-corporation situation, it seems to me a fair interpretation of section 722 is that relief could be granted.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe it should and could be, if the failure to consider the history of the predecessor had brought about circumstances and conditions which resulted in an abnormality in investment or in income for the taxable year.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the Senator. May I ask him if that opinion is concurred in by Mr. Stam, counsel for the joint committee who aided in drafting this section?

Mr. GEORGE. I should think Mr. Stam would concur in that opinion, and my recollection of some discussion of it leads me to that belief. Of course, I would not speak for him otherwise.

Mr. BROWN. My understanding was that he did agree.

Mr. GEORGE. I think he did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Michigan brought to the attention of the Senate the matter now under discussion.

I share the views expressed by my colleague the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. If there should be any dubiety upon the part of the representatives of the Treasury in the interpretation of the provision, I am sure the statements made by conferees as to their interpretation would be considered as part of the res gestae, and would influence the representatives of the Treasury in arriving at an interpretation of the provision; and that is one reason why, among others, I finally yielded instead of contending to the end for the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. It was a just and fair amendment, and ought to have been adopted, but with the provisions now in the bill, together with the statement just made, I think the Treasury Department will place upon the provision referred to the interpretation which has just been indicated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, just a final word with reference to an amendment adopted by the Senate which was specifically omitted in the conference; that is to say, an amendment dealing with the awards of the German-American Mixed Claims Commission, and exempting those awards from the excess profits tax provisions of the bill.

I had the honor to offer that amendment in the Senate, at the request of some Senators who necessarily had to be absent. We were assured—and I think beyond all doubt it is a correct statement—that section 721 (a) (1) of the bill as reported by the conference committee clearly covered the case in hand, and that these awards, when paid and to the extent that they do no include current interest, should not and would not be subject to the excess-profits tax. I take it from the discussion which was had in conference, and the report which has been submitted, that it is important now to note that all such payments made upon these awards—specifically, the German-American awards—except for interest accruing during the taxable year 1940 or thereafter, will be exempt from the excess-profits tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I very greatly regret that the House conferees refused to agree to the war profits tax amendment which I had the honor to offer and which the Senate adopted on this bill, and which it adopted as an amendment to the last tax bill, the Revenue Act of 1940.

I cannot, of course, know the motives which actuated the House conferees; but I assume, of course, that they were proper. I make no reflection upon the House conferees; but I urge upon Senators and upon the country that they impress upon the Members of the House the importance of enacting legislation of this character in advance of a state of war, rather than waiting until after the country is involved in war, perhaps—I hope not; I pray God we do not have a war—to adopt a taxing system.

In the first place, such a system can be considered more deliberately and more carefully and more cautiously in time of peace. We have a better picture of the whole field of taxation than if we wait until war is upon us and then, in a great emergency and under great stress, and under whip and spur, we hastily and probably improvidently adopt a plan of war taxation which over the long years would not be wise or not be best for our economy.

Of course the rates carried in the particular amendment to which I refer are very high; but war is not a normal condition. War is a state at variance with all normal procedures. I have an abiding conviction that in time of war, while we want to preserve as well as we can our industrial and commercial and business activities, every citizen, whether he be in the armed forces or in the civilian economic structure, ought to be willing during the existence of the state of war to give up, either in his personal services or out of his own resources and income, substantially all above a comfortable living. So these rates are very highly graduated. I want the country to know, however, that the present Congress has already authorized appropriations of something like $15,000,000,000 for preparedness and national defense, and those sums will have to be repaid. In addition, during the past several years we have accumulated a tremendous deficit in time of peace in the form of the national debt. That debt will have to be paid. We might as well make up our minds now that beginning in January it will become the duty of the Congress to revamp and revise the entire tax structure in order to raise what we would ordinarily regard as staggering sums for the purpose of meeting the national needs.

Much of the ground which has been plowed over by the Finance Committee in the present bill will have to be reviewed in January. Much of what transpired in the last revenue bill will have to be reharrowed and replowed and recombed for sources of revenue. I think we ought to let the country know that that is the case. If we do not let them know, we shall lull the country into the belief that this apparently inexhaustible supply of money which comes purely from loans and not from taxation will continue. It will not continue. We all know that after a while the springs will dry up. I hope the Members of the House of Representatives will come back here in January with a resolve to be willing to survey the whole field of taxation and impose much heavier rates.

The truth of the matter is that in this period of emergency, so far as income and outgo are concerned, we are in a state practically comparable to a state of war. We are spending vast sums and supposedly having profits. So far as I am concerned, I believe that even the rates carried in this war-profits tax amendment, if put into effect now, during this period of emergency, would have a great effect upon the economy of the country. They would tend to stabilize it. They would tend to arrest any movement toward inflation. They would tend to put the brakes on any inordinate profits on the part of those who are manufacturing war materials, or those who have negotiated or may negotiate contracts with the Government.

I regret very deeply, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives, through its conferees, has a second time rejected the war profits tax amendment. That amendment by its specific terms would become effective only upon a declaration of war by the Congress, and by the declaration in a congressional pronouncement of a state of emergency, hedged about with all necessary safeguards protecting the authority and the power of the Congress itself. I repeat, it is a very great disappointment.

The Senate has performed its duty with respect to this matter. The Senate Finance Committee, through a subcommittee, spent many weary months in exhaustive hearings, in laborious sessions, and in consultation with experts, in the preparation of the bill. It is not a wildly conceived, visionary plan of confiscation; it is a carefully studied and a carefully implemented plan, of heavy taxation, it is true, but so drawn as to spread the burden in a way which would make the ability to pay the real test, and yet would leave in everyone's possession and enjoyment a sufficient income to meet the necessities of the period and of the times.

Mr. President, we shall not despair, but the Senate I am sure will continue to insist, upon every legitimate occasion, that we should look into the future, or just a little farther than our footsteps might lead us, and prepare for that particular period when, if we should become engulfed in war, automatically this form of taxation would come into effect, and as a result we would have the vast increase of our national income and a slowing down of the accumulation of vast profits as a result of the country's misfortune in being plunged into war.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, inasmuch as there apparently will be no roll call on the conference report, I wish to make it plain for the RECORD that my view has not changed respecting the bill. I found it impossible to accept membership on the conference committee because I was so completely out of sympathy and out of harmony with the Senate's version, and since the conference version inevitably had to be less palatable than the Senate version, in fairness to the chairman of the Senate conferees I was unable to be a party to the crime.

I still think this bill is an imponderable mess, which is being perpetrated upon the poor American businessman at a time when he should be allowed a slight modicum of freedom to attend to his own business in behalf of a healthy public economy.

I think it is a tax atrocity in many of its features. It is not an excess profits tax law in any adequate or legitimate sense of the word, because it merely uses the pious excuse of an excess-profits tax to reach into normal taxes and penalize the taxpayer.

It certainly is not a war-profits tax, which probably two-thirds of the country thinks it is, because it does not even remotely reach into the area which is going to prevent the so-called war millionaire, and the extraordinary war profits, which the able Senator from Texas has been most appropriately discussing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan was favorable to the war-profits amendment, was he not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes; and I am about to say something further about it.

The bill not only fails to justify an excess profits tax definition, it not only fails to justify war profits tax definition, but it is not even a revenue bill within the reasonable definition of that term, in the presence of the Government's present fiscal needs. Again I agree with the able Senator from Texas when he insists that the responsibility of the Congress should be to face the fiscal realities, and do something measurable to meet them.

This is the second extraordinary revenue bill we have had this year. The two of them put together in this particular year will not produce over a billion dollars, in all probability. Yet, this year's deficit is already $10,000,000,000, and it is perfectly obvious, as the Senator from Texas has said, and as every Senator knows, that there has to be a realistic, fundamental, basic reorganization of the entire tax structure of the country, and there has to be courage enough to lay the heavy hand of Government upon sufficient revenue to approximately balance a portion of our books, at least, or we shall lose the first line of national defense, which is the protection of a solvent public credit.

So, Mr. President, without any criticism of the Senate conferees, because they have done the best they could with an impossible task—their possibility of operation was entirely bounded by the infirmities of the original measure—I continue to feel that in the present critical emergency the bill is a positively pathetic travesty upon the proper approach to the steps necessary to the maintenance of public credit. I think it fails completely to justify the theory or principle of a real excess-profits tax. I think it fails completely even to approach the rim of an assault upon so-called war millionaires. Since the conference report leaves very little I could approve, I wish to make it plain that I still think the bill is an imponderable mess, and I still think it is a tax atrocity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to express a word of regret that the Senate conferees were compelled to yield on a small and relatively unimportant amendment which I offered, and which was adopted by the Senate. Under the bill as it was passed by the House, and as it was reported by the Senate committee, corporations which lose money because they have purchased bonds are allowed certain credits with respect to the fixing of the average earnings over the base period. The amendment which I offered provided the same privilege where a parent corporation made a loan to a subsidiary, and lost it entirely, not by a bond issue, but by accepting a promissory note.

The Treasury experts apparently objected to that, and therefore it went out. I do not know what objection there was. It did not affect very many people, it did not affect very much in the way of revenue to the Government, but it seemed to me to be a measure of justice to business institutions which made loans to corporations which they owned, where they lost money through bankruptcy or other proceedings.

I appreciate the efforts made by the Senate conferees to retain the amendment, and I hope that when we have before us another tax bill, we may be able to give more consideration to that relatively small question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF OIL AND GAS PROSPECTING PERMITS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday on the call of the calendar the Senate passed Calendar No. 2207, House bill 8448, to provide for the extension of certain oil and gas prospecting permits. A similar Senate bill (S. 3172) was postponed indefinitely.

When the bill was called I overlooked that I had received a letter some 2 weeks ago from the Secretary of the Interior calling attention to the fact that this same extension was granted 3 years ago, and that the President at that time announced that he would not approve any further extension of the same leases. I did not object to the consideration of the bill at the time it was reached on the calendar because I had overlooked the objection of the Interior Department.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be restored to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask also that the action postponing indefinitely Senate bill 3172 be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH-IN-FABRIC CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as I understand, the so-called truth-in-fabric conference report regains its place before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report was laid aside only by unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill. It is the unfinished business, and will continue so until the time of adjournment or recess.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before a consent agreement was presented for the consideration of the tax-bill conference report, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asked me whether in my opinion the truth-in-fabric bill, if enacted into law, would not favor foreign manufacturers over domestic manufacturers. My answer is, emphatically, "Yes."

It is conceded by those who have made a study of the proposed legislation that it is impossible to tell by examining a piece of cloth whether or not the cloth is made from so-called virgin wool or a mixture of so-called virgin wool and reprocessed wool.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, last night the junior Senator from Florida sought the floor, and because of conditions over which he had no control, and over which no one else had control, he did not get the floor. I promised at that time to yield the floor at any time he desired to address the Senate, and I now yield for that purpose.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield for that purpose?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I wish to know whether, if the Senator from Oklahoma yields for other than a question, he surrenders the floor and concludes his speech for the day.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to say that if such would be the effect of the generous action of the Senator from Oklahoma, I would feel constrained not to accept the benefit of his generosity. Unless he intentionally yields the floor, I do not desire to cause him to lose the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am advised that I have the privilege of speaking twice on any day upon any subject. I yielded to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in order that the conference report on the tax measure could be brought up. I have not yielded at this moment for any other purpose save to permit the Senator from Florida to speak. If it is held that by yielding I should lose the floor, I should not yield, but continue my remarks. I am only too glad to yield if later I may be recognized by the Chair and may resume the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised as to whether or not the Senator has spoken once before today. He is entitled to make two speeches on the same day. If he yields the floor now and takes the floor again, it will be his second speech.

If a point of order is made as to a third speech, the Chair will have to rule that the point of order is well taken. The Chair cannot determine these matters until the point of order is made by some Senator and the facts are presented to the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does the Chair hold that the Senator from Oklahoma has already spoken once on this day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator yielded by unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill, he will not be considered as having yielded the floor under the Senate rules.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor to the Senator from Florida on condition that I may not lose the floor and that I may proceed with my remarks on the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. SCHWARTZ objected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then I yield the floor, Mr. President, to the Senator from Florida.

THE PACT AMONG GERMANY, ITALY, AND JAPAN

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in the last few days the world has seen another challenge by the dictatorships to the democracies of the earth. This is simply another chapter in the long story which for the past few years has been sadly written before the eyes of mankind. This book started, so far as recent history is concerned, in the case of one of those governments signatory to the Three Power Pact, with its assault upon the independent character of China, under the pretense that it had to attack that country for its own defense.

In spite of the fact that there is no other country in the world which has borne for centuries the pacific reputation which the Chinese people have borne, the aggressions of this country, Japan, were directed against this peaceful country of China, as the world later learned, for no purpose except to aggrandize itself, out of the great wealth of that peaceful people. That policy on the part of the Japanese Government found expression a little bit later in making a definite assault upon the main body of that nation, when its cities were plundered, its people were enslaved, its women were ravished, and its wealth appropriated to satisfy the appetite of this oriental conqueror.

It soon became apparent that its appetite was not even satisfied by this huge morsel of China, but that it extended its gaze to the south and looked upon territory that belonged to what were then considered impregnable nations of the West. We have found it turning its lustful eyes first upon a French island, and later upon territory of a France now lying prostrate under the foot of another ruthless conqueror.

Finally with that appetite growing upon what it had fed, we find that same unsatisfied lust turning itself even farther to the south to gobble up the relatively unprotected area formerly belonging to a land which now itself is a slave to another master.

So that country, starting out upon the pretense that it was necessary to defend itself, has now made the open declaration to the world that it is interested in one thing, loot, and it has one purpose, conquest of all that may be brought within its sway. That is one power to this pact which was enacted with the usual ceremonial before these conquerors in the city of Berlin last week.

Another nation which was signatory to that pact, the Italian Nation, gave to the world its first modern exhibition of the totalitarian state. As early as the early twenties it established itself by the famous march upon the capital of the Italian Empire, and proceeded thereafter to destroy first the integrity of its own country by bringing its people to slavery, by persecuting them with cruel punishment, by suppressing all evidence of freedom, and molding the will of a noble people to the dictates of a ruthless conqueror. So, the first conquest in that march was of its own people, as has been the unhappy experience of every people who came within the sway of that form of modern state.

Now, a little while later we see that same state, which at first had no declared purpose except its own integrity and safety, not satisfied with what it had at home, and what it might gain legitimately from exchange of goods and services with its neighbors and the world—we find that government turning a lustful eye upon a simple people living far to the South, which had an ancient and an honorable past, which certainly threatened no other people, not indeed the Italian people, with any form of aggression imaginable to the mind of man.

Here again this nation found it necessary to enhance its prestige and to give expression to what it considered its legitimate national interest by offending the conscience of mankind and turning the mighty power of an enlightened nation upon the ignorance and, in some instances, the savagery of an unenlightened people helpless against the attacks of modern war and modern machines.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he gets too far away from the subject of the situation in the Pacific? I wonder if he would mind if I make some remarks in reference to it?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I wish to start out—and I say this with no spirit of criticism at all—I wish to start out by congratulating the Senator from Florida in finally having joined with those of us in the Senate who for some years have recognized the seriousness of the situation in the Pacific. It was in January 1937 that I first introduced a joint resolution in this body which provided for an embargo against the shipment of scrap iron and scrap steel. If that joint resolution had been adopted in 1937, I am confident that Japan would never have continued on in China in August 1937.

After Japan took its position and attempted to take China proper, I introduced into this body a joint resolution based purely upon the obligation which we had as a signatory to the nine-power agreement, which would have enabled our Government to have stopped Japan at that time; and the present Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate [Mr. PITTMAN], introduced a similar joint resolution. The philosophy of our two joint resolutions was a little different, but there was never any disagreement between us as to the purpose of those joint resolutions.

Now we find, after 3 years, when we either knew or should have known what the situation was to be in the Far East, that we are told we must do something, or else. I simply wish to express my regrets that the Congress of the United States has not seen fit to take the very simple step which was suggested by us, a step which could not be honestly complained of by any nation in the world, because it was a step which was based upon a responsibility and an obligation which we had under a solemn treaty into which we had entered; and if we had recognized our responsibility under that treaty at any time during the last 3 years we would not today be confronted with the situation that confronts us so far as Japan and the Far East is concerned.

We are now faced with a situation where, having delayed, having lagged behind in our responsibility for a period of 3 years, any step we might take might be fraught with great danger; and I wish respectfully to suggest that the steps that we take in the Pacific be based upon the same grounds as have been suggested by the Senator from Nevada and by me during these last few years—that they be based upon our responsibility as signatories under the nine-power pact.

So long as we take a position which has as its basis a definite commitment which was made many years ago, a commitment which we made during time of peace, a commitment which was made because we wanted certain things to be done in the Far East, if we carry out that commitment, no matter what may be the results, I am sure the people of the country will stand behind the administration and the Congress in carrying it out. I am only sorry that we must have all the things which have happened during the past week in order to bring forcibly to the attention of the country the situation in the Far East. In every poll which has been taken the people of the country, to the extent of from 60 to 80 percent, have indicated their desire that we carry out the provisions of the Nine Power Agreement and that we stop our policy of violating our obligations under the Nine Power Agreement. But it is unfortunate that the Three Power Agreement of last week was required to bring the matter forcibly to our attention.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very much indebted to the able Senator from Washington for the valuable contribution he has made to the subject. The Senator is undoubtedly deserving of the thanks of the country for the enlightened leadership which he has afforded in the effort which he has just described. The difficult thing is for us, now looking back upon what has happened—and particularly what has not happened—to explain why we did not do what the Senator suggested.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am only sorry that I did not furnish leadership. I am only sorry that my voice was a voice in the wilderness, to which nobody paid any attention; because had the resolutions which I introduced, or the resolution which the Senator from Nevada introduced, been adopted by the Congress of the United States, we should not today be confronted with the serious problem which now confronts us.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the situation which the Senator describes is not at all attributable to lack of leadership on the part of the able Senator from Washington. It is rather attributable to that strange psychological phenomenon, the moral and spiritual apathy of the peoples as a whole constituting the democracies of the world. It was not only the people of the United States who expressed that apathy. It was the major nations of the world. I go further and supplement what the able Senator from Washington has said by stating that had the nations of the world interested in peace, law, and orders, and something like international decency, acted when Japan entered into Manchukuo upon a policy of willful aggression and unjustifiable conquest, perhaps there would not have been a World War, taking boys from American homes to the training camps of America in the year 1940.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Will not the Senator agree with me that the country which sabotaged the Nine Power Pact was Great Britain? Was it not Great Britain which said to the United States, "Do not bother about Manchukuo"?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator that undoubtedly Great Britain had a large share of the responsibility for what was done. It has always been assumed that the newspaper reports and the common understanding of the facts are true, that Secretary Stimson appealed to the British Government to cooperate with the American Government in taking some steps to prohibit the aggressions of the Japanese in Manchukuo.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think that our attitude in reference to Great Britain and the Far East must necessarily be the same attitude which I find myself compelled to take so far as the Senator from Florida is concerned. It was not more than a couple of months ago that I interrupted the Senator from Florida in a speech which he was making, and asked him a question about the speech. He turned to me and said that I was very belligerent—I think I am quoting him accurately—so far as Japan was concerned, but that I was not belligerent so far as Germany was concerned. I took great care at that time to explain that neither he nor anyone else could find in any speech I had ever made, or anything I had ever written, any belligerency toward Japan. I have always consistently taken the position that our course was outlined for us when we signed the Nine Power Agreement, and that I did not need to be belligerent toward Japan in insisting that we should comply with the provisions of that agreement. The Senator from Florida did not agree with me then. In the same way, in 1931, Sir John Simon did not agree with our then Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson. I cannot find it in my heart to be critical of the Senator from Florida, now that he has seen the light and joined with me in my position; and I do not think that we as a nation should be critical of Great Britain because of the fact that at long last she has seen the light and has recognized the dangers involved in the situation in the Far East.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Washington a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. It is not because of the fact that Great Britain has seen the light. It is because of the fact that Great Britain's self-interest is at stake.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. After all, in international relations there is the responsibility of self-interest upon the part of every Nation. We certainly have a very definite responsibility of selfish interest. For 3 years I have been outlining our responsibility under the Nine Power Agreement. I have been outlining it as a course, on the basis that it was to our selfish interest to insist upon the integrity of international contracts. Hardly anybody has agreed with me.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield? He is always very generous, and I do not mean to impose on his time.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. My point is this: We have heard that this is an unselfish act. I agree with the Senator from Washington that all nations must be selfish. Frankly, I feel that we are not selfish enough. I feel that we have tried to pull too many chestnuts out of the fire for too many countries, at the expense of American boys. I have no objection to what Great Britain has done; but I do object to Great Britain pushing American boys to the front to do battle for her. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I cannot agree with the last statement. We are now talking about the situation in the Far East. On Armistice Day, 1921, there was called by Mr. Hughes, the then Secretary of State, now Chief Justice of the United States, what was known as the Washington Conference. The war was over. There was a very definite desire upon the part of our Government to decrease the expenditures for the Navy. After the Treaty of Versailles had been concluded the people of China were very much outraged at the fact that Japan, which had merely rendered lip service in the war, was not only given rights outside of China, not only given the right to take over all the German possessions in the Far East, but was given certain rights in China. China declared war against the Imperial German Government at the specific request of the President of the United States. She declared war because of the fact that through the years she had had such a friendly relationship for the United States. She did not render very great service, but she rendered about as much service as did Japan. Yet when the Treaty of Versailles was written all the advantages in the Far East were given to Japan, including, as I say, certain advantages in China itself. So the Chinese people declared a boycott on the use of Japanese goods.

The meeting in Washington had many purposes. One of the important purposes was a naval agreement. We were anxious to enter into an agreement with Great Britain and Japan on a 5–5–3 basis. Japan was very anxious to have the boycott, which was destructive so far as Japanese trade was concerned, lifted, because Japan was then much more dependent upon her trade in China than she is at the present time. So the Japanese said to us, "If you can persuade your friends the Chinese to call off their boycott, we will agree to a naval reduction program." We did so. China said, "We have just about succeeded in our boycott, and we want something in consideration for giving it up." So the Nine Power Pact was written, under the terms of which nine of the great nations of the world agreed to respect the territorial and administrative integrity of China. We were paid for it. We wanted naval reduction. Japan was paid for it. She wanted an abolition or abandonment of the boycott. China obtained the Nine Power Agreement.

I have consistently taken the position that we owed a responsibility under that agreement, since we knew that Japan was attempting to destroy the territorial and administrative integrity of China. We owed the very definite responsibility not to furnish about 80 percent of the war materials which Japan was using for that purpose. With relation to the Far East I cannot agree with the Senator from West Virginia that we are simply pulling somebody's chestnuts out of the fire. We made a contract. I have taken the position that we should keep that contract by telling our people who produce and ship scrap steel, scrap iron, and gasoline, "You may not ship those things in violation of an agreement which your Government has made."

There is no nation in the world that could possibly object to our taking such a position. It is not for the purpose of protecting Great Britain; it is merely for the purpose of trying to be honest in international affairs.

I think no one can deny that the break-down, insofar as international affairs are concerned, has come because many nations of the world have refused to recognize their treaty obligations. We have always tried to take the position of insisting upon treaty obligations, and when one nation, in violation of a treaty, took over another nation, we said "We will not recognize that acquisition of territory." It was not merely because it was acquired by aggression; it was because it was acquired in violation of all the rules which we have felt were right so far as international affairs were concerned. We cannot consistently defend our position, having supplied the military equipment and munitions to Japan in order that Japan might use them to destroy the territorial and administrative integrity of China, without recognizing that we ourselves have been most derelict in our duty so far as treaty obligations are concerned.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I do not want to impose upon the Senator from Florida——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I repeat, I do not wish to impose on the Senator from Florida, for he is always a gentleman, and I appreciate his courtesy, although we frequently disagree; but the Senator from Washington spoke about treaty obligations. The Senator from Washington knows that the United States has had a high reputation for keeping its treaty obligations in international law, but a few weeks ago the United States Government broke its own treaty when it allowed the transfer of destroyers, because in doing so it violated a solemn pact which it signed at the Hague Conference. So we ourselves are not entirely clear. I thank the Senator from Florida and do not desire to take any more of his time.

Mr. PEPPER. I am grateful to the able Senators for their valuable contributions in the discussion of this subject.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I ask the Senator if it would be a violation of the Hague Pact, since Great Britain is not a party to the Hague Pact?

Mr. PEPPER. The observation of the Senator from Indiana is pertinent, and even my friend, the able Senator from West Virginia, knows my sentiments on the question of the transfer of the destroyers and its justification and legality.

Mr. President, while what I have done individually or what I have thought individually is not important, there has never been a time when I have not been ready to vote for the resolution of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Nevada. I think, perhaps, the Senators will recall that I so indicated to them in the committee, and commended the Senators for the action they had taken in trying to preserve something like a lawful and decent world, knowing that the kind of a world it was determined very definitely the kind of life this Nation had in it.

I will state further, Mr. President, that three things might be considered to have influence on the decision of Great Britain and the United States when the Manchukuo question arose. I have heard it disputed even by officials of our own Foreign Service, while at Geneva in 1938, that there was any such clear proposition as has been supposed, made to the British Government by this Government. Whether there was or not, I am not informed, and I have no authority to speak on the subject at this time. Let us assume there was——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If I may interrupt the Senator, I wish to tell him that there was.

Mr. PEPPER. As I said, let us assume that there was, I can well understand how any foreign government might have some little reluctance, without any affirmative action being taken by the American people or the American Congress, to accept the action of the executive department as binding on this Nation to an affirmative policy which might have led actually to belligerency in a territory so remote from this country as is the Far East where the Manchukuo incident arose. I am not saying that that was what actually moved the British Government in the action it took or did not take, but that is at least a theoretical possibility.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think anybody who had studied the situation, so far as Japan is concerned, in the last 10 years could come to any other logical conclusion than that the keeping of the obligations under the Nine Power Agreement by our Government or by the British Government, would not have led to belligerency. There was not the slightest possibility of such a thing and every authority on the Far East agreed as to that. I remember, I think it was last year, or perhaps it may have been early in this year, I posed to Admiral Yarnell, who is probably the best authority on far eastern matters so far as our official life is concerned, the question whether or not if we should adopt either the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada or the resolution submitted by me there was any possibility of getting into war with Japan, and he answered the question categorically, "No."

Now, we have reached the point where there is a very definite alinement between Japan and Germany and Italy, and we are confronted with a question of an entirely different nature than that which has confronted us ever since August 1917 as a definite proposition.

If I may make some claim for being a prophet, I prophesied in January 1937 that, unless we stopped supplying war materials to Japan, sooner or later she was going to go farther into China and attempt to take over China in violation of the Nine Power Agreement. But there is no authority upon the Far East, no one who knows anything about the Far East, who has had any doubt during this period of time that if we had shut off the supply of war materials the Chinese-Japanese War would not have been started in 1937.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, of course, the Senator in making the prediction to which he has referred was being moved by principles as old as the race itself and its experience; that is to say, if we permit one nation to make aggression upon aggression without being checked and without being restrained, in other words, if the lusts of mankind are permitted to be satisfied without restraint or remonstrance, of course, they will be extended and expanded as far as their reach may go.

The Senator will also agree, I imagine, that if there had been a concert of the law-abiding and law-observing nations of the world at any time during the last 20 years in restricting and restraining these international illegalities, and this international brigandage which from time to time has reared its ugly head, it would have been stopped and there never would have been the chaotic and terrible situation which faces mankind today. Although there might not have been actual war, the fear of it or something akin to the fear of it or some other quality to which I was about to refer, the moral let-down on the part of the civilized people of the world and their shrinking from boldness, definiteness, and positiveness on moral issues has been responsible for not curbing those activities, however hideous they have appeared.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the Senator knows that, so far as Ethiopia was concerned, Mr. Hoar and Mr. Laval, representing the English and French Governments, respectively, gave assurance over a period of 8 months to Haile Selassie that they would not permit Italy to attack Ethiopia, and yet when the time came they presented the so-called Hoar-Laval agreement to Haile Selassie under which Italy would get all the best part of Ethiopia and Haile Selassie and the Ethiopians would get the remainder of it. Then, after the attack was made upon Ethiopia and the League of Nations declared the sanctions policy, practically every nation which was a member of the League of Nations secretly walked out on the agreements, and the necessary oil, which Italy had to have in order to carry on the campaign against Ethiopia, was very speedily supplied.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think that the period between 1920 and 1935, we will say, will be looked upon and written about by future historians as being one of the ignoble periods of the world's history. I spoke of the moral let-down that occurred in the period subsequent to the World War. That let-down in morality and appreciation for moral principles was not confined to the chancelries of the great powers; it was not restricted to the statesmen of the world; it actually reached into private homes, even to the internal, political life of this great Nation, for it was in the wild twenties that young men and young women, and older men and older women lost the sense of personal moral values.

It was the jitterbug age, when youth seemed to have no anchor, when older men and women seemed to have no faith in the security of a world that was good here or anywhere else. It was a world where life was the so-called wild life. It was pleasure-seeking and money-grabbing that came to be the chief incentive of the people of this country, and the distorted figure of the dollar mark would perhaps have been the most appropriate symbol to place upon the flag of our dear country if many of the acts of this country had been expressed in that unhappy period. Indeed, that was one of the periods in our national history when corruption entered into the official life of this Nation, and reached to such high places that it shocked the conscience of an honorable people. That was in the same period when the standards of decency were not being observed by the powers of the earth.

Mr. President, I have spoken of two powers which were signatories to the Axis pact to which I adverted, and something of their history during the period from 1920 to 1940. The third signatory to that pact, Germany—a republic subsequent to the World War, hard-pressed economically, stifled politically and from a military point of view—yearned for law and order, for the old organization, and the economic comfortableness which she had enjoyed prior to the war. So the people of Germany listened to the siren call of a man named Hitler, who started out to give the dispairing German people all the things they had yearned for.

I have seen with my own eyes the scars upon the public buildings at Munich where bullets were fired in melee and civil war in that great and ancient city. This man Hitler, promising security to that disturbed and disordered people, held out to them alluring hope. He had one great trump card to play, and that was, "I will throw off of you the shackles of this hideous Versailles Treaty," and he told them it was the Versailles Treaty which was responsible for all their ills. Once they got rid of that, he told them, upon earth would open again a beautiful and golden horizon, and life would be lovely, and comfortable, and profitable, and luxurious, and full of pride, as it had been, for the great German Nation. He continued to use that pretext while he rearmed the Rhineland, and while he remilitarized his country, and while, plank by plank, and part by part, he tore the Versailles Treaty to shreds before an apathetic world.

And still the great nations signatory to the Versailles Treaty stood by and did nothing. Why they did nothing only the psychologists of the future will be able to say. That they did not is one of the dark spots in the history of the race; but they did not, because they believed the persuasive assurances that were given. So step by step went the conquests of this Nation, still under the pretense of bringing Germans back into the Reich, of giving Germans their naturally admitted national rights, of relieving the German people from oppression by other nations, until finally Germany had spread and spread and expanded and expanded until it came to be a cruel giant standing astride of Europe, ready to devour it in its ruthless career of conquest.

Now, there is no balance of power in Europe any more. There is no Europe; but this successor to Charlemagne, who in 1938 brought the sword and the crown of Charlemagne from Vienna to Nuremberg and placed them there for keeping and exhibition, has Europe under his military heel. Fair France, beautiful in its traditions and in its spiritual contributions to the literature and the learning of the world, today is but a base slave that moves under the scorpion-like lash of a dictator's whip; and brought within the compass of the same power are proud Spain and the other territorial areas of Europe. Not even the Scandinavian or the Low Countries have escaped.

Now that power knocks at the door of the British nation itself, seeking to realize an ancient ambition to be able to destroy that proud island. Now it reaches its strong and mighty arm across the sea, and tries to bring within its range every people upon whom its fingers may lay their foul clutch.

That is the third power which signed the new pact a few days ago.

I suppose now there is nobody who is deceived by the pretensions of these powers. Whatever may have been the delusions of the trusting and the faithful a little while ago, those who believed the protestations of this conqueror that he meant nothing but good and abhorred, above all, evil—I suppose even the most simple now are assured that the object of that tripartite pact was but one, and that was to bring within the sway of those who signed the pact the people and the property of the world.

They were determined to make the world over by their pattern, and to distribute among themselves the obtainable spoils of the earth.

Mr. President, if one overlooks the character of this movement, if he fails to observe that it is a world-wide revolution, he misses the whole point about this world disturbance. Mussolini has been very valuable as an interpreter of this movement for the rest of the world. When the Italian people entered the war it was he who gave the one straightforward and unequivocal declaration of purpose.

He said it was a world revolution. He said the have-not nations, the poor nations, were going to take the property of the haves, the rich nations; and one thing at which they aimed, he specifically said, was the gold of the world. He said it was a battle of the vigorous and vital new nations against the decadent and degenerate old nations; that it was the new states struggling for dominance against the diseased old states which had held sway in the centuries past. How reluctant all of us have been to embrace in our minds the full, terrible significance of those awful statements which the leaders of mighty states brazenly have been declaring to the world.

Obviously what these dictators in confederacy assembled aspire to do is to break down every bit of opposition to their march of conquest. There are just two great citadels of democracy which stand in the way of their ruthless progress. One of them is the brave British people, who for the last few months, to the glory of their race, have defended their little island, under the leader of Britain who personifies that courageous people, Winston Churchill, who has declared to the world that the British people would fight the invader upon the beaches, they would fight him in the cellars, they would fight him in the dungeons or by the hilltops and in the fields. I believe the first note of fear which has penetrated the cavernous heart of Hitler was the consciousness that in Winston Churchill there was a mortal soul which he neither could intimidate or frighten.

That is the reason Hitler said, "If Churchill becomes a member of the British Cabinet it means war with England," because he knew that that indomitable spirit could not be crushed by his threats.

So the Germans hoped they might destroy Britain alone, "divide and destroy" having been their policy, which had worked out so successfully in the past. But the "blitzkrieg" did not work on schedule. The Germans expected to erase the British people from the face of their land by bombings from the air or paralyze them by the terror of fright; but they did not do it. Many of the British people died, but the survivors kept on fighting; their babies were killed, but they fought on and they kept on looking to the west with hope in their hearts, and they kept on saying, "The inevitable day of victory will come when this evil thing, this scourge to mankind, will be overcome."

So the signers of this pact looked upon another nation beyond the ocean's confines, and they saw a stream of material aid coming across the ocean to this embattled people; as the Senator said a moment ago, not altruistically, not generously, not as a gratuity, but as a contribution to the strengthening of the first line of defense of America's physical, moral, and spiritual solidarity and security.

They would like now to say that is the reason why the "blitzkrieg" has not worked; that it is the aid from America which has made the British able to withstand their horrible assault.

Now, as the dictators see the volume of that aid ever increasing, day by day and month by month, under the determined demands of the American people; as they see the stout-hearted resolution of this Nation not to permit Great Britain to be the victim of this cruel conquest; as they come to understand that this Nation has been aroused at last out of its lethargy and apathy, now is sending its sons to the training camps for her defense, equipped with modern weapons of war; as they see that we are no longer a divided people, but that we stand resolutely unified for liberty, regardless of party or personal conditions; as they see these things they see that the ranks of democracy are closing up, and at last free men have their blood up and their spirit up; that they have straightened up, like the mighty men they are, and have dared to look their would-be conquerors in the face, and defy them to the conquest of their sacred soil.

It is not the same kind of enemy these monarchs of power have been running into. Not one of us but feels some personal pride in being a part of this race of freemen. It is a slowly aroused people. It is reluctant to enter the crucible of war. It is peacefully inclined. It gets so much out of its culture and its life that it hates to lay them down upon the cold sod of the battlefield. But they have not been afraid to die, and if demand be made upon this generation, as much as they love the richness of this generation's life, they, too, are not afraid to die, because they have an inheritance for which to die—of which they are proud.

So what do these creators of new worlds do? They devise another scheme for another squeeze play. Poor France, divided, disunited, unprepared in body and in spirit, fair country that it was, fell prostrate between the Frankenstein to the north and the stiletto to the south. Now these men of war say, "Before our victory is achieved we must crush the United States. Let us try the same tactics upon her." So they look beyond the wide Pacific to another conqueror, where totalitarianism, also having spread from the other infested areas of the earth, reigns supreme and dictatorship is the policy and form of government. Before such greedy eyes the prospect of rich loot is held out. The tempter says, "Take and enjoy of the world's good things, won by the blood of great men." This newest of the dictatorships would like to take them by stabbing in the back the helpless ones who owned them and running away like a thief in the night in the security that it cannot be apprehended.

The one that might keep them back these greedy men thought they had better dispatch; the one who stood in the way of the "blitzkrieg" Hitler thought he must dispose of; so they put the squeeze play from the Atlantic and the Pacific upon the United States of America. Now they have made dire threats. They say, "If you dare let this avalanche of supplies continue to beleaguered people of Britain, if you dare impede our conquest, it means war, attacked by 250,000,000 organized, trained, and equipped people, now the masters of the Old World and the continents of Africa and Asia and Eurasia. Dare you to meet that kind of foe, particularly just before an election, while the people are still unsettled in domestic policy?"

I cannot but recall how they have manifested an interest in our domestic political situation, and how they have tried to time what they have done toward that particular situation. I remember when Britain was about to put Churchill in the Cabinet, as I stated, they dared her to do it, because they did not want that kind of a foe in the British Government.

A little while ago a certain eminent citizen of this country—Colonel Lindbergh—was considered the potential leader of a third party, and I remember how I read on the Senate floor, and all Senators saw in the press, about the satisfaction in the newspapers of Rome at such a prospect, which might divide the political sentiment of this country and defeat that brave and strong man who sits today in the White House of a free people.

Then a little bit ago, after the election in our good State of Maine, again I saw the headlines in the papers of Rome expressing jubilation over that election going against the party now in power, not jubilation because Rome loves republicanism, not jubilation because the empire of the new Caesar prefers the Hamiltonian theory of government over another, but jubilation because of the possibility that such election returns mean that Franklin D. Roosevelt would be driven out of the leadership of a mighty nation.

Again I find these pact-signers saying just before the election that this great and peace-loving President of ours is leading this Nation toward war. They would like to hold up the horrible spectacle of war as a specter to frighten the citizenry of this country against continuing in leadership that majestic figure.

Mr. President, there has never been a time in the history of this Nation when another nation could level such a challenge to the courage of this people without the assurance that it would be flung back into their scowling faces with the aroused spirit of a strong and a brave people.

This time is no exception. I know that if they expected to frighten this Nation from continuing its aid to Britain, if they expected to keep that material aid from increasing in great volume day by day, week by week, and month by month until Britain shall become so strong on sea and in the air that they can throw back this would-be conqueror, they have misjudged the character and the purpose and the policy of the American people.

If they think they can raise the nightmare of war and pretend that it was incited by our President before the electorate of this Nation, interfere in our internal political affairs, and cause us to repudiate the foresighted and courageous leadership he has given us; if they think they can silence that brave voice which has been the spokesman for the democracies of the world, again, Mr. President, they have misjudged the character and the purpose and the policy of the American people.

Now, therefore, I think it well behooves our people, appreciating as we do the situation in which we find ourselves for the first time with a Navy almost comparable to ours threatening us on the Pacific side and a navy potentially the equivalent of ours threatening us on the Atlantic side, with the British Navy removed, and with all this long coast line open to approach over the highway of the wide ocean, I say in these circumstances, instead of cringing before threats, it behooves us to redouble, I venture to say, our efforts at defense and preparation so that if we could, our strength would be twofold and threefold what it would have been had this challenge not been leveled from those insidious and iniquitous sources.

I think we must leave no doubt in anyone's mind, in the mind of friend or potential foe, as to whether we are so full of folly and so short-sighted in vision that we will let the single democracy which is able to raise its hand upon the face of the earth go down in defeat under the aggression of the conquerors of the world all acting in concert.

If we permit this tyrannical policy of "divide and destroy" to be the means of the destruction of the citadel of freedom in the British people upon their isle and in their Navy we forfeit our obligation to our own people to think first, last, and all the time about their own physical safety and security.

In saying that, Mr. President, I do not say or imply that we should ever send troops or that we should ever send a boy from a mother's heart from this continent to fight in Britain or elsewhere unless some part of this hemisphere were attacked. But I do say, let us give until it hurts in augmenting the material resources of England so that they may be assured of superiority in the air, on the sea, and in arms; that they may be able to save their innocent homes, women, and children from the murderous assault of the night raiders who would terrorize by death a brave civilian population until they could make their Government capitulate to what means the dismemberment of that nation and that temple of freedom.

I think we should go a bit further and tender and keep open always the offer of our services to the warring nations for the purpose of finding a decent occasion for peace, but peace only upon democratc principles and upon decent safeguards for a future peace which will keep subsequent generations from bearing upon their burdened backs the scourge and the blood of another war.

I think also we should resolve in our hearts that in any future time we will and must bear our own share of responsibility for the kind of a world this is. If there was ever a time when this Nation could pursue its own indifferent way, regardless of the character of the rest of the world, that time has passed. As a matter of fact, there has never been any such era in the whole history of this Nation.

Between the time when this country was discovered and the year 1914 there were seven world-wide wars in all of which we participated; those wars originating in Europe and being world-wide in their significance. That is not generally appreciated. The one century of isolation we enjoyed, the one period when we had the consciousness of security was between 1823, when the Monroe Doctrine was promulgated by joint action and policy in substance on the part of the British and the American Governments, and the year 1914, when the first World War began. That period of peace arose not out of our geographical isolation; it arose out of the safeguards thrown around this country's security by the statesmanship of the founding fathers of this country.

Monroe, upon the advice of Jefferson and Madison, promulgated the Monroe Doctrine, by which, as Jefferson said in connection with another matter, we wedded ourselves to the British Fleet. That is what has given us the security of the past century, and the absence of it is what would give us the insecurity of the present century.

So, Mr. President, it was not geography which has saved us from attack, for wide oceans give highways of access to a territory. Germany has had a short and a small coastline which it has been able to defend for the ages past against the mightiest navies in Europe or in the world. But we have a coastline of 15,000 miles, from Nova Scotia around to Puget Sound, or 43,000 miles of coastline if you follow the indentations of the coast in all that vast territory.

How many ships, how many submarines, cruisers, and destroyers and lighter craft, would it take to patrol an area like that? Moreover, the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] a few days ago told the Senate that the Germans were preparing one of the greatest air fields in the world on the western coast of Africa, within 5 hours flying time of the coast of Brazil, upon our own continent.

So we find ourselves beset on all sides by potential or declared foes, the victims of a world-wide squeeze play intended to intimidate us against giving aid to Britain, and against the continuation of our preparedness program. I say that I know the American people have properly appraised this threat to our spiritual and to our physical welfare, and I know what the response of this people and its Government will be.

Mr. President, I am glad to see that there has come back again something of the old religious fervor in the hearts of the peoples of the world defending the institutions of democracy. I have been somewhat ashamed of the difference in the way the citizenry of this country has responded to democracy as compared to the way the citizenry of the dictatorships have responded to their appeals. Where they bravely gave their lives for their dictatorial purposes, we seem to shrink from such a contest, and perhaps from such a sacrifice. I am glad to see now coming back into the spirit of our people an aroused courage and determination comparable to the patriotism of our soldiers and statesmen of an earlier day.

Let me read to the Senate words which the author of the play, Sunrise in My Pocket, put into the mouth of David Crockett while he was besieged at the Alamo at San Antonio defending democracy:

> I didn't mean I'm looking forward to being dead. I'm not. I've got a wife and children somewhere, and that gives a man a mighty powerful want to go on living. Yes; there's an awful lot of me wants to go on living—most of me, I guess, if it comes to that, but there's some of me that's willing to die too, and I'll tell you why. You ask me how I feel about dying, and I ask you, how do you feel about living? And that seems the important thing to me, even now, maybe more than ever now, not how you feel about dying, but how you feel about living. Any fool can die. There's no trick to it at all, but a knowledgeable man can die in such a way that his way of dying, and what he dies for, can give a blessing to life at the very moment he leaves it.

Now take me. I'm no one in particular, just a common frontiersman out of the Tennessee Shakes, but even so, I've got a bee in my bonnet and I've always had it; a bee that stings out the word "liberty" over the whole universe in every red dawn. For I believe in liberty—really believe in it, and I don't just wear it on my lips for a decoration, like the French ladies wear scarlet paint there. No; it's come to mean more than just a word to me, it's come to mean a mighty real thing to me. It's come to mean that the man who does a slavish task of sowing and plowing the fields ought to have the liberty of reaping the fields. The right to think for myself, the right to talk for myself, the right to act for myself—so long as I don't hurt my neighbors—and the right to reap what I have sown; that's what I call liberty.

And I could no more get along without it than I could get along without air in my lungs. For life is liberty. I never could see a hair's difference between the two. And now, all over the world—in America, too—there's a fight going on between the men who believe in that and the men who believe that they were born booted and spurred and ready to ride, while the rest of mankind were born saddled and ready to be ridden. One of those men is outside these walls now, getting ready to batter them down. His name is Santa Anna, and you heard what Travis called him—a dictator. And if I understand these things at all, then a dictator is all the little tyrants in a country rolled up into one big one.

If I understand these things at all, then a dictator is a man who says to the people, you shall sow the fields, and you shall plow the fields, but my own particular friends shall reap them. My thought may be as black as a mountain tarn, but just the same, you shall think only my black thoughts; my words may be as frenzied as a devil's tongue, but, just the same, you shall speak only my devilish words; my deeds may be as accursed as Cain's own crime, but just the same, you shall all be Cains with me! That's Santa Anna; that's a dictator; that's a man who proves he loves his country by hating the whole world.

Some call that patriotism, but I call it the patriotism of Hell. And so, when you ask me, how do I feel about dying, I ask you, how do you feel about living in Hell? How do you feel about living under the thumb of a man who hates the light of day and the love of life; a man with night in his brain and death in his heart? I don't know how you feel about that, but I know how I feel about it. I'm still an American. And so I say, it's a good thing to fight a man like that, and an even better thing to die fighting a man like that.

Mr. President, 1,500 years ago a little body of people called Armenians received a message from the king of kings, the King of Persia, and that king said to that brave people, who had embraced the doctrine of Christianity:

You must give up Christianity and worship the gods of fire, which are the gods of Persia. I decree that you do it, and if you do it not, I will destroy you.

They were not only a brave people, but their own God raised up a great poet among them to speak for them their Christian, ccurageous sentiments; and this is what he said:

From this faith none can move us, neither angels nor men, neither sword nor fire, nor water nor any deadly punishment.

So, Mr. President, we say to the peoples of the world who are oppressed today:

Take heart. Take new courage. The democracies are standing up like men again. You need not be ashamed to be a democracy, and it will be but a little while until you need not be afraid to be a democracy.

I know that that sentiment is coming out of the brave heart of America toward the oppressed countries of mankind, for more than any other nation we have been the defender of liberty, and so long as that Statue of Liberty in New York harbor shall turn its illuminated hand and head toward the peoples of a besieged world, so long as our mountains shall reach up and touch and kiss the ethereal skies, so long as the red blood of Americanism shall course through brave American hearts, so long as the leadership of our country shall live up to the traditions of our glorious past, these sad peoples can look here with assurance, because we so love liberty that we are willing to help give it to and preserve it for the other liberty-loving peoples of the world.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4353) to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DICKSTEIN, Mr. LESINSKI, Mr. KRAMER, Mr. REES of Kansas, and Mr. VAN ZANDT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS: TRUTH IN FABRIC—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, for some time we have listened to the eloquent address of the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and we are made much better because of his eloquent appeal.

Mr. President, the United States faces a future which is somewhat uncertain. About 20 years ago, at the end of what was called the World War, the democracies were in the ascendency. The democracies came out of that world conflict victorious. The democracies in 10 years' time permitted the totalitarian nations, or the so-called dictator nations, to rehabilitate themselves with armies and navies, until today the future of democracies is in the balance.

In Europe today we find the German Government alined with the Italian Government, and now more recently alined with the Japanese Government in Asia; and we hear threats that these alined Governments are to be joined by still other governments of the so-called totalitarian or dictatorial form.

Mr. President, because of the threats which confront the United States, our people have become interested in having our Military Establishment so expanded as to be able, we hope, to take care of the people of our country, our property, and our Government.

Last November I thought I foresaw what might come in the next year or two. Being the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee dealing with the War Department appropriation bill, I suggested to some of my colleagues that, inasmuch as we had to hold hearings and make recommendations it might be a good idea for a number of members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and a number of members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate to join with similar delegations from the House and make a survey of the status of our present Military Establishment. That was in the latter part of October or the first of November.

Pursuant to that suggestion, a number of Members of the Senate and a number of Members of the House joined together; and the group, with some Army officials, made a tour, visiting approximately 150 military posts and establishments, air fields, airports, and airplane factories, located not only in continental United States but in Puerto Rico and Panama. When we returned late in December we found the people of the United States still not especially interested in the development of our military program and our military power.

When Congress convened in the early part of January, the President of the United States submitted to the Congress his recommendations for approprations in the form of the annual Budget. As is the custom, the Budget was first referred to the House of Representatives for its consideration. After some months of consideration the Appropriations Committee of the House, acting through its subcommittee, brought forth the War Department appropriation bill. The President had been very conservative in making requests for funds with which to expand our military program; but when the House of Representatives began to consider the recommendations of the President and the Budget requests, the House committee proceeded to cut down, pare, and diminish the conservative requests submitted by the President in the Budget for 1941.

Some time in April the House passed on the War Department appropriation bill. The House sustained the reduction made by the House committee in the Budget estimates, and the bill in that form came to the Senate.

Had the Senate agreed to the reductions made by the House of Representatives and passed the bill promptly, we should have had no expansion to speak of in the Military Establishment of the United States. There would have been a slight increase in the number of soldiers, a slight increase in the number of planes, practically no increase in the number of antiaircraft guns, practically no increase in the number of small arms, no expansion in powder, no expansion in ammunition, and, so far as I can tell, but little expansion elsewhere.

Mr. President, it required the invasion of the Netherlands and Belgium to awaken the people of the United States. The awakening came pretty late. I hope it did not come too late. At the time of the invasion of the Low Countries of Europe by the German military machine, when the people of the States became alarmed, Congress was criticized for not having had at that moment a strong military machine able to protect our property, our interests, and our Government, even though they should be attacked by the strong military power of Germany.

Mr. President, that would have been an impossibility. We cannot develop soldiers overnight. I have heard it said that if we should be attacked by some foreign foe, millions of American youth would spring to the service of the country. They might do so, but I wonder what they would carry along with them in their spring. They would have no weapons of any kind. They would have no uniforms. They would not be trained. I should like to know what effect springing to the front would have if we should be confronted with the military might of the present German Government.

So, Mr. President, as a result of what has transpired during the past year, the Congress of the United States is still in session. This is the 1st of October 1940. I have been a Member of this body for some 14 years, and this is the longest single session in which I have served. At the present time I see no probability of adjournment. In all probability, the Congress now in session will remain in session until the next Congress convenes in January 1941.

So, Mr. President, because of the things so eloquently portrayed by the distinguished Senator from Florida, today we are forced to expand our military organization. We must have men, and we must train them. However, trained men will not suffice. The men must have equipment. They must have planes. They must have rifles. They must have antitank guns, antiaircraft guns, and coast-defense guns. We must have guns for the battleships. We are trying to provide those things as fast as we can.

Today we find some difficulties in the expansion of our military program. We are calling boys to the colors, and they are coming by the thousands. To care for those boys we must have cantonments.

We must have housing facilities. Today we find that there is a shortage of lumber. The United States desires to buy so much lumber that there is not sufficient lumber in sight to supply the demand. As a result, the price of lumber is higher than it has been for years, and it is advancing daily.

In order to make antiaircraft guns, rifles, antitank guns, tanks, and battleships, we must have iron. I am not an expert on iron, but I am advised that scrap iron—which means a mixture of all kinds of iron and steel—when melted makes a higher quality of steel than does the iron which comes from the ore in the first instance. If I am not correct in that particular, I shall be glad to be corrected. However, I am advised that scrap iron makes a better quality of steel for making tanks, battleships, and armor plate than does the iron made from the ore as it comes from the mine. In other words, scrap iron is a better iron for military purposes than is virgin iron.

In order to equip our boys we must provide housing for them. We must provide implements and weapons for them. We must provide uniforms for them. Very soon we shall undoubtedly have a million men in cantonments. In order that those 1,000,000 men may be properly trained, they must have facilities. They must have not only weapons but clothing. Clothing for the soldiers is made mainly from wool.

We now have pending in the Senate a bill which has for its purpose increasing the price of wool. I wonder what the Senate would think if some Member of this body should rise in his place and introduce a bill to raise the price of lumber at a time when the Government must have lumber, and when there is not in sight enough lumber to supply the demand. I wonder what would happen in the Senate if some Senator should introduce and press for consideration a bill raising the price of scrap iron or pig iron necessary for the use of the Government in the development of its military expansion program. Yet at this hour we have pending before the Senate a bill having for its sole purpose raising the price of wool. To the extent that the bill, if passed, would raise the price of wool, it would raise the price of woolen cloth. To the extent that the bill would raise the price of woolen cloth, it would raise the price of uniforms; it would raise the price of overcoats; it would raise the price of blankets; it would raise the price of every woolen article which the Government must have to clothe the soldiers who may be called upon to fight the battles of the Nation.

Mr. President, at this time I desire to place in the RECORD a statement as to some of the influences back of the bill. A little while ago I asked unanimous consent to yield the floor in order that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] might address the Senate. Both the Senators from Wyoming objected to my yielding the floor for that purpose. I desire to indicate for the RECORD at this time some of the influences back of this particular bill.

I read from what purports to be a copy of the hearings on this bill.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was a member of the committee that held hearings on this wool bill. When the hearings were held, a gentleman by the name of Mr. J. B. Wilson, of McKinley, Wyo., was a witness. Mr. Wilson had previously testified in behalf of the bill. He claimed to represent the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association and the National Wool Growers' Association. Mr. Wilson said he was Washington representative for the wool growers on various matters before Congress affecting their interests.

To Mr. Wilson the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] put the straightforward question:

Is there any such thing as Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling?

Mr. Wilson had been before the committee and testified that he represented the wool growers of Wyoming and the National Wool Growers' Association, and he had just published, shortly before that, a little booklet entitled "Honest Wool Labeling," headed, "Why enactment of truth-in-fabrics legislation is necessary to protect the consuming public from fraud and deception in the purchase of woolen products."

So the Senator from Vermont asked Mr. Wilson some questions. Mr. Wilson is now in the gallery; and if I misquote him—I do not intend to do so—I shall probably be advised of the fact, and I shall be glad to make the correction tomorrow; but he is listening to what I have to say.

So the Senator from Vermont asked Mr. Wilson a question. In answering the question, "Is there any such thing as Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling?" Mr. Wilson said:

The Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling, Senator, is the outgrowth of organizations we have had in Wyoming for some 19 years that have been attempting to secure truth-in-fabrics legislation. The organization you speak of is an organization of which I suppose, if there be a head, I am the directing head, but there are no salaries connected with it, and it is just an organization to—— regarding this particular bill that is now under consideration before your committee.

Then he stopped for a moment—

Senator AUSTIN. What kind of an organization is it?

Mr. WILSON. Well, it is just a loose organization of friends of mine from Wyoming, with no dues.

Senator AUSTIN. Is it incorporated?

Mr. WILSON. No.

Senator AUSTIN. Is it a copartnership?
Mr. WILSON. No. It is just——

Then he paused for a few moments, and said—and I want to be perfectly frank with you in saying so.

That is not a very good sentence, but that is the record.

Senator AUSTIN. To be perfectly accurate, is it not yourself doing business as the Consumers' League?
Mr. WILSON. No, sir. It is myself and some friends in Wyoming.

I concede that Mr. Wilson has a right to be in the gallery. The humblest citizen of Wyoming or of Oklahoma or of any other State is welcome to the best seat in the gallery of the Senate of the United States, and I am not criticizing him for being there. He has a right to be there. I am not criticizing Mr. Wilson for appearing before the committee. He had a right to appear before the committee. He had a right to testify, and I have a right to quote his testimony. So Mr. Wilson is interested in this bill in behalf of the wool growers of Wyoming and the National Association of Wool Growers, and he has a right to represent them.

Mr. President, this bill is intended to have an influence on wool, to raise the price of raw or virgin wool, and to discredit the use of reworked or reprocessed or used wool. The enactment of the bill would divide the woolen industry into two parts: On the one hand, the growers of wool—that is, the producers of raw virgin wool—and, on the other hand, those interested in reprocessed wool or reused wool, or wool sometimes called shoddy.

Mr. President, if a suit worn by a Senator upon this floor should be discarded, and should find its way back to some woolen mill, it could be put through various processes, taken all apart, and fibers separated and recarded and respun and rewoven into cloth; and, if so, the cloth would be called shoddy under the terms of the bill, because, under the terms of the bill, such cloth would be made from reused wool.

The bill has for its purpose, I say, first the advancement of the price of raw or virgin wool. It has for its purpose, second, the degrading, if I may use that term, or the disuse of all wool which has been used once, either in woven cloth or in worn cloth. So, as I see the bill, it will have the force and effect of increasing the price of wool. Even the prospects of the passage of the bill on yesterday were responsible for increasing the price of wool 3 cents a pound, and increasing the price of woolen cloth 5 cents a yard. If the bill becomes the law, it is my judgment that the price of raw wool will be enhanced still further. Wool will go higher and higher and higher; and as the Government has to buy millions of yards of woolen cloth for uniforms, millions of yards of woolen cloth for overcoats, millions of pounds of wool for blankets and other woolen products, the bill, if passed, will increase the cost of woolen products to the Government in the sum of many million dollars.

I wonder what would happen if I should introduce in the Senate a bill providing that ashy-green tobacco should be placed on a parity with bright-red tobacco. That, in effect, is what this bill does in the case of wool. If this bill becomes a law, it will place on a parity, so far as the law is concerned, tag wool selling for 5 cents a pound and top wool selling for 90 cents a pound. If I should introduce a bill providing that under the law ashy green tinted tobacco, cured in the sunshine, should be of the same character as bright red tobacco, which sells for 30 or 40 cents a pound, while the other tobacco sells for almost nothing—it is a nondescript tobacco—I imagine I should find the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the other Senators from the tobacco-growing States resisting that kind of legislation; and if they did not, they should.

If I should introduce a measure seeking to discredit the cane sugar of the South, would I not find the Senators from the cane sugar producing States of the South resisting it? On the other hand, if I should introduce a bill seeking to discredit and minimize and depreciate the beet sugar of the Northwest, would I not find the Senators from that area resisting that type of legislation? If they did not, they should. Here is a bill proposing to classify cotton on a lower grade than even the lowest-grade shoddy; and so far Senators from the cotton-growing States, if not asleep, are dozing.

At the present time hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton are used in conjunction with wool in making cloth. I repeat, hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton today are used in conjunction with wool in making cloth. Take the case of the rugs on which Senators stand: The base of those rugs is cotton; the top is wool.

In many kinds of cloth the warp is cotton and is stronger than wool. It does not stretch; it does not shrink. But if this bill becomes a law, a man who makes cloth must reveal that it contains a certain percentage of cotton. The bill will, in effect, depreciate cotton; it will, in effect, in my judgment, have a tendency to make the public not want cotton.

I realize that cotton is a firmer fiber than wool. Wool has a sort of soft fiber. Wool is warmer than cotton, I realize; and in making cloth, manufacturers use cotton for the warp to make the cloth stronger, to keep it from stretching and from shrinking. Then they put in for the woof, or the main part of the cloth, wool. The wool gives the cloth warmth, and its appearance and its texture. But the cotton, when used in connection with wool, gives it strength and keeps it from shrinking and stretching.

If the bill becomes law, I am fearful that there will be little cotton used in the future in connection with wool in making cloth, because the label will have to state how much wool is in the cloth, and whether the wool is virgin wool, or whether it is reused wool or reprocessed wool. The label will have to state whether or not there is cotton in the cloth and how much—how much silk is in the cloth, and how much wool. The label will have to relate how much rayon or how much nylon is in the cloth, and the percentage. It is my judgment that, if the bill becomes a law, a consumer who goes to a store to purchase a suit or a coat, if he sees on the label "75 percent wool and 25 percent cotton," will lay the garment aside and say, "I don't want that garment; that has cotton in it. I want an all-wool garment," and the dealer will bring out an all-wool garment. Under the bill the all-wool garment may be made out of shoddy. It is my judgment that the consumer would much rather have a garment labeled "all-wool product" than have the garment labeled "75 percent wool and 25 percent cotton." It is my conviction, if the bill becomes law, that cotton and wool will not be used together any more to any extent, because the public will not want wool and cotton mixed.

It is a fact now that most of the blankets which are made by woolen mills contain a large percentage of cotton. The cotton gives the blanket strength. A blanket with a cotton warp will not stretch. A blanket with a cotton warp will not shrink. One does not dare to wash an all-wool blanket, made of pure, virgin wool, unless it is washed by a particular process. It can be dry-cleaned; but if washed, it draws up and shrinks and is not a satisfactory blanket. Yet, in my judgment, if this bill becomes a law, the use of cotton in connection with making blankets will almost cease. That is the purpose of the bill. It has no other purpose except to magnify and increase the use of wool, and to the extent it increases the use of wool it will decrease the use of cotton.

The bill, if enacted, will stab cotton in the back. The people in 11 or 12 States depend on cotton as the money crop. If the bill becomes a law, it will still further embarrass the cotton industry. In my judgment, it will decrease the use of cotton, in conjunction with wool, by many hundreds of thousands of bales.

Mr. President, I made the statement before upon this floor that, in my judgment, if the bill shall be enacted, cotton will take a place one grade lower in the textile industry than that occupied by poor shoddy, because shoddy is wool. Under the terms of the bill a suit of clothes could be made out of shoddy as a wool product, and the merchants could label the garment an "all-wool product." It might be reused wool; it might be reprocessed wool; but it would be wool. So the purpose of the bill is to increase the demand for wool and decrease the demand for cotton; decrease the demand for rayon; decrease the demand for silk; and decrease the demand for everything else that is used in making textiles, and to magnify the use of wool. It is because of that fact that I have opposed the proposed legislation from its inception. I am opposed to it now, and I shall give some reasons why I am opposed to it.

First. The bill should not pass because there is no test that can disclose the presence or percentage of reprocessed or reused wool in any garment; hence, foreign factories may make merchandise with cheap labor and cheap wool, and label such merchandise as they desire, and compete with United States products where inspectors may be placed in domestic mills.

Second. The bill, if enacted, may force United States mills to establish branches in foreign countries to compete with merchandise made for sale abroad, as well as for sale in the United States.

Third. The bill should not be passed because it places cotton in a class with or below the poorest grade of shoddy; hence, is an anticotton act.

Fourth. The bill should not be passed because its purpose is to increase the price of wool at a time when the price of wool is some 20 percent above parity, while other farm commodities are far below parity, and to the extent that such a bill does increase the price of wool, it is an antinational defense act, thereby obviously increasing the cost of woolen uniforms, overcoats, and all other items of clothing necessary for the comfort and welfare of our soldiers.

Fifth. Since there is no test which can disclose the presence of reprocessed or reused wool, in order to enforce the act it will be necessary to provide inspectors for the entire woolen industry embracing, first, the scouring of wool, carding, spinning, weaving, and manufacture of woolen products at vast expense.

Mr. President, my sixth reason is that the bill would provide for the regimentation of the textile industry, not only the regimentation of the wool industry, but likewise the regimentation of all kinds of textile industries located in the United States.

I was somewhat surprised to find on the conference report the signature of the distinguished junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I doubt if he knows that the bill would regiment one of the great industries of the United States. I doubt if he knows that the bill would regiment the woolen industry, would likewise regiment the cotton industry, and would likewise regiment the other textile industries of the United States.

There will be an occasion for a vote upon the conference report, and I shall be amused, if not chagrined, when I see some of the names of those who vote in favor of the regimentation of the woolen industry, the cotton industry, the rayon industry, the Nylon industry, the silk industry, and other industries of the United States.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to place in the RECORD in connection with my remarks the names of the textile companies and woolen mills in the several States which are opposed to the conference report.

I commence, first, with the State of California. The Eureka Woolen Mills, of Eureka, Calif., are against the bill. The Western Wool Manufacturing Co., of San Francisco, Calif., is against the bill. Worth Bros., Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., is against the bill.

I next come to the State of Connecticut. The Airlie Mills, Hanover, Conn., are against the bill. Assawaga Co., Killingly, Conn., is against the bill. Broad Brook Co., Inc., Broad Brook, Conn., is against the bill. D. & M. Woolen Mills, Putnam, Conn., are against the bill. Davis & Brown Woolen Co., East Killingly, Conn., is against the bill. Gordon Bros., Inc., Hazardville, Conn., are against the bill. Jordan Mills, Inc., Waterford, Conn., are against the bill. Angus Park, Angus Woolen Co., Glastonbury, Conn., is also against the bill. So is William Park & Sons, Inc., of Stafford, Conn. The Phoenix Woolen Co., of Stafford, Conn., is against the bill. The Rhode Island Worsted Co., Stafford Springs, Conn., is against the bill. The Saxton Woolen Corporation, of Norwich, Conn., is against the bill. The Saxony Corporation, of Norwich, Conn., is also against the bill. So is the Stafford Worsted Co., of Stafford Springs, Conn., as well as the Warren Woolen Co., of Stafford Springs, Conn., and the Warrenton Woolen Co., of Torrington, Conn.

I next come to the State of Georgia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KING. It is now nearly half past 5. It seems to me we have been in session long enough today. I was wondering if we might not at this time, if agreeable to the Senator, take a recess.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks the list of States, as well as the names of woolen mills and textile mills in such States, which are opposing the proposed legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, by my request I did not intend to suggest to the Senator that he pretermit the presentation of those names. I thought perhaps he would be glad to have a recess taken at this time and resume his address tomorrow morning.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Senator have a chance to develop the question I asked him some time ago about the method of labeling and the system of labeling?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have not come to that yet, and I have not answered the Senator's question with regard to whether or not the bill, if enacted, would favor foreign corporations; and, if so, obviously discredit and discriminate against domestic corporations. I should like to develop that more at a later time, but it is now 5:30 o'clock. I wish to assure the Senator from Massachusetts and our leader and others that I am not attempting to delay unduly a vote upon the bill. There has been no discussion of the bill to speak of save the statements made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] and myself, together with the helpful suggestions made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and a few other suggestions that have come from different Senators.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say that I do not know of any more able presentation or analysis of any bill that has been made here in recent years than has been made by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma. It is very informative and instructive, especially in view of the fact that so few of us have had a chance to study its details and in view of the rapid changes that have been made in the bill in recent months from the original bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in the remainder of the time I shall occupy in opposition to this measure I desire to present for the RECORD an analysis of the bill as I see it and the reasons why it should not be passed, especially at this particular time. If we could pass a bill that would be beneficial I would be for it. The Senator from Wyoming has an imposing task upon his hands. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] tried it for years, and he could not prepare a bill which satisfied him, and he quit. Representatives in the House have tried to write a bill, and they have failed and quit.

While I compliment the Senator from Wyoming, I must say that he is up against a stone wall. He is trying to define virgin wool. Mr. President, there are 16 different types of virgin wool, and there are as many kinds of virgin wool as there are kinds of sheep. The full-blood Merino sheep is one kind. There are 16 kinds of wool among full-blood Marino sheep. Then there are the half-blood sheep, and again there are 16 different kinds of wool among them. Then there are the three-eighths-blood sheep, and there again we find sixteen different kinds of wool. I shall discuss that tomorrow. The wool from the three-eighths-blood sheep is not the same kind of wool as that from the half-blood sheep.

Then there is the nondescript sheep coming from my State, coming from the desert, and from South America. There are thousands of kinds of wool. The bill makes no distinction. So long as it is wool which comes from a sheep, dead or alive, that has never been used, it is virgin wool. I cannot accept that kind of a definition of wool.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire, of course, to curtail the Senator or any other Senator in debating this measure. I do not know who else desires to speak on it, either for or against it, but would the Senator from Oklahoma be willing to fix an hour sometime tomorrow when the conference report could be voted on?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I could not do that now. I do not know how many questions may be asked. I can place most of my data in the RECORD without reading them, and I plan to do so. I realize that but few Senators are sufficiently interested in the matter to remain on the floor, and I do not blame those who do not. Nevertheless, I think the RECORD should show what I conceive to be the objections to the measure, and I think the RECORD should show what I think is a proper analysis of it. When I shall have completed my statement I shall be very glad to agree to a time to vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not agree to that without realizing that I hope to use some time to discuss the report, and I should not like to have a time limit placed upon my discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not proposed to do that. I was feeling out the Senator from Oklahoma with respect to that matter, and evidently we cannot reach an agreement at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me assure the Senator from Kentucky that under the conditions there is no possibility of a filibuster, because one Senator cannot carry on a filibuster.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not indefinitely.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There will be no adjournment, in my opinion, so I cannot speak indefinitely.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes the legislative situation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. I shall be glad to yield at any time for any matter that is important to be taken up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, but it is important that we make progress with what we have to do yet before any Senator can get away, if he ever does get away. I thought we might be able to arrange an agreement, but I see we cannot do so. I am perfectly willing to suspend now and let the Senator conclude in the morning, if that is his wish.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then, I assume I shall have the floor when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

CONTRACT ASSIGNMENT ACT OF 1940

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday on the call of the calendar there was passed, Calendar No. 2293, House bill 10464, which provided for the assignment of contracts with the Government. My attention has been called to the fact that inasmuch as certain language of the bill containing the amendments is in quotations, it is necessary to correct it.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered in order that I may make a technical correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator state the correction which he wishes to make?

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 2, line 4, I move to strike out "this act" and insert "the Contract Assignment Act of 1940", and on page 3, line 4, to strike out "this act" and insert "the Contract Assignment Act of 1940".

I wish also to add a new section:

This act may be cited as the Contract Assignment Act of 1940.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would the amendments suggested change the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. They would simply show that the reference is to this act, and not to a previous act, which the bill amends.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). Without objection, the amendments proposed by the Senator from Kentucky are agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the amendments just agreed to would not interfere with the amendment which I offered yesterday at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the additional amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The additional amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ROLAND HANSON AND DR. E. A. JULIEN—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ELLENDER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Doctor E. A. Julien, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$2,000" insert "$1,250"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3 and 4, and agree to the same.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
H. H. SCHWARTZ,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BILBO (for Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma) submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

FRANCO-AMERICAN CONSTRUCTION CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3437) for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co., which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$4,258.60" and insert "$9,323.75."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Harvey M. Johnson, of Nebraska, to be judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, to fill an existing vacancy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry Foreign Service officers of class 8 and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, to be also consuls of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee requests that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc. With respect to the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., I desire to make a brief statement before the nomination is confirmed.

I am not opposing the confirmation on the ground that the nominee is personally obnoxious to me, because he is not. He is a very good friend of mine. However, I wish to make a statement with respect to the nomination.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether or not the nomination was submitted to him?

Mr. BURKE. It was submitted to me, and on the card which I returned, I stated what I am now stating. I wanted the nomination to be reported and placed on the calendar. I have no objection on personal grounds, but the nominee who has been selected replaces a postmaster who was appointed by Woodrow Wilson. I had recommended the reappointment of the incumbent. I desire to make a statement on the subject which will require 15 or 20 minutes, and I desire to have a quorum present when I make the statement. I have no desire to suggest the absence of a quorum at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us accept the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, and let the particular nomination be passed over. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., be passed over, and that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, before leaving that subject I should like to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Tennessee, and to the majority leader.

I take it that during the remaining days of the session it will not be possible to have anything like a quorum present when we reach the close of the day. I really desire to have a quorum present when I make the comparatively brief statement which I shall make. Would it be possible tomorrow, after the first quorum call, to have a brief executive session? I assure the Senate that I shall consume not more than 15 minutes. The matter is important, and I wish to present my views.

Mr. BARKLEY. Personally, I should not object to the suggestion. However, a conference report is pending, and it has been set aside from time to time for many other matters. Perhaps we can have an executive session a little earlier in the afternoon tomorrow.

Mr. BURKE. That is satisfactory. I should like to make my statement on an occasion when, without putting anyone to the inconvenience of having a quorum call, I may have a reasonable number of Senators present when I present my views, which are not at all based upon any personal obnoxiousness of the nominee. However, it seems to me that a vital principle is involved, and I should like to discuss the matter briefly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection. However, I can understand the situation of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not insist upon making his statement during the consideration of the conference report, because I desire to get through with it.

Mr. BURKE. I have not insisted upon it. I merely threw out the suggestion, which did not fall upon fertile ground. It will not sprout or grow. Sometime later we can work it out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator was not emphasizing the infertility of the ground upon which he threw the suggestion. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, October 2, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the midst of the teeming, pain-stricken multitudes of earth is the broken peace, the bleeding heart, and the bitter cup shuddering on the verge of despair. We most humbly pray Thee, as the wind, the earthquake, and the fire are storming by, let the still, small voice break the silence. We bless Thee for the Christ, whose very garment is charged with sympathy and healing. For His sinless life, for His majesty and dignity, for His gentleness with the weary, the aged, and the suffering; for His patience with dull and ignorant men, for His passion to save the lost, and for His undying words that fell from His guileless lips, O Father of mercies, accept our deepest praise and gratitude. As the world is on the high seas which threaten to sweep it to an awful destiny, we pray that this Congress, as master and servant, lord and steward, may be clothed with a passion for doing the works of God and man. O Thou Holy One, who feels, loves, and lives, be Thou our imperishable strength and support that the high hopes of good men everywhere may not die at the touch of this present world's cruel reality. God bless America, our President, our Speaker, the leaders, and the Congress; encompass us with Thy truth, justice, and brotherhood. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE COL. F. C. HARRINGTON

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, our hearts have been saddened with the news of the untimely passing of Lt. Col. F. C. Harrington, Work Projects Commissioner. Colonel Harrington, with the background of a long and distinguished service in the United States Army, was drafted by the Works Progress Administration in 1935, where he served as Chief Engineer until 1938, when he assumed the direction of W. P. A.

In my capacity as acting chairman of the Deficiency Subcommittee, as well as the W. P. A. Investigation Committee, I came in close and intimate touch with Colonel Harrington. I have observed him under stress and under fire. I am glad to pay tribute to him as being a sincere and conscientious public servant whose ambition was to make of the work-relief program what I am sure Congress meant it should be, namely, a helping hand to deserving citizens who, through no fault of their own, were in need of assistance. Colonel Harrington was diligent, conscientious, courteous, and sincere. I have no doubt the ardous and exacting duties of his office took a fatal toll from his otherwise vigorous strength. Virginia has lost an honored son, the United States Army a gallant officer, the Federal Government a capable servant, and the Work Projects program an efficient Commissioner.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in paying my humble tribute to a worthy American. A man of impeccable rectitude, a fine officer, and a splendid public official passed to the beyond when Col. Frank C. Harrington, Federal Work Projects Administrator, died at New London, Conn., last night. Our Subcommittee on Deficiencies, which had original jurisdiction over relief appropriations and which investigated the W. P. A. from top to bottom, went over the acts of Colonel Harrington with a fine-tooth comb, and while we did not always agree with him as to policies and performances we did agree that he was an honest man. Charged with the responsibility of distributing astronomical sums of the taxpayers' money, he was never swayed by favoritism and his spear knew no brother.

Born in Virginia, where Democrats thrive, I doubt whether he had any politics and I doubt whether he ever voted. He held himself to the rigid rule of duty and never deviated from it a hair's breadth. He was an Army man and exemplified Army traditions at their best, always ready to perform any duty that fate assigned to him and to give it the best that was in him. Over the desk in his office was the following quotation of George Washington, which was the ruling principle of his life:

> Do not suffer your good nature, when application is made, to say "Yes" when you ought to say "No"; remember that it is a public and not a private cause that is to be injured or benefited by your choice.

I sometimes feel that we are too sparing of our flowers for the living. Last March the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and I, during our committee hearing on the W. P. A., handed some flowers to Colonel Harrington, which we thought were deserved. I quote from page 548 of the hearing as follows:

> Mr. CANNON. Down to the present time, Colonel Harrington, from the beginning of the Works Progress Administration to date, what is the total amount of money expended?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. About seven and a half billion dollars.
> Mr. CANNON. That is a stupendous sum. In the expenditure of that sum, if no grounds for criticism arose, it would be nothing short of any ancient biblical miracle recorded in Holy Writ?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. There is no doubt of that, sir.
> Mr. CANNON. It was expected that there would be some mistakes made. Business always makes an allowance for that. The point is not that you made mistakes, which is only human, but that you are not making the same mistakes now. Are you still doing things which were subject to criticism after these criticisms have been justified?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. No, sir; we are not. The W. P. A. is about 4½ years old. It got started in the autumn of 1935, and this is the spring of 1940, and I think, when we put the record of W. P. A. up alongside Government departments with 150 years behind them, that we do not need to hang our heads in W. P. A. about the job that has been done.
>
> Mr. CANNON. It amounted to pioneering in an uncharted field without a compass and with no blueprints to go by?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. That is right.
> Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Ludlow.
> Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has stolen some of my thunder.
> Mr. CANNON. Certain classes of people think along the same channels.
> Mr. LUDLOW. Colonel Harrington, I just want to start with an observation of my own, if I may, for what it is worth, which almost paraphrases what the gentleman of Missouri was just saying.
> Considering the vast volume of money handled and the size of personnel involved in administering the W. P. A., and making due allowance for the weaknesses of human nature, I think the wonder is not that there has been some crookedness in the W. P. A., but that there has been as little crookedness as the records indicate. I should say that, judged by accepted moral standards, W. P. A. is 99 percent clean. While I do not agree with some of the W. P. A. policies, I want to say that Colonel Harrington has discharged a task of monumental magnitude and difficulty honestly, faithfully, and conscientiously, and I do not want anything I may say to be construed as any criticism of him.

Colonel HARRINGTON. Thank you very much, sir.

I am glad that I spoke those words to Colonel Harrington when he was living, and there is a solemn and saddening satisfaction in repeating them now that he is dead.

His was an engaging and lovable personality. In conferences at the White House I could not fail to observe the affection with which the President referred to him as "Pink," calling him by the nickname that was fastened upon him long ago at West Point and with which he was indissolubly associated in the minds of his friends.

Responsible as he was for the execution of a trust of inconceivable magnitude, he leaves as a heritage to his children a faithful and efficient record of service for his country which they may well be proud of to the last day of their lives.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York and Mr. KNUTSON asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on the subject of gold on May 9 of this year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Chester G. Meyers on safety for air travel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELSTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks by including a letter which I shall read in the course of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Deficiency Subcommittee I want to say that we appreciated the good work of Colonel Harrington. If it had not been for his support we would not have had the 18-month provision successfully continued or the elimination of the prevailing wage in relief, both of which were excellent amendments.

I now want to read a letter that I recently received:

OMAHA, NEBR., September 29, 1940.

Representative W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: It may interest you to know that during my 40 years as traveling salesman I have gone through panics, depressions, and poor business, but never anything like it has been since the recent conscription bill was signed.

Since the passage of this bill—so strange in peacetimes—everything has been at a standstill, the almost complete slump in sales not only affecting the present but apparently apt to have much the same paralyzing effect on future business.

Naturally all men of the draft age are reluctant to invest, even to the point of being unwilling to buy for actual current needs. This applies not alone to the 21 to 35 age brackets but millions of others, who, uncertain of the future and their own status, do not feel sufficiently secure to act upon their ordinary initiative with normal regard for future activity.

And, after all, why should young men from 25 to 35, who either hold good jobs or in some kind of individual enterprise which is perfectly legitimate and a benefit to the community and this country, be forced to drop all such constructive endeavor in peacetime for a year's military training? Few, if any, American citizens, regardless of the alarming statements consistently being made to the contrary, actually fear or have reason to fear invasion of our shores. Therefore, such a drastic step as this conscription bill, in a free country like ours, in peacetime, is one which in its repercussions generally and its deadening influence on privately owned business, which surely needs to be stimulated rather than further handicapped, may occasion Mr. Roosevelt some unpleasantness.

I urge you to pass this along to Senators in the hope that the situation may be corrected or at least in some measure alleviated.

May God bless you.

Sincerely,

MARTIN J. BREMER,
5009 Sheridan Road, Chicago, Ill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the Roosevelt far eastern policy of bluff and bluster has driven Japan into the arms of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. This was a foregone conclusion when President Roosevelt determined on a policy of policing and quarantining the world from Washington. The issue is rapidly developing into whether we are to police Asia with American blood and treasure or while insisting on our rights to trade to keep out of war.

If the American foreign policy is to be determined by sentiment then President Roosevelt is right and we should have gone to war immediately when Abyssinia, China, and Czechoslovakia were invaded. If the policy laid down by George Washington and Thomas Jefferson of nonintervention and keeping out of foreign conflicts means anything there is still time to arbitrate our difficulties with Japan.

A perilous situation has developed as a result of the blunders of the New Deal diplomacy in taking such an aggressive and belligerent attitude toward Japan with nothing to back it up. No one in Japan really wants war with the United States but it is quite evident that this highly proud and militaristic nation has gotten tired of being threatened and slapped in the face by us.

All the American people are sympathetic with China, but I do not believe that 1 percent of the Members of Congress or of our people want war with Japan unless we are attacked or the right of Americans to trade is suppressed. It is time for us to remain calm and keep our powder dry and to build up our own national defense. We must not let our sympathies run away with our judgment and involve us in any Asiatic war 10,000 miles away that has no connection with the defense of the American Continent.

The New Deal dictatorial administration of confusion and hysteria with a chip on its shoulder persists in passing out moral judgments all over the world which is the open road to war. Our foreign policy in the Far East is filled with dynamite and any provocative action may ignite the fatal blast of war. The Congress is prepared to spend billions for defense but not one dollar to send an American soldier to Asia to fight other people's battles. President Roosevelt must not make any military or naval alliances or war commitments without the consent of Congress. If he does, I predict that we will be holding the bag and doing all the fighting in the Far East. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SECOND REVENUE BILL OF 1940

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 34, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I—CORPORATION INCOME TAX

"SEC. 101. Corporation income tax.

"(a) Tax on corporations in general: Section 13 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 3 of the Revenue Act of 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation the normal-tax net income of which is more than $25,000 (except a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 14, section 231 (a), Supplement G, or Supplement Q) whichever of the following taxes is the lesser:

"'(1) GENERAL RULE.—A tax of 22½ per centum of the normal-tax net income; or

"'(2) ALTERNATIVE TAX (CORPORATIONS WITH NORMAL-TAX NET INCOME SLIGHTLY MORE THAN $25,000).—A tax of $3,775, plus 35 per centum of the amount of the normal-tax net income in excess of $25,000.'

"(b) TAX ON FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.—Section 14 (c) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 3 of the Revenue Act of 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.—

"'(1) In the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein, the tax shall be an amount equal to 22½ per centum of the normal-tax net income, regardless of the amount thereof.'

"(c) TAX ON MUTUAL INVESTMENT COMPANIES.—Section 362 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 3 of the Revenue Act of 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the Supplement Q net income of every mutual investment company a tax equal to 22½ per centum of the amount thereof.'

"(d) DEFENSE TAX FOR FIVE YEARS.—The first sentence of section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code, added to such Code by section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1940, is amended to read as follows: 'In the case of any taxpayer, the amount of tax under this chapter for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, and before January 1, 1945, shall be the tax computed without regard to this section, increased by 10 per centum; except that in the case of a corporation the increase shall be limited to 10 per centum of the tax computed without regard to the amendments made by section 101 (a), (b), and (c) of the Second Revenue Act of 1940.'

"(e) TAXABLE YEARS TO WHICH APPLICABLE.—Amendments made by this section shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1939.

"TITLE II—EXCESS PROFITS TAX

"SEC. 201. Excess Profits Tax of 1940.

"The Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after section 706 the following new subchapter which may be cited as the 'Excess Profits Tax Act of 1940':

"'SUBCHAPTER E—EXCESS PROFITS TAX

"'PART I

"'SEC. 710. Imposition of Tax.

"'(a) IMPOSITION.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, on the adjusted excess profits net income, as defined in subsection (b), of every corporation (except a corporation exempt under section 727) a tax as follows:

"'(1) Upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of less than $20,000, 25 per centum of the adjusted excess profits net income.

"'$5,000 upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of $20,000; and upon adjusted excess profits net incomes in excess of $20,000, and not in excess of $50,000, 30 per centum in addition of such excess.

"'$14,000 upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of $50,000; and upon adjusted excess profits net incomes in excess of $50,000, and not in excess of $100,000, 35 per centum in addition of such excess.

"'$31,500 upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of $100,000; and upon adjusted excess profits net incomes in excess of $100,000, and not in excess of $250,000, 40 per centum in addition of such excess.

"'$91,500 upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of $250,000; and upon adjusted excess profits net incomes in excess of $250,000, and not in excess of $500,000, 45 per centum in addition of such excess.

"'$204,000 upon adjusted excess profits net incomes of $500,000; and upon adjusted excess profits net incomes in excess of $500,000, 50 per centum in addition of such excess.

"'(2) Application of rates in case of certain exchanges: If the taxpayer's highest bracket amount for the taxable year computed under section 752 (relating to certain exchanges) is less than $500,000, then in the application of paragraph (1) of this subsection to such taxpayer, in lieu of each amount, other than the percentages, specified in such paragraph, there shall be substituted an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount so specified as the highest bracket amount so computed bears to $500,000.

"'(b) DEFINITION OF ADJUSTED EXCESS PROFITS NET INCOME.—As used in this section, the term "adjusted excess profits net income" in the case of any taxable year means the excess profits net income (as defined in section 711) minus the sum of:

"'(1) SPECIFIC EXEMPTION.—A specific exemption of $5,000;

"'(2) EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT.—The amount of the excess profits credit allowed under section 712; and

"'(3) UNUSED EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT.—In the case of a taxpayer the normal-tax net income of which for the taxable year is not more than $25,000, the amount by which the excess profits credit for the preceding taxable year (if beginning after December 31, 1939) exceeds the excess profits net income for such preceding taxable year.

"'SEC. 711. Excess profits net income.

"'(a) TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1939.—The excess profits net income for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, shall be the normal-tax net income, as defined in section 13 (a) (2), for such year except that the following adjustments shall be made:

"'(1) EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT COMPUTED UNDER INCOME CREDIT.—If the excess profits credit is computed under section 713, the adjustments shall be as follows:

"'(A) Income Taxes.—The deduction for taxes shall be increased by an amount equal to the tax (not including the tax under section 102) under Chapter 1 for such taxable year;

"'(B) Long-term Gains and Losses.—There shall be excluded long-term capital gains and losses. There shall be excluded the excess of gains from the sale or exchange of property held for more than eighteen months which is of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l) over the losses from the sale or exchange of such property;

"'(C) Income From Retirement or Discharge of Bonds, and So Forth.—There shall be excluded, in the case of any taxpayer, income derived from the retirement or discharge by the taxpayer of any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than eighteen months, including, in case the issuance was at a premium, the amount includible in income for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge;

"'(D) Refunds and Interest on Agricultural Adjustment Act Taxes.—There shall be excluded income attributable to refund of tax paid under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended, and interest upon any such refund;

"'(E) Recoveries of Bad Debts.—There shall be excluded income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if a deduction with reference to such debt was allowable from gross income for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1940;

"'(F) Dividends Received.—The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to dividends on stock of domestic corporations.

"'(2) EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT COMPUTED UNDER INVESTED CAPITAL CREDIT.—If the excess profits credit is computed under section 714, the adjustments shall be as follows:

"'(A) Dividends Received.—The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to all dividends on stock of all corporations, except dividends (actual or constructive) on stock of foreign personal-holding companies;

"'(B) Interest.—The deduction for interest shall be reduced by an amount equal to 50 per centum of so much of such interest as represents interest on the indebtedness included in the daily amounts of borrowed capital (determined under section 719 (a));

"'(C) Income Taxes.—The deduction for taxes shall be increased by an amount equal to the tax (not including the tax under section 102) under Chapter 1 for such taxable year;

"'(D) Long-term Gains and Losses.—There shall be excluded long-term capital gains and losses. There shall be excluded the excess of gains from the sale or exchange of property held for more than eighteen months which is of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l) over the losses from the sale or exchange of such property;

"'(E) Income From Retirement or Discharge of Bonds, and So Forth.—There shall be excluded, in the case of any taxpayer, income derived from the retirement or discharge by the taxpayer of any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than eighteen months, including, in the case the issuance was at a premium, the amount includible in income for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge;

"'(F) Refunds and Interest on Agricultural Adjustment Act Taxes.—There shall be excluded income attributable to refund of tax paid under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended, and interest upon any such refund;

"'(G) Interest on Certain Government Obligations.—The normal-tax net income shall be increased by an amount equal to the amount of the interest on obligations held during the taxable year which are described in section 22 (b) (4) any part of the interest from which is excludible from gross income or allowable as a credit against net income, if the taxpayer has so elected under section 720 (d); and

"'(H) Recoveries of Bad Debts.—There shall be excluded income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if a deduction with reference to such debt was allowable from gross income for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1940.

"'(3) TAXABLE YEAR LESS THAN TWELVE MONTHS.—If the taxable year is a period of less than twelve months the excess profits net income shall be placed on an annual basis by multiplying the amount thereof by the number of days in the twelve months ending with the close of the taxable year and dividing by the number of days in the taxable year. The tax shall be such part of the tax computed on such annual basis as the number of days in the taxable year is of the number of days in the twelve months ending with the close of the taxable year.

"'(b) TAXABLE YEARS IN BASE PERIOD.—

"'(1) GENERAL RULE AND ADJUSTMENTS.—The excess profits net income for any taxable year subject to the Revenue Act of 1936 shall be the normal-tax net income, as defined in section 13 (a) of such Act; and for any other taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, and before January 1, 1940, shall be the special-class net income, as defined in section 14 (a) of the applicable revenue law. In either case the following adjustments shall be made (for additional adjustments in case of certain reorganizations, see section 742 (e)):

"'(A) Income Taxes.—The deduction for taxes shall be increased by an amount equal to the tax (not including the tax under section 102) for such taxable year under Title I or Chapter 1, as the case may be, of the revenue law applicable to such year;

"'(B) Long-Term Gains and Losses.—There shall be excluded long-term capital gains and losses. There shall be excluded the excess of gains from the sale or exchange of property held for more than eighteen months which is of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l) over the losses from the sale or exchange of such property;

"'(C) Income From Retirement or Discharge of Bonds, and So Forth.—There shall be excluded, in the case of any taxpayer, income derived from the retirement or discharge by the taxpayer of any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than eighteen months, including, in case the issuance was at a premium, the amount includible in income for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge;

"'(D) Deductions on Account of Retirement or Discharge of Bonds, and So Forth.—If during the taxable year the taxpayer retires or discharges any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than eighteen months, the following deductions for such taxable year shall not be allowed:

"'(i) The deduction allowable under section 23 (a) for expenses paid or incurred in connection with such retirement or discharge;

"'(ii) The deduction for losses allowable by reason of such retirement or discharge; and

"'(iii) In case the issuance was at a discount, the amount deductible for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge;

"'(E) Casualty, Demolition, and Similar Losses.—Deductions under section 23 (f) for losses arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, or arising from the demolition, abandonment or loss of useful value of property not compensated for by insurance or otherwise shall not be allowed;

"'(F) Repayment of Processing Tax to Vendees.—The deduction under section 23 (a) for any taxable year for expenses shall be decreased by an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount deductible on account of any repayment or credit by the corporation to its vendee of any amount attributable to any tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 as amended as the excess of the aggregate of the amounts so deductible in the base period over the aggregate of the amounts attributable to taxes under such Act collected from its vendees which were includible in the corporation's gross income in the base period and which were not paid bears to the aggregate of the amounts so deductible in the base period;

"'(G) Payment of Judgments, and So Forth.—Deductions attributable to any claim, award, judgment, or decree against the taxpayer, or interest on any of the foregoing, shall not be allowed if in the light of the taxpayer's business it was abnormal for the taxpayer to incur a liability of such character or, if the taxpayer normally incurred such liability, the amount of such liability in the taxable year was grossly disproportionate to the amount of such liability in the four previous taxable years;

"'(H) All expenditures for intangible drilling and development costs paid or incurred in or for the drilling of wells or the preparation of wells for the production of oil or gas, or expenditures for development costs in the case of mines, which the taxpayer has deducted from gross income as an expense, shall not be allowed to the extent that in the light of the taxpayer's business it was abnormal for the taxpayer to incur a liability of such character or, if the taxpayer normally incurred such liability, to the extent that the amount of such liability in the taxable year was grossly disproportionate to the amount of such liability in the four previous taxable years; and

"'(I) Dividends Received.—The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to dividends on stock of domestic corporations.

"'(2) CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES.—For the purposes of this subsection the normal-tax net income and the special-class net income referred to in paragraph (1) shall be computed as if section 23 (g) (2), section 23 (k) (2), and section 117 were part of the revenue law applicable to the taxable year the excess profits net income of which is being computed, with the exception that the net short-term capital loss carry-over provided in subsection (e) of section 117 shall be applicable to net short-term capital losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1934. Such exception shall not apply for the purposes of computing the tax under this subchapter for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1941.

"'SEC. 712. Excess profits credit—allowance.

"'(a) DOMESTIC CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a domestic corporation which was in existence before January 1, 1940, the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall, at the election of the taxpayer made in its return for such taxable year, be an amount computed under section 713 or section 714. (For election in case of certain reorganizations of corporations not qualified under the preceding sentence, see section 741.) In the case of all other domestic corporations the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714. In the case of a domestic corporation which for any taxable year does not file a return before the expiration of the time prescribed by law for filing such return, the excess profits credit for such taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714.

"'(b) FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein, the first taxable year of which under this subchapter begins on any date in 1940, which was in existence on the day forty-eight months prior to such date and which at any time during each of the taxable years in such forty-eight months was engaged in trade or business within the United States or had an office or place of business therein, the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall, at the election of the taxpayer in its return for such taxable year, be an amount computed under section 713 or section 714. In the case of all other such foreign corporations the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714. In the case of a foreign corporation which for any taxable year does not file a return before the expiration of the time prescribed by law for filing such return, the excess profits credit for such taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714.

"'SEC. 713. Excess profits credit—based on income.

"'(a) AMOUNT OF EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT.—The excess profits credit for any taxable year, computed under this section, shall be—

"'(1) DOMESTIC CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a domestic corporation—

"'(A) 95 per centum of the average base period net income, as defined in subsection (b),

"'(B) Plus 8 per centum of the net capital addition as defined in subsection (c), or

"'(C) Minus 6 per centum of the net capital reduction as defined in subsection (c).

"'(2) FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a foreign corporation, 95 per centum of the average base period net income.

"'(b) AVERAGE BASE PERIOD NET INCOME.—For the purposes of this section the average base period net income of the taxpayer shall be determined as follows:

"'(1) By computing the aggregate of the excess profits net income for each of the taxable years of the taxpayer beginning after December 31, 1935, and before January 1, 1940, reduced, in the case of each such taxable year in which the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, by the amount attributable to such excess under paragraph (4);

"'(2) By dividing the amount ascertained under paragraph (1) by the total number of months in all such taxable years; and

"'(3) By multiplying the amount ascertained under paragraph (2) by twelve.

"'(4) For the purposes of paragraph (1)—

"'(A) In determining whether, for any taxable year, the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, and in determining the amount of such excess, the adjustments provided in section 711 (b) (1) shall be made; and

"'(B) The amount attributable to any taxable year in which there is such an excess shall be the amount of such excess, except that such amount shall be zero if there is only one such year, or, if more than one, shall be zero for the year in which such excess is the greatest.

"'(5) For the purposes of paragraph (1), if the taxpayer was in existence during only part of the 48 months preceding the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter (hereinafter in this paragraph called "base period"), its excess profits net income—

"'(A) for each taxable year of twelve months (beginning with the beginning of such base period) during which it was not in existence, shall be an amount equal to 8 per centum of the excess of—

"'(i) the daily invested capital for the first day of the taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, over

"'(ii) an amount equal to the same percentage of such daily invested capital as is applicable under section 720 in reduction of the average invested capital of the preceding taxable year;

"'(B) for the taxable year of less than twelve months consisting of that part of the remainder of the base period during which it was not in existence, shall be the amount ascertained for a full year under subparagraph (A), multiplied by the number of days in such taxable year of less than twelve months and divided by the number of days in the twelve months ending with the close of such taxable year.

"'(6) In no case shall the average base period net income be less than zero.

"'(7) For computation of average base period net income in case of certain reorganizations, see section 742.

"'(C) Adjustments in excess profits credit on account of capital changes: For the purposes of section—

"'(1) The net capital addition for the taxable year shall be the excess, divided by the number of days in the taxable year, of the aggregate of the daily capital addition for each day of the taxable year over the aggregate of the daily capital reduction for each day of the taxable year.

"'(2) The net capital reduction for the taxable year shall be the excess, divided by the number of days in the taxable year, of the aggregate of the daily capital reduction for each day of the taxable year over the aggregate of the daily capital addition for each day of the taxable year.

"'(3) The daily capital addition for any day of the taxable year shall be the aggregate of the amounts of money and property paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital, after the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter and prior to such day. In determining the amount of any property paid in, such property shall be included in an amount determined in the manner provided in section 718 (a) (2). A distribution by the taxpayer to its shareholders in its stock or rights to acquire its stock shall not be regarded as money or property paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital. The amount ascertained under this paragraph shall be reduced by the excess, if any, of the excluded capital for such day over the excluded capital for the first day of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter. For the purposes of this paragraph the excluded capital for any day shall be an amount equal to the sum of the following:

"'(A) The aggregate of the adjusted basis (for determining loss upon sale or exchange) as of the beginning of such day, of obligations held by the taxpayer at the beginning of such day, which are described in section 22 (b) (4) (A), (B), or (C) any part of the interest from which is excludible from gross income or allowable as a credit against net income; and

"'(B) The aggregate of the adjusted basis (for determining loss upon sale or exchange) as of the beginning of such day, of stock of domestic corporations held by the taxpayer at the beginning of such day.

The daily capital addition shall in no case be less than zero. (For daily capital additions and reductions in case of certain reorganizations, see section 743.)

"'(4) The daily capital reduction for any day of the taxable year shall be the aggregate of the amounts of distributions to shareholders, not out of earnings and profits, after the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter and prior to such day.

"'SEC. 714. Excess profits credit—based on invested capital.

"'The excess profits credit, for any taxable year, computed under this section, shall be an amount equal to 8 per centum of the taxpayer's invested capital for the taxable year, determined under section 715.

"'SEC. 715. Definition of invested capital.

"'For the purposes of this subchapter the invested capital for any taxable year shall be the average invested capital for such year, determined under section 716, reduced by an amount computed under section 720 (relating to inadmissible assets). If the Commissioner finds that in any case the determination of invested capital, on a basis other than a daily basis, will produce an invested capital differing by not more than $1,000 from an invested capital determined on a daily basis, he may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, provide for such determination on such other basis. (For computation of invested capital in case of foreign corporations and corporations entitled to the benefits of section 251, see section 724.)

"'SEC. 716. Average invested capital.

"'The average invested capital for any taxable year shall be the aggregate of the daily invested capital for each day of such taxable year, divided by the number of days in such taxable year.

"'SEC. 717. Daily invested capital.

"'The daily invested capital for any day of the taxable year shall be the sum of the equity invested capital for such day plus the borrowed invested capital for such day determined under section 719.

"'SEC. 718. Equity Invested Capital.

"'(a) DEFINITION.—The equity invested capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be the sum of the following amounts, reduced as provided in subsection (b)—

"'(1) MONEY PAID IN.—Money previously paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital;

"'(2) PROPERTY PAID IN.—Property (other than money) previously paid in (regardless of the time paid in) for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital. Such property shall be included in an amount equal to its basis (unadjusted) for determining loss upon sale or exchange. If the property was disposed of before such taxable year, such basis shall be determined in the same manner as if the property were still held at the beginning of such taxable year. If such unadjusted basis is a substituted basis it shall be adjusted, with respect to the period before the property was paid in, in the manner provided in section 113 (b) (2);

"'(3) DISTRIBUTIONS IN STOCK.—Distributions in stock—

"'(A) Made prior to such taxable year to the extent to which they are considered distributions of earnings and profits; and

"'(B) Previously made during such taxable year to the extent to which they are considered distributions of earnings and profits other than earnings and profits of such taxable year;

"'(4) Earnings and profits at beginning of year: The accumulated earnings and profits as of the beginning of such taxable year; and

"'(5) Increase on account of gain on tax-free liquidation: In the case of the previous receipt of property (other than property described in the last sentence of section 113 (a) (15)) by the taxpayer in complete liquidation of another corporation under section 112 (b) (6), or the corresponding provision of a prior revenue law, an amount, with respect to each such liquidation, equal to the amount by which the aggregate of the amount of the money so received and of the adjusted basis, at the time of receipt, of all property (other than money) so received, exceeds the sum of:

"'(A) The aggregate of the adjusted basis of each share of stock with respect to which such property was received; such adjusted basis of each share to be determined immediately prior to the receipt of any property in such liquidation with respect to such share, and

"'(B) The aggregate of the liabilities of such other corporation assumed by the taxpayer in connection with the receipt of such property, of the liabilities (not assumed by the taxpayer) to which such property so received was subject, and of any other consideration (other than the stock with respect to which such property was received) given by the taxpayer for such property so received.

"'(b) REDUCTION IN EQUITY INVESTED CAPITAL.—The amount by which the equity invested capital for any day shall be reduced as provided in subsection (a) shall be the sum of the following amounts—

"'(1) DISTRIBUTIONS IN PREVIOUS YEARS.—Distributions made prior to such taxable year which were not out of accumulated earnings and profits;

"'(2) DISTRIBUTIONS DURING THE YEAR.—Distributions previously made during such taxable year which are not out of the earnings and profits of such taxable year;

"'(3) EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF ANOTHER CORPORATION.—The earnings and profits of another corporation which previously at any time were included in accumulated earnings and profits by reason of a transaction described in section 112 (b) to (e), both inclusive, or in the corresponding provision of a prior revenue law, or by reason of the transfer by such other corporation to the taxpayer of property the basis of which in the hands of the taxpayer is or was determined with reference to its basis in the hands of such other corporation, or would have been so determined if the property had been other than money; and

"'(4) REDUCTION ON ACCOUNT OF LOSS ON TAX-FREE LIQUIDATION.—In the case of the previous receipt of property (other than property described in the last sentence of section 113 (a) (15)) by the taxpayer in complete liquidation of another corporation under section 112 (b) (6), or the corresponding provision of a prior revenue law, an amount, with respect to each such liquidation, equal to the amount by which the sum of—

"'(A) The aggregate of the adjusted basis of each share of stock with respect to which such property was received; such adjusted basis of each share to be determined immediately prior to the receipt of any property in such liquidation with respect to such share, and

"'(B) The aggregate of the liabilities of such other corporation assumed by the taxpayer in connection with the receipt of such property, of the liabilities (not assumed by the taxpayer) to which such property so received was subject, and of any other consideration (other than the stock with respect to which such property was received) given by the taxpayer for such property so received, exceeds the aggregate of the amount of the money so received and of the adjusted basis, at the time of receipt, of all property (other than money) so received. The amount of the reduction under this paragraph shall not exceed the accumulated earnings and profits as of the beginning of such taxable year.

"'(c) RULES FOR APPLICATION OF SUBSECTIONS (a) AND (b).—For the purposes of subsections (a) and (b)—

"'(1) DISTRIBUTIONS TO SHAREHOLDERS.—The term "distribution" means a distribution by a corporation to its shareholders, and the term "distribution in stock" means a distribution by a corporation in its stock or rights to acquire its stock. To the extent that a distribution in stock is not considered a distribution of earnings and profits it shall not be considered a distribution. A distribution in stock shall not be regarded as money or property paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital.

"'(2) DISTRIBUTIONS IN FIRST SIXTY DAYS OF TAXABLE YEAR.—In the application of such subsections to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1940, so much of the distributions (taken in the order of time) made during the first sixty days thereof as does not exceed the accumulated earnings and profits as of the beginning thereof (computed without regard to this paragraph) shall be considered to have been made on the last day of the preceding taxable year.

"'(3) COMPUTATION OF EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF TAXABLE YEAR.—For the purposes of subsections (a) (3) (B) and (b) (2) in determining whether a distribution is out of the earnings and profits of any taxable year, such earnings and profits shall be computed as of the close of such taxable year without diminution by reason of any distribution made during such taxable year or by reason of the tax under this subchapter for such year and the determination shall be made without regard to the amount of earnings and profits at the time the distribution was made.

"'(4) STOCK IN CASE OF MERGER OR CONSOLIDATION.—If a corporation owns stock in another corporation, and—

"'(A) such corporations are merged or consolidated in a statutory merger or consolidation, or

"'(B) such corporations are parties to a transaction which results in the elimination of such stock in a manner similar to that resulting from a statutory merger or consolidation, then such stock shall not be considered as property paid in for stock of or as paid-in surplus of, or as a contribution to capital of, the corporation resulting from the transaction referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B).

"'(d) For special rules affecting computation of property paid in for stock in connection with certain exchanges and liquidations, see section 751 (a).

"'(e) For determination of equity invested capital in special cases, see section 723.

"'SEC. 719. Borrowed Invested Capital.

"'(a) BORROWED CAPITAL.—The borrowed capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be the sum of the following:

"'(1) The amount of the outstanding indebtedness (not including interest, and not including indebtedness described in section 751 (b) relating to certain exchanges) of the taxpayer which is evidenced by a bond, note, bill of exchange, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust, plus,

"'(2) In the case of a taxpayer having a contract (made before the expiration of 30 days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940) with a foreign government to furnish articles, materials, or supplies to such foreign government, if such contract provides for advance payment and for repayment by the vendor of any part of such advance payment upon cancellation of the contract by such foreign government, the amount which would be required to be so repaid if cancellation occurred at the beginning of such day, but no amount shall be considered as borrowed capital under this paragraph which has been includible in gross income.

"'(b) BORROWED INVESTED CAPITAL.—The borrowed invested capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be an amount equal to 50 per centum of the borrowed capital for such day.

"'SEC. 720. Admissible and inadmissible assets.

"'(a) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this subchapter—

"'(1) The term "inadmissible assets" means—

"'2 (A) Stock in corporations except stock in a foreign personal-holding company; and

"'(B) Except as provided in subsection (d), obligations described in section 22 (b) (4) any part of the interest from which is excludible from gross income or allowable as a credit against net income.

"'(2) The term "admissible assets" means all assets other than inadmissible assets.

"'RATIO OF INADMISSIBLES TO TOTAL ASSETS.—The amount by which the average invested capital for any taxable year shall be reduced as provided in section 715 shall be an amount which is the same percentage of such average invested capital as the percentage which the total of the inadmissible assets is of the total of admissible and inadmissible assets. For such purposes, the amount attributable to each asset held at any time during such taxable year shall be determined by ascertaining the adjusted basis thereof (or, in the case of money, the amount thereof) for each day of such taxable year so held and adding such daily amounts. The determination of such daily amounts shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The adjusted basis shall be the adjusted basis for determining loss upon sale or exchange as determined under section 113.

"'(c) COMPUTATION IF SHORT-TERM CAPITAL GAIN.—If during the taxable year there has been a short-term capital gain with respect to an inadmissible asset, then so much of the amount attributable to such inadmissible asset under subsection (b) as bears the same ratio thereto as such gain bears to the sum of such gain plus the dividends and interest on such asset for such year, shall, for the purpose of determining the ratio of inadmissible assets to the total of admissible and inadmissible assets, be added to the total of admissible assets and subtracted from the total of inadmissible assets.

"'(d) Treatment of Government obligations as admissible assets: If the excess profits credit for any taxable year is computed under section 714, the taxpayer may in its return for such year elect to increase its normal-tax net income for such taxable year elect to amount equal to the amount of the interest on all obligations held during the taxable year which are described in section 22 (b) (4) any part of the interest from which is excludible from gross income or allowable as a credit against net income. In such case, for the purposes of this section, the term "admissible assets" includes such obligations, and the term "inadmisible assets" does not include such obligations.

"'SEC. 721. Abnormalities in income in taxable period.

"'If there is includible in the gross income of the taxpayer for any taxable year an item of income of any one or more of the following classes:

"'(a) Arising out of a claim, award, judgment, or decree, or interest on any of the foregoing; or

"'(b) Constituting an amount payable under a contract the performance of which required more than 12 months; or

"'(c) Resulting from exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property, patents, formulae, or processes, or any combination of the foregoing, extending over a period of more than 12 months; or

"'(d) Includible in gross income for the taxable year rather than for a different taxable year by reason of a change in the taxpayer's accounting period or method of accounting; or

"'(e) In the case of a lessor of real property, amounts included in gross income for the taxable year by reason of the termination of the lease; or

"'(f) Dividends on stock of foreign corporations, except foreign personal holding companies; and, in the light of the taxpayer's business, it is abnormal for the taxpayer to derive income of such class, or, if the taxpayer normally derives income of such class, the item includible in the gross income of the taxable year is grossly disproportionate to the gross income of the same class in the four previous taxable years, then: (1) the amount of such item attributable to any previous taxable year or years shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary; (2) the amount of such item attributable to any future taxable year or years shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary and shall, for the purposes of this subchapter, be included in the gross income for the future year or years to which attributable; and (3) the tax under this subchapter for the taxable year (in which the whole of such item would, without regard to this section, be includible) shall not exceed the sum of:

"'(A) The tax under this subchapter for such taxable year computed without the inclusion in gross income of the portion of such item which is attributable to any other taxable year, and

"'(B) The aggregate of the increase in the tax under this subchapter which would have resulted for each previous taxable year to which any portion of such item is attributable, computed as if an amount equal to such portion had been included in gross income for such previous taxable year.

"'SEC. 722. Adjustment of abnormalities in income and capital by the Commissioner.

"'For the purposes of this subchapter, the Commissioner shall also have authority to make such adjustments as may be necessary to adjust abnormalities affecting income or capital, and his decision shall be subject to review by the United States Board of Tax Appeals.

"'SEC. 723. Equity invested capital in special cases.

"'Where the Commissioner determines that the equity invested capital as of the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter cannot be determined in accordance with section 718, the equity invested capital as of the beginning of such year shall be an amount equal to the sum of (a) the money plus (b) the aggregate of the adjusted basis of the assets of the taxpayer held by the taxpayer at such time, such sum being reduced by the indebtedness outstanding at such time. The amount of the money, assets, and indebtedness at such time shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In such case, the equity invested capital for each day after the beginning of the taxpayers' first taxable year under this subchapter shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, using as the basic figure the equity invested capital as so determined.

"'SEC. 724. Foreign Corporations and Corporations Entitled to Benefits of Section 251—Invested Capital.

"'Notwithstanding section 715, in the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein, and in the case of a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, the invested capital for any taxable year shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, under which—

"'(a) GENERAL RULE.—The daily invested capital for any day of the taxable year shall be the aggregate of the adjusted basis of each United States asset held by the taxpayer on the beginning of such day. In the application of section 720 in reduction of the average invested capital (determined on the basis of such daily invested capital), the terms "admissible assets" and "inadmissible assets" shall include only United States assets; or

"'(b) EXCEPTION.—If the Commissioner determines that the United States assets of the taxpayer cannot satisfactorily be segregated from its other assets, the invested capital for the taxable year shall be an amount which is the same percentage of the aggregate of the adjusted basis of all assets held by the taxpayer as of the end of the last day of the taxable year which the net income for the taxable year from sources within the United States is of the total net income of the taxpayer for such year.

"'(c) DEFINITION OF UNITED STATES ASSET.—As used in this subsection, the term "United States asset" means an asset held by the taxpayer in the United States, determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"'SEC. 725. Personal service corporations.

"'(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this subchapter, the term "personal service corporation" means a corporation whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and are the owners at all times during the taxable year of at least 70 per centum in value of each class of stock of the corporation, and in which capital is not a material income-producing factor; but does not include any foreign corporation, nor any corporation 50 per centum or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal. For the purposes of this subsection, an individual shall be considered as owning, at any time, the stock owned at such time by his spouse or minor child or by any guardian or trustee representing them.

"'(b) ELECTION AS TO TAXABILITY.—If a personal service corporation signifies, in its return under Chapter 1 for any taxable year, its desire not to be subject to the tax imposed under this subchapter for such taxable year, it shall be exempt from such tax for such year, and the provisions of Supplement S of Chapter 1 shall apply to the shareholders in such corporation who were such shareholders on the last day of such taxable year of the corporation.

"'SEC. 726. Corporations completing contracts under Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

"'(a) If the United States Maritime Commission certifies to the Commissioner that the taxpayer has completed within the taxable year any contracts or subcontracts which are subject to the provisions of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, then the tax imposed by this subchapter for such taxable year shall be, in lieu of a tax computed under section 710, a tax computed under subsection (b) of this section, if, and only if, the tax computed under subsection (b) is less than the tax computed under section 710.

"'(b) The tax computed under this subsection shall be the excess of—

"'(1) A tentative tax computed under section 710 with the normal-tax net income increased by the amount of any payments made, or to be made, to the United States Maritime Commission with respect to such contracts or subcontracts; over

"'(2) The amount of such payments.

"'SEC. 727. Exempt corporations.

"'The following corporations shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subchapter:

"'(a) Corporations exempt under section 101 from the tax imposed by Chapter 1.

"'(b) Foreign personal-holding companies, as defined in section 331.

"'(c) Mutual investment companies, as defined in section 361.

"'(d) Investment companies which under the Investment Company Act of 1940 are registered as diversified companies at all times during the taxable year. For the purposes of this subsection, if a company is so registered before July 1, 1941, it shall be considered as so registered at all times prior to the date of such registration.

"'(e) Personal-holding companies, as defined in section 501.

"'(f) Foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein.

"'(g) Domestic corporations satisfying the following conditions:

"'(1) If 95 per centum or more of the gross income of such domestic corporation for the three-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period during which the corporation was in existence) was derived from sources other than sources within the United States; and

"'(2) If 50 per centum or more of its gross income for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business.

"'(h) Any corporation subject to the provisions of Title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, in the gross income of which for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, there is includible compensation received from the United States for the transportation of mail by aircraft if, after excluding from its gross income such compensation, its adjusted excess profits net income for such year is zero or less.

"'SEC. 728. Meaning of terms used.

"'The terms used in this subchapter shall have the same meaning as when used in Chapter 1.

"'SEC. 729. Laws applicable.

"'(a) GENERAL RULE.—All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by Chapter 1, shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this subchapter, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this subchapter.

"'(b) RETURNS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), no return under section 52 (a) shall be required to be filed by any taxpayer under this subchapter for any taxable year for which its excess profits net income, computed with the adjustments provided in section 711 (a) (2) and placed on an annual basis as provided in section 711 (a) (3), is not greater than $5,000.

"'(c) FOREIGN TAXES PAID.—In the application of section 131 for the purposes of this subchapter the tax paid or accrued to any country shall be deemed to be the amount of such tax reduced by the amount of the credit allowed with respect to such tax against the tax imposed by Chapter 1.

"'(d) LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNT OF FOREIGN TAX CREDIT.—The amount of the credit taken under this section shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

"'(1) The amount of the credit in respect of the tax paid or accrued to any country shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's excess profits net income from sources within such country bears to its entire excess profits net income for the same taxable year; and

"'(2) The total amount of the credit shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's excess profits net income from sources without the United States bears to its entire excess profits net income for the same taxable year.

"'SEC. 730. Consolidated returns.

"'(a) PRIVILEGE TO FILE CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.—An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making a consolidated return for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of a consolidated return shall be upon the condition that all the corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year for which the return is made consent to all the regulations under subsection (b) prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return; and the making of a consolidated return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year the consolidated return shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group.

"'(b) REGULATIONS.—The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making a consolidated return and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the excess profits tax liability and the various factors necessary for the determination of such liability, and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability.

"'(c) COMPUTATION AND PAYMENT OF TAX.—In any case in which a consolidated return is made the tax shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. Only one specific exemption of $5,000 provided in section 710 (b) (1) shall be allowed for the entire affiliated group of corporations.

"'(d) DEFINITION OF "AFFILIATED GROUP".—As used in this section, an "affiliated group" means one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is an includible corporation if—

"'(1) At least 95 per centum of each class of the stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

"'(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 95 per centum of each class of the stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

As used in this subsection, the term "stock" does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

"'(e) Definition of "includible corporation": As used in this section, the term "includible corporation" means any corporation except—

"'(1) Corporations exempt from the tax imposed by this subchapter.

"'(2) Foreign corporations.

"'(3) Corporations organized under the China Trade Act, 1922.

"'(4) Corporations entitled to the benefits of section 251, by reason of receiving a large percentage of their income from possessions of the United States.

"'(5) Personal service corporations.

"'(6) Insurance companies subject to taxation under section 201, 204, or 207.

"'(f) Includible insurance companies: Despite the provisions of paragraph (6) of subsection (e), two or more domestic insurance companies each of which is subject to taxation under the same section of Chapter 1 shall be considered as includible corporations for the purpose of the application of subsection (d) to such insurance companies alone.

"'(g) Subsidiary formed to comply with foreign law: In the case of a domestic corporation owning or controlling, directly or indirectly, 100 per centum of the capital stock (exclusive of directors' qualifying shares) of a corporation organized under the laws of a contiguous foreign country and maintained solely for the purpose of complying with the laws of such country as to title and operation of property, such foreign corporation may, at the option of the domestic corporation, be treated for the purpose of this subchapter as a domestic corporation.

"'(h) Suspension of running of statute of limitations: If a notice under section 272 (a) in respect of a deficiency for any taxable year is mailed to a corporation, the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations, provided in section 277, shall apply in the case of corporations with which such corporation made a consolidated return for such taxable year.

"'SEC. 731. Corporations engaged in mining of strategic metals.

"'In the case of any domestic corporation engaged in the mining of tungsten, quicksilver, manganese, platinum, antimony, chromite, or tin, the portion of the adjusted excess profits net income attributable to such mining in the United States shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subchapter. The tax on the remaining portion of such adjusted excess profits net income shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the tax computed without regard to this section as such remaining portion bears to the entire adjusted excess profits net income.

"'PART II—RULES IN CONNECTION WITH CERTAIN EXCHANGES

"'Supplement A—Excess Profits Credit Based on Income

"'SEC. 740 Definitions.

"'For the purposes of this Supplement—

"'(a) ACQUIRING CORPORATIONS.—The term "acquiring corporation" means—

"'(1) A corporation which has acquired—

"'(A) substantially all the properties of another corporation and the whole or a part of the consideration for the transfer of such properties is the transfer to such other corporation of all the stock of all classes (except qualifying shares) of the corporation which has acquired such properties, or

"'(B) substantially all the properties of another corporation and the sole consideration for the transfer of such properties is the transfer to such other corporation of voting stock of the corporation which has acquired such properties, or

"'(C) before October 1, 1940, properties of another corporation solely as paid-in surplus or a contribution to capital in respect of voting stock owned by such other corporation.

For the purposes of subparagraphs (B) and (C) in determining whether such voting stock or such paid-in surplus or contribution to capital, is the sole consideration, the assumption by the acquiring corporation of a liability of the other, or the fact that property acquired is subject to a liability, shall be disregarded. Subparagraph (B) or (C) shall apply only if the corporation transferring such properties is forthwith completely liquidated in pursuance of the plan under which the acquisition is made, and the transaction of which the acquisition is a part has the effect of a statutory merger or consolidation.

"'(2) A corporation which has acquired property from another corporation in a transaction with respect to which gain or loss was not recognized under section 112 (b) (6) of Chapter 1 or a corresponding provision of a prior revenue law;

"'(3) A corporation the result of a statutory merger of two or more corporations; or

"'(4) A corporation the result of a statutory consolidation of two or more corporations.

"'(b) COMPONENT CORPORATION.—The term "Component corporation" means—

"'(1) In the case of a transaction described in subsection (a) (1), the corporation which transferred the assets;

"'(2) In the case of a transaction described in subsection (a) (2), the corporation the property of which was acquired;

"'(3) In the case of a statutory merger, all corporations merged, except the corporation resulting from the merger; or

"'(4) In the case of a statutory consolidation, all corporations consolidated, except the corporation resulting from the consolidation.

"'(c) QUALIFIED COMPONENT CORPORATION.—The term "qualified component corporation" means a component corporation which was in existence on the date of the beginning of the taxpayer's base period.

"'(d) BASE PERIOD.—In the case of a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation the base period shall be:

"'(1) If the tax is being computed for any taxable year beginning in 1940, the forty-eight months preceding the beginning of such taxable year; or

"'(2) If the tax is being computed for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1940, the forty-eight months preceding what would have been its first taxable year beginning in 1940 if it had had a taxable year beginning in 1940 on the date on which the taxable year for which the tax is being computed began.

"'(e) BASE PERIOD YEARS.—In the case of a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation its base period years shall be the four successive twelve-month periods beginning on the same date as the beginning of its base period.

"'(f) EXISTENCE OF ACQUIRING CORPORATION.—For the purposes of subsection (c) and section 741, if any component corporation was in existence on the date of the beginning of the taxpayer's base period (either actually or by reason of this subsection), its acquiring corporation shall be considered to have been in existence on such date.

"'(g) COMPONENT CORPORATIONS OF COMPONENT CORPORATIONS.—If a corporation is a component corporation of an acquiring corporation, under subsection (b) or under this subsection, it shall (except for the purposes of section 742 (d) (1) and (2) and section 743 (a)) also be a component corporation of the corporation of which such acquiring corporation is a component corporation.

"'SEC. 741. Election of income credit.

"'In addition to the corporations which under section 712 (a) may elect the excess profits credit computed under section 713 or the excess profits credit computed under section 714, a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation which was in existence on the date of the beginning of its base period shall have such election.

"'SEC. 742. Average base period net income.

"'In the case of a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation which was actually in existence on the date of the beginning of its base period, or which is entitled under section 741 to elect the excess profits credit computed under section 713, its average base period net income (for the purpose of the credit computed under section 713) shall be computed as follows, in lieu of the method provided in section 713:

"'(a) By ascertaining with respect to each of its base period years—

"'(1) The amount of its excess profits net income for each of its taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935, and ending with or within such base period year; or, in the case of each such taxable year in which the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, the amount of such excess;

"'(2) With respect to each of its qualified component corporations, the amount of its excess profits net income for each of its taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935, and ending with or within such base period year of the taxpayer; or, in the case of each such taxable year in which the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, the amount of such excess;

"'(3) (A) The aggregate of the amounts of excess profits net income ascertained under paragraphs (1) and (2); (B) the aggregate of the excesses ascertained under paragraphs (1) and (2); and (C) the difference between the aggregates found under clause (A) and clause (B). If the aggregate ascertained under clause (A) is greater than the aggregate found under clause (B), the difference shall for the purposes of subsection (b) be designated a "plus amount", and if the aggregate ascertained under clause (B) is greater than the aggregate found under clause (A), the difference shall for the purposes of subsection (b) be designated a "minus amount".

"'(b) By adding the plus amounts ascertained under subsection (a) (3) for each year of the base period; and by subtracting from such sum, if for two or more years of the base period there was a minus amount, the sum of such minus amounts, excluding the greatest.

"'(c) By dividing the amount ascertained under subsection (b) by four.

"'(d) In no case shall the average base period net income be less than zero. In the case of a taxpayer which becomes an acquiring corporation in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, if, on September 11, 1940, and at all times until the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation—

"'(1) the taxpayer owned not less than 75 per centum of each class of stock of each of the qualified component corporations involved in the transaction in which the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation; or

"'(2) one of the qualified component corporations involved in the transaction owned not less than 75 per centum of each class of stock of the taxpayer, and of each of the other qualified component corporations involved in the transaction, the average base period net income of the taxpayer shall not be less than (A) the average base period net income of that one of its qualified component corporations involved in the transaction the average base period net income of which is greatest, or (B) the average base period net income of the taxpayer computed without regard to the base period net income of any of its qualified component corporations involved in the transaction.

"'(e) For the purposes of subsection (a) (1) and (2) of this section—

"'(1) There shall be excluded, in the various computations, any dividends paid by the taxpayer or any of its qualified component corporations during any of the taxable years of the payor which are included in the computation of the taxpayer's average base period net income. If the payor corporation is a corporation described in subsection (f) (1) or (2) of this section, the dividends to be excluded under this paragraph shall be only such as are paid after such payor corporation first became an acquiring corporation; and

"'(2) In determining whether, for any taxable year, the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, and in determining the amount of such excess, the adjustments provided in section 711 (b) (1) shall be made.

"'(f) (1) In the case of a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation and which was not actually in existence on the date of the beginning of its base period, there shall be excluded from the various computations under subsection (a) (1) of this section the portion of its excess profits net income, or of the excess over gross income therein referred to, which is attributable to any period before it first became an acquiring corporation.

"'(2) In the case of a component corporation which became a qualified component corporation only by reason of section 740 (f), there shall be excluded from the various computations under subsection (a) (2) of this section the portion of its excess profits net income, or of the excess over gross income therein referred to, which is attributable to any period before it first became an acquiring corporation.

"'(3) In the case of a qualified component corporation which was actually in existence on the date of the beginning of the taxpayer's base period, there shall be excluded from the various computations under subsection (a) (2) of this section the portion of its excess profits net income, or of the excess over gross income therein referred to, which is attributable to the period before such date.

"'(4) If during the taxable year for which tax is computed under this subchapter the taxpayer acquires assets in a transaction which constitutes it an acquiring corporation, the amount includible under subsection (a) (2), attributable to such transaction, shall be limited to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount computed without regard to this paragraph as the number of days in the taxable year after such transaction bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.

"'SEC. 743. Net capital changes.

"'(a) For the purposes of section 713 (c), upon the date of the transaction which constitutes a corporation an acquiring corporation, there shall be added to its daily capital addition or reduction for such day, the net capital addition or reduction, as the case may be, of each of the component corporations involved in such transaction, but no other capital addition or reduction shall be considered as having been made by reason of such transaction.

"'(b) For the purposes of this section—

"'(1) In computing the net capital addition of each such component corporation there shall be disregarded property paid in to such corporation by the taxpayer or by any of its component corporations.

"'(2) In computing the net capital reduction of each such component corporation there shall be disregarded distributions made to the taxpayer or to any of such component corporations.

"'SEC. 744. Foreign corporations.

"The term "corporation" as used in this Supplement does not include a foreign corporation.

"'Supplement B—Highest Bracket Amount and Invested Capital

"'SEC. 750. Definitions

"'As used in this Supplement—

"'(a) EXCHANGE.—The term "exchange" means an exchange, to which section 112 (b) (4) or (5) or so much of section 112 (c), (d), or (e) as refers to section 112 (b) (4) or (5), or to which a corresponding provision of a prior revenue law, is or was applicable, by one corporation of its property wholly or in part for stock or securities of another corporation, or a transfer of property by one corporation to another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in the hands of such other corporation is or was determined under section 113 (a) (8) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"'(b) TRANSFEROR UPON AN EXCHANGE.—The term "transferor upon an exchange" means a corporation which upon an exchange transfers property to another corporation in exchange, wholly or in part, for stock or securities of such other corporation, or transfers property to another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in the hands of such other corporation is or was determined under section 113 (a) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"'(c) TRANSFEREE UPON AN EXCHANGE.—The term "transferee upon an exchange" means a corporation which upon an exchange acquires property from another corporation in exchange, wholly or in part, for its stock or securities, or which acquires property from another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in its hands is or was determined under section 113 (a) (8) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"'(d) Control: The term "control" means the ownership of stock possessing at least 90 per centum of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and at least 90 per centum of the total value of shares of all classes of stock of the corporation.

"'(e) Highest Bracket Amount: The term "highest bracket amount" means $500,000 or the highest bracket amount computed under section 752, whichever is the smaller.

"'SEC. 751. Determination of property paid in for stock and of borrowed capital in connection with certain exchanges.

"'(a) PROPERTY PAID IN FOR STOCK.—In the application of section 718 (a) to a transferee upon an exchange in determining the amount paid in for stock of the transferee, or as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital of the transferee, in connection with such exchange, only an amount shall be deemed to have been so paid in equal to the excess of the basis in the hands of the transferee of the property of the transferor received by the transferee upon the exchange over the sum of—

"'(1) Any liability of the transferor assumed upon such exchange and any liability subject to which the property was received upon such exchange, plus

"'(2) The aggregate of the amount of money and the fair market value of any other property transferred to the transferor not permitted to be received by such transferor without the recognition of gain.

"'(b) BORROWED CAPITAL.—In the application of section 719 (a) to a transferee upon an exchange, the term "Borrowed capital" shall not include indebtedness originally evidenced by securities issued by the transferee upon such exchange as consideration for the property of the transferor received by the transferee upon such exchange if (1) such securities were property permitted to be received by the person to whom such securities were issued without the recognition of gain and (2) the indebtedness originally evidenced by such securities did not arise out of indebtedness of the transferor (other than indebtedness which in the transferor's hands was subject to the limitations of this subsection) assumed by the transferee in connection with such exchange.

"'SEC. 752. Computation of highest bracket amount in connection with exchanges.

"'(a) SPECIAL APPLICATION OF DAILY INVESTED CAPITAL OF TRANSFEROR UPON EXCHANGE.—For the purposes of this section, the daily invested capital of a transferor upon an exchange for the day after the exchange shall be the daily invested capital determined under section 717 reduced by an amount equal to the amount by which the equity invested capital of the transferee upon such exchange was increased by reason of the receipt of property from such transferor upon such exchange.

"'(b) HIGHEST BRACKET AMOUNT OF TRANSFEROR.—

"'(1) TAXABLE YEAR OF EXCHANGE.—In the case of a transferor upon an exchange after the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter, its highest bracket amount for the taxable year in which the exchange takes place shall be the sum of—

"'(A) Its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange multiplied by the number of days in the taxable year up to and including the day of the exchange, plus

"'(B) Its highest bracket amount for the taxable year after the exchange, multiplied by the number of days in the taxable year remaining after the day of the exchange, divided by the number of days in the taxable year.

"'(2) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER EXCHANGE INVOLVING CONTROL.—In the case of a transferor upon an exchange after the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter, if immediately after the exchange the transferor or its shareholders, or both, are in control of the transferee, the transferor's highest bracket amount for any taxable year after the taxable year in which the exchange takes place shall be an amount which is a percentage of its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange equal to the percentage which its daily invested capital for the day after the exchange is of its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange.

"'(3) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER EXCHANGE NOT INVOLVING CONTROL.—In the case of a transferor upon an exchange (other than a transferor described in paragraph (4) of this subsection) after the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter, if immediately after the exchange no transferor or its shareholders, or both, upon the exchange are in control of the transferee, and if the shareholders of the transferee immediately preceding the exchange are not in control of the transferee immediately after the exchange, the transferor's highest bracket amount for any taxable year after the exchange shall be the excess, if any, of the sum of the transferor's highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange and the transferee's highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange, over $500,000.

"'(4) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER CERTAIN EXCHANGES UNDER SECTION 112 (b) (5).—In the case of an exchange after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of any transferor or transferee upon such exchange, involving two or more transferors, or one or more transferors and one or more other persons, if immediately after the exchange no one of such transferors, or shareholders, or both, and no one or more of such other persons are in control of the transferee and if such exchange is an exchange described in section 112 (b) (5) or so much of section 112 (c) or 112 (e) as refers to section 112 (b) (5), the highest bracket amount of any such transferor for any taxable year after the exchange shall be an amount equal to its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange—

"'(A) Minus an amount which bears the same ratio to its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange as the excess of its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange over its daily invested capital for the day after the exchange bears to its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange, and

"'(B) Plus an amount which bears the same ratio to the excess over $500,000 of the sum of the amounts computed under subparagraph (A) with respect to each transferor, as the amount computed under subparagraph (A) with respect to such transferor bears to the sum of the amounts computed under such subparagraph with respect to each transferor.

"'(c) Highest bracket amount of transferee.

"'(1) Taxable year of exchange involving control: In the case of a transferee upon an exchange after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of a transferor upon such exchange the transferee's highest bracket amount for the taxable year in which the exchange takes place shall be the sum of—

"'(A) Its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange multiplied by the number of days in the taxable year up to and including the day of the exchange, plus divided by the number of days in the taxable year. For the purposes of this paragraph and subsection (d) of this section "exchange" includes a liquidation described in paragraph (5) of this subsection, and such exchange shall be deemed to have taken place on the day such liquidation was completed.

"'(2) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER EXCHANGE INVOLVING CONTROL.—In the case of a transferee upon an exchange after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of a transferor upon such exchange, if immediately after the exchange any transferor upon such exchange or its shareholders, or both, are in control of the transferee, the transferee's highest bracket amount for any taxable year afer the exchange shall be an amount which is a percentage of such transferor's highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange equal to the percentage which the excess of the transferee's daily invested capital for the day after the exchange over its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange is of such transferor's daily invested capital for the day of the exchange.

"'(3) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER EXCHANGE NOT INVOLVING CONTROL.—In the case of a transferee upon an exchange (other than a transferee described in paragraph (4) of this subsection) after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of a transferor upon such exchange, if immediately after the exchange no transferor or its shareholders, or both, are in control of the transferee, and if the shareholders of the transferee immediately preceding the exchange are not in control of the transferee immediately after the exchange, the transferee's highest bracket amount for any taxable year after the exchange shall be an amount equal to (A) the sum of the transferor's highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange and the transferee's highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange, or (B) $500,000, whichever is the smaller.

"'(4) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER CERTAIN EXCHANGES UNDER SECTION 112 (B) (5).—In the case of an exchange described in subsection (b) (4) of this section, the highest bracket amount of the transferee upon such exchange for any taxable year after the exchange shall be an amount equal (A) to the sum of the amounts computed under subparagraph (A) of such subsection with respect to each transferor or (B) $500,000, whichever is the smaller.

"'(5) TAXABLE YEARS AFTER LIQUIDATION IN CASE OF CORPORATION RECEIVING PROPERTY UNDER SECTION 112 (b) (6).—Upon the receipt by a corporation during any taxable year under this subchapter of property in complete liquidation of another corporation, gain or loss upon which is not recognized by reason of section 112 (b) (6), the highest bracket amount of the corporation receiving such property for any taxable year after the liquidation is completed shall be an amount equal to its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the completion of the liquidation increased, but in no case to an amount above $500,000, by an amount equal to the highest bracket amount of such other corporation immediately preceding the completion of such liquidation, if previously and after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of the corporation receiving such property such corporation was a transfer or upon an exchange with respect to which such other corporation was a transferee.

"'(d) HIGHEST BRACKET AMOUNT IN CASE OF TWO OR MORE EXCHANGES IN SAME TAXABLE YEAR.—

"'(1) If a transferor upon an exchange is in the same taxable year involved in more than one exchange (either as transferor or transferee), its highest bracket amount for such taxable year shall be the amount determined under subsection (b) (1) with respect to the last exchange in such taxable year. Its highest bracket amount immediately preceding any exchange in such taxable year subsequent to the first exchange therein shall be the amount computed under subsection (b) (1) with respect to the immediately preceding exchange as if the taxable year closed on the day of such subsequent exchange.

"'(2) If a transferee upon an exchange is in the same taxable year involved in more than one exchange (either as transferee or transferor), its highest bracket amount for such taxable year shall be the amount determined under subsection (c) (1) with respect to the last exchange in such taxable year. Its highest bracket amount immediately preceding any exchange in such taxable year subsequent to the first exchange therein shall be the amount computed under subsection (c) (1) with respect to the immediately preceding exchange as if the taxable year closed on the day of such subsequent exchange.

"'(3) If a transferor or transferee upon an exchange is in the same taxable year involved in more than one exchange (either as transferor or transferee), its highest bracket amount for any taxable year after the taxable year in which such exchanges took place shall be the amount computed under subsection (b) (2), (3), or (4), or (c) (2), (3), (4), or (5), as the case may be, with respect to the last such exchange.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: June 10; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: June 10; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: June 10; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) PROTECTION OF THE UNITED STATES.—If the taxpayer has been or will be reimbursed by the United States for all or a part of the cost of any emergency facility pursuant to any contract with the United States, either—

"(1) directly, by a provision therein dealing expressly with such reimbursement, or

"(2) indirectly, because the price paid by the United States (insofar as return of cost of the facility is used as a factor in the fixing of such price) is recognized by the contract as including a return of cost greater than the normal exhaustion, wear and tear, no amortization deduction with respect to such emergency facility shall be allowed for any month after the end of the month in which such contract is made, unless, before the expiration of ninety days after the making of such contract or one hundred and twenty days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, whichever of such periods expires the later, the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certify to the Commissioner that such contract adequately protects the United States with reference to the future use and disposition of such emergency facility. A certificate by the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, made to the Commissioner before the expiration of ninety days after the making of a contract or one hundred and twenty days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, whichever of such periods expires the later, to the effect that, under such contract, reimbursement for all or a part of the cost of any emergency facility is not provided for within the meaning of clause (1) or clause (2), shall be conclusive for the purposes of this subsection.

"The terms and conditions of contracts with reference to reimbursement of the cost of emergency facilities and the protecting of the United States with reference to the future use and disposition of such emergency facilities shall be made available to the public."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(l) EFFECT ON EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF GAIN OR LOSS AND OF RECEIPT OF TAX-FREE DISTRIBUTIONS.—The gain or loss realized from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation—

"(1) for the purpose of the computation of earnings and profits of the corporation, shall be determined, except as provided in paragraph (2), by using as the adjusted basis the adjusted basis (under the law applicable to the year in which the sale or other disposition was made) for determining gain, except that no regard shall be had to the value of the property as of March 1, 1913; but

"(2) for the purpose of the computation of earnings and profits of the corporation for any period beginning after February 28, 1913, shall be determined by using as the adjusted basis the adjusted basis (under the law applicable to the year in which the sale or other disposition was made) for determining gain.

Gain or loss so realized shall increase or decrease the earnings and profits to, but not beyond, the extent to which such a realized gain or loss was recognized in computing net income under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made. Where in determining the adjusted basis used in computing such realized gain or loss the adjustment to the basis differs from the adjustment proper for the purpose of determining earnings or profits, then the latter adjustment shall be used in determining the increase or decrease above provided."

And on page 95, lines 8 and 9, of the House bill, strike out "(for any period beginning after February 28, 1913)".

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(m) EARNINGS AND PROFITS—INCREASE IN VALUE ACCRUED BEFORE MARCH 1, 1913.—

"(1) If any increase or decrease in the earnings or profits for any period beginning after February 28, 1913, with respect to any matter would be different had the adjusted basis of the property involved been determined without regard to its March 1, 1913, value, then, except as provided in paragraph (2), an increase (properly reflecting such difference) shall be made in that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

"(2) If the application of subsection (1) to a sale or other disposition after February 28, 1913, results in a loss which is to be applied in decrease of earnings and profits for any period beginning after February 28, 1913, then, notwithstanding subsection (1) and in lieu of the rule provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the amount of such loss so to be applied shall be reduced by the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of the property used in determining the loss, exceeds the adjusted basis computed without regard to the value of the property on March 1, 1913, and if such amount so applied in reduction of the decrease exceeds such loss, the excess over such loss shall increase that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) Under prior acts: For the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior Revenue Act the amendments made to the Internal Revenue Code by subsection (a) of this section shall be effective as if they were a part of each such Revenue Act on the date of its enactment. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the tax liability of any taxpayer for any year which, on September 20, 1940, was pending before, or was theretofore determined by, the Board of Tax Appeals, or any court of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: 725; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "725"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE VI—NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE AND PROVISIONS AFFECTING THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

"PART I—NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE

"SEC. 601. When used in this part—

"(a) The term "person" means (1) a commissioned officer; (2) a warrant officer; (3) enlisted personnel (including persons selected for training and service under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940); (4) a member of the Army Nurse Corps (female); and (5) a member of the Navy Nurse Corps (female);

"(b) The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs;

"(c) The term 'active service' means active service in the land or naval forces (including the Coast Guard) of the United States and service in the land or naval forces of the United States under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, but the service of any person ordered to active duty in any such force for a period of thirty days or less, shall not be deemed to be active service in such force during such period;

"(d) The term 'insurance' means National Service Life Insurance;

"(e) The term 'child' includes an adopted child.

"SEC. 602. (a) Every person who is commissioned and hereafter ordered into, or who is hereafter examined, accepted, and enrolled in, the active service and while in such active service shall, upon application in writing (made within one hundred and twenty days after entrance into such active service) and payment of premiums as hereinafter provided and without further medical examination, be granted insurance on the five-year level premium term plan by the United States against the death of such persons occurring while such insurance is in force.

"(b) Any person who is released from active service within one hundred and twenty days after such enrollment shall be granted such insurance upon application therefor in writing (made within one hundred and twenty days after a subsequent enrollment or entrance into active service and before discharge or resignation therefrom), and upon payment of premiums and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator showing such person to be in good health at the time of such application.

"(c) Any person upon reenlistment or reentrance into or reemployment in active service and before discharge or resignation therefrom and any person in the active service upon discharge to accept a commission and before resignation therefrom, shall be granted such insurance upon application therefor in writing (made within one hundred and twenty days following such reenlistment, reentrance, reemployment, or discharge to accept a commission), and upon payment of premiums and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator showing such person to be in good health at the time of such application.

"(d) Any person who has been commissioned, or examined, accepted, and enrolled, in the active service and is in such active service on the date of enactment of this Act shall be granted such insurance upon application therefor in writing (made within one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of this Act and before discharge or resignation from such active service), and upon payment of premiums and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator showing such person to be in good health at the time of such application.

"(e) The premium rates for such insurance shall be the net rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum. All cash, loan, paid up, and extended values, and all other calculations in connection with such insurance, shall be based upon said American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum.

"(f) Such insurance shall be issued upon the five year level premium term plan, with the privilege of conversion as of the date when any premium becomes or has become due, or exchange as of the date of the original policy, upon payment of the difference in reserve, at any time after such policy has been in effect for one year and within the five year term period, to policies of insurance upon the following plans: Ordinary life, twenty payment life, thirty payment life. All five year level premium term policies shall cease and terminate at the expiration of the five year term period. Provisions for cash, loan, paid up, and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, refund of unearned premiums, and such other provisions as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the policy of insurance or from time to time by regulations promulgated by the Administrator.

"(g) The insurance shall be payable only to a widow, widower, child (including a stepchild or an illegitimate child if designated as beneficiary by the insured), parent (including person in loco parentis if designated as beneficiary by the insured), brother or sister of the insured. The insured shall have the right to designate the beneficiary or beneficiaries of the insurance, but only within the classes herein provided, and shall, subject to regulations, at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries but only within the classes herein provided.

"(h) Such insurance shall be payable in the following manner:

"(1) If the beneficiary to whom payment is first made is under thirty years of age at the time of maturity, in two hundred and forty equal monthly installments.

"(2) If the beneficiary to whom payment is first made is thirty or more years of age at the time of maturity, in equal monthly installments for one hundred and twenty months certain, with such payments continuing during the remaining lifetime of such beneficiary.

"(3) Any installments certain of insurance remaining unpaid at the death of any beneficiary shall be paid in equal monthly installments in an amount equal to the monthly installments paid to the first beneficiary, to the person or persons then in being within the classes hereinafter specified and in the order named, unless designated by the insured in a different order—

"(A) to the widow or widower of the insured, if living;

"(B) if no widow or widower, to the child or children of the insured, if living, in equal shares;

"(C) if no widow, widower, or child, to the parent or parents of the insured, if living, in equal shares;

"(D) if no widow, widower, child, or parent, to the brothers and sisters of the insured, if living, in equal shares.

"(i) If no beneficiary is designated by the insured or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the beneficiary shall be determined in accordance with the order specified in subsection (h) (3) of this section and the insurance shall be payable in equal monthly installments in accordance with subsection (h) (1) or (2), as the case may be. The right of any beneficiary to payment of any installments shall be conditioned upon his or her being alive to receive such payments. No person shall have a vested right to any installment or installments of any such insurance and any installments not paid to a beneficiary during such beneficiary's lifetime shall be paid to the beneficiary or beneficiaries within the permitted class next entitled to priority, as provided in subsection (h).

"(j) No installments of such insurance shall be paid to the heirs or legal representatives as such of the insured or of any beneficiary, and in the event that no person within the permitted class survives to receive the insurance or any part thereof no payment of the unpaid installments shall be made.

"(k) When the amount of an individual monthly payment is less than $5, such amount may, in the discretion of the Administrator, be allowed to accumulate without interest and be disbursed annually.

"(l) Any payments of insurance made to a person represented by the insured to be within the permitted class of beneficiaries shall be deemed to have been properly made and to satisfy fully the obligation of the United States under such insurance policy to the extent of such payments.

"(m) The Administrator shall, by regulations, prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums on such insurance, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each, and may at the election of the insured be deducted from his active service pay or be otherwise made.

"(n) Upon application by the insured and under such regulations as the Administrator may promulgate, payment of premiums on such insurance may be waived during continuous total disability of the insured which commenced subsequent to the effective date of such insurance and which has existed for six consecutive months or more prior to the attainment by the insured of the age of sixty years, effective as of the due date of the monthly premium becoming payable on or after the first day of the seventh consecutive month of such disability: Provided, That application for waiver is made while the insurance is currently kept in force by the payment of premiums, and the insured furnishes proof satisfactory to the Administrator showing that he is and has been continuously totally disabled for six or more months prior to attaining sixty years of age. Any waiver granted by the Administrator under this subsection shall not become effective prior to the date of application therefor; except that, in the discretion of the Administrator, it may be made effective at any time within a period of not more than six months prior to such date but in no event prior to the first day of the seventh month of such continuous disability. Any premiums tendered to cover a period during which such waiver is effective shall be refunded. The Administrator shall provide by regulations for reexaminations of beneficiaries under this subsection and, in the event that it is found that an insured is no longer totally disabled, the waiver of premiums shall cease as of the date of such finding and the policy of insurance may be continued by payment of premiums as provided in said policy. Premium rates shall be calculated without charge for the cost of the waiver of premiums herein provided and no deduction from benefits otherwise payable shall be made on account thereof.

"(o) The Administrator shall promptly determine and publish the terms and conditions of such insurance. Pending the promulgation of the terms and conditions of the five year level premium term policy and the printing of such policy, the Administrator may issue a certificate in lieu thereof as evidence that insurance has been granted and the rights and liabilities of the applicant and of the United States shall be those specified by the terms and conditions of the policy when published.

"(p) Such insurance may be made effective, as specified in the application, not later than the first day of the calendar month following the date of application therefor, but the United States shall not be liable thereunder for death occurring prior to such effective date.

"(q) Such insurance shall be issued in any multiple of $500 and the amount of such insurance with respect to any one person shall be not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000.

"SEC. 603. No person may carry a combined amount of National Service Life Insurance and United States Government life insurance in excess of $10,000 at any one time.

"SEC. 604. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this part, to be known as the National Service Life Insurance appropriation, for the payment of liabilities under National Service Life Insurance. Payments from this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the Administrator.

"SEC. 605. (a) There is hereby created in the Treasury a permanent trust fund to be known as the National Service Life Insurance Fund. All premiums paid on account of National Service Life Insurance shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury to the credit of such fund, which, together with interest earned thereon, shall be available for the payment of liabilities under such insurance, including payment of dividends and refunds of unearned premiums. Payments from this fund shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the Administrator.

"(b) The Administrator is authorized to set aside out of such fund such reserve amounts as may be required under accepted actuarial principles, to meet all liabilities under such insurance; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to invest and reinvest such fund, or any part thereof, in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and to sell such obligations for the purposes of such fund.

"SEC. 606. The United States shall bear the cost of administration in connection with this part, including expenses for medical examinations, printing and binding, and for such other expenditures as are necessary in the discretion of the Administrator. The appropriations made for the Veterans' Administration for the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses shall be available for the payment of such costs of administration under this part.

"SEC. 607. (a) The United States shall bear the excess mortality cost and the cost of waiver of premiums on account of total disability traceable to the extra hazard of military or naval service, as such hazard may be determined by the Administrator.

"(b) Whenever benefits under such insurance become payable because of the death of the insured as the result of disease or injury traceable to the extra hazard of military or naval service, as such hazard may be determined by the Administrator, the liability for payment of such benefits shall be borne by the United States in an amount which, when added to the reserve of the policy at the time of death of the insured, will equal the then value of such benefits under such policy. The Administrator is authorized and directed to transfer from time to time from the National Service Life Insurance appropriation to the National Service Life Insurance Fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(c) Whenever the premiums under such insurance are waived as provided in section 602 (n) because of the total disability of the insured as the result of disease or injury traceable to the extra hazard of military or naval service, as such hazard may be determined by the Administrator, the premiums so waived shall be paid by the United States and the Administrator is authorized and directed to transfer from time to time an amount equal to the amount of such premiums from the National Service Life Insurance appropriation to the National Service Life Insurance Fund.

"SEC. 608. The Administrator, subject to the general direction of the President, shall administer, execute and enforce the provisions of this part, shall have power to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this part, as are necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising hereunder. All officers and employees of the Veterans' Administration shall perform such duties in connection with the administration of this part as may be assigned to them by the Administrator. All official acts performed by such officers or employees designated therefor by the Administrator shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the Administrator in person. Except in the event of suit as provided in section 617 hereof, all decisions rendered by the Administrator under the provisions of this part, or regulations issued pursuant thereto, shall be final and conclusive on all questions of law and fact, and no other official or court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review by motion or otherwise any such decision.

"SEC. 609. (a) There shall be no recovery of payments made under this part from any person who, in the judgment of the Administrator, is without fault on his part and where, in the judgment of the said Administrator, such recovery would defeat the purpose of benefits otherwise authorized herein or would be against equity and good conscience. No disbursing officer or certifying officer shall be held liable for any amount paid to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under this section.

"(b) Where, under the provisions of this section, the recovery of a payment made from the National Service Life Insurance Fund is waived, the National Service Life Insurance Fund shall be reimbursed for the amount of such payment from the current appropriation for National Service Life Insurance.

"SEC. 610. No State law providing for presumption of death shall be applicable to claims for National Service Life Insurance. If evidence satisfactory to the Administrator is produced establishing the fact of the continued and unexplained absence of any individual from his home and family for a period of seven years, during which period no evidence of his existence has been received, the death of such individual as of the date of the expiration of such period may, for the purposes of this part, be considered as sufficiently proved.

"SEC. 611. No United States Government life insurance shall be granted hereafter to any person under the provisions of section 300 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to prohibit the issue of United States Government life insurance policies in cases in which acceptable applications accompanied by proper and valid remittances or authorizations for the payment of premiums have, prior to the date of enactment of this act, been received by the Veterans' Administration or which have, prior to said date, been placed in the mails properly directed to said Veterans' Administration, or been delivered to an authorized representative of the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Coast Guard, and which are forwarded to the Veterans' Administration not later than one hundred and twenty days subsequent to said date.

"SEC. 612. Any person guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or desertion, or who, because of conscientious objections, refuses to perform service in the land or naval forces of the United States or refuses to wear the uniform of such force, shall forfeit all rights to insurance under this part. No insurance shall be payable for death inflicted as a lawful punishment for crime or for military or naval offense, except when inflicted by an enemy of the United States; but the cash surrender value, if any, of such insurance on the date of such death shall be paid to the designated beneficiary, if living, or otherwise to the beneficiary or beneficiaries within the permitted class in accordance with the order specified in section 602 (h) (3).

"SEC. 613. Whoever in any claim for insurance issued under the provisions of this part makes any sworn statement of a material fact knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of perjury and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 614. Whoever, with intent to defraud the United States or any beneficiary of such insurance, shall obtain or receive any money or check for National Service Life Insurance without being entitled to the same, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 615. Any person who shall knowingly make or cause to be made, or conspire, combine, aid, or assist in, agree to, arrange for, or in any wise procure the making or presentation of a false or fraudulent affidavit, declaration, certificate, statement, voucher, or paper, or writing purporting to be such, concerning any application for insurance or reinstatement thereof, waiver of premiums or claim for benefits under National Service Life Insurance for himself or any other person, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 616. The provisions of Public Law Numbered 262, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 607), and titles II and III of Public Law Numbered 844, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2031), insofar as they are applicable, shall apply to the provisions of this part.

"SEC. 617. In the event of a disagreement as to claim arising under this part, suit may be brought in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as are applicable to United States Government (converted) life insurance under the provisions of sections 19 and 500 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended: Provided, That in any such suit the decision of the Administrator as to waiver or non-waiver of premiums under section 602 (n) shall be conclusive and binding on the court.

"SEC. 618. This part may be cited as the 'National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940'.

"PART II—CREDITING MILITARY SERVICE FOR ANNUITY PURPOSES UNDER THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS

"SEC. 625. The Act entitled 'An Act to amend an Act entitled "An Act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935,' approved June 24, 1937 (50 Stat. 307), is hereby amended by inserting after section 3 the following new section:

"'MILITARY SERVICE

"'SEC. 3A. (a) For the purposes of determining eligibility for an annuity and computing an annuity, including a minimum annuity, there shall also be included in an individual's years of service, within the limitations hereinafter provided in this section, voluntary or involuntary military service of an individual prior to January 1, 1937, within or without the United States during any war service period: Provided, however, That such military service shall be included only subject to and in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b) of section 3, in the same manner as though military service were service rendered as an employee: Provided further, That an individual who entered military service prior to a war service period shall not be regarded as having been in military service in a war service period with respect to any part of the period for which he entered such military service.

"'(b) For the purpose of this section and section 202, as amended, an individual shall be deemed to have been in "military service" when commissioned or enrolled in the active service of the land or naval forces of the United States and until resignation or discharge therefrom; and the service of any individual in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States who was ordered to active duty in any such force for a period of thirty days or less shall be deemed to have been active service in such force during such period.

"'(c) For the purpose of this section and section 202, as amended, a "war service period" shall mean (1) any war period, or (2) with respect to any particular individual, any period during which such individual (i) having been in military service at the end of a war period, was required to continue in military service, or (ii) was required by any Act of Congress, any regulation promulgated, order issued, or proclamation made, in pursuance of such Act, to enter and continue in military service.

"'(d) For the purpose of this section and section 202, as amended, a "war period" shall be deemed to have begun on whichever of the following dates is the earliest: (1) the date on which the Congress of the United States declared war; or (2) the date as of which the Congress of the United States declared that a state of war has existed; or (3) the date on which war was declared by one or more foreign states against the United States; or (4) the date on which any part of the United States or any territory under its jurisdiction was invaded or attacked by any armed force of one or more foreign states; or (5) the date on which the United States engaged in armed hostilities for the purpose of preserving the Union or of maintaining in any State of the Union a republican form of government.

"'(e) For the purpose of this section and section 202, as amended, a "war period" shall be deemed to have ended on the date on which hostilities ceased.

"'(f) Military service shall not be included in the years of service of an individual unless, in the calendar year in which his military service in a war service period began, or in the calendar year next preceding such calendar year, he rendered service for compensation to an employer, or to a person service to which is otherwise creditable under this Act, or lost time as an employee for which he received remuneration, or was serving as an employee representative.

"'(g) A calendar month in which an individual was in military service which may be included in the individual's years of service or service period, as the case may be, shall be counted as a month of service: Provided, however, That no calendar month shall be counted as more than one month of service.

"'(h) In determining the monthly compensation for computing an annuity, military service and any remuneration therefor shall be disregarded.

"'(i) In the event military service is or has been used as the basis or as a partial basis for a pension, disability compensation, or any other gratuitous benefits payable on a periodic basis under any other Act of Congress, any annuity under this Act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, which is based in part on such military service and is with respect to a calendar month for all or part of which such pension or other benefit is also payable, shall be reduced with respect to that month by the proportion which the number of years of service by which such military service increases the years of service, or the service period, as the case may be, bears to the total years of service, or by the aggregate amount of such pension or other benefit with respect to that month, whichever would result in the smaller reduction.

"'(j) Any department or agency of the United States maintaining records of military service, at the request of the Board, shall certify to the Board, with respect to any individual, the number of months of military service which such department or agency finds the individual to have had during any period or periods with respect to which the Board's request is made, the date and manner of entry into such military service, and the conditions under which such service was continued. Any department or agency of the United States which is authorized to make awards of pensions, disability compensation, or any other gratuitous benefits or allowances payable, on a periodic basis or otherwise, under any other Act of Congress on the basis of military service, at the request of the Board, shall certify to the Board, with respect to any individual, the calendar months for all or part of which any such pension, compensation, benefit, or allowance is payable to, or with respect to, the individual, the amounts of any such pension, compensation, benefit, or allowance, and the military service on which such pension, compensation, benefit, or allowance is based. Any certification made pursuant to the provisions of this subsection shall be conclusive on the Board: Provided, That if evidence inconsistent with any such certification is submitted, and the claim is in the course of adjudication or is otherwise open for such evidence, the Board shall refer such evidence to the department or agency which made the original certification and such department or agency shall make such recertification as in its judgment the evidence warrants. Such recertification, and any subsequent recertification, shall be conclusive, made in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions as an original certification.

"'(k) In the event that an individual was, on or before the date of enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, denied an annuity but could have been granted an annuity under the provisions of this Act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 had military service been included in his years of service or service period, as the case may be, no annuity shall be payable with respect to such individual, or with respect to his death, by reason of the provisions of this section unless such individual files a new application with the Board. In determining the earliest date upon which an annuity can begin to accrue for such an individual in accordance with the provisions of section 2, the filing date of the application shall be the date on which such new application is filed.

"'(l) An individual who, on or before the date of enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, was awarded an annuity under the provisions of this Act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, but whose annuity would have been increased if his military service had been included in his years of service or service period, as the case may be, may, notwithstanding the previous award of an annuity, make application (in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Board) for an increase in such annuity based on his military service. Upon the filing of such application, if the Board finds that the military service thus claimed is creditable and would result in an increase in the annuity, the Board, notwithstanding the previous award, shall recertify the annuity on an increased basis in the same manner as though this section had been in effect at the time of the original certification: Provided, however, That if the annuity previously awarded is a joint and survivor annuity, the increased annuity shall be a joint and survivor annuity of the same type except that if on the date the increase begins to accrue the individual has no spouse for whom the election of the joint and survivor annuity was made, the increase on a single life basis shall be added to the individual's annuity: And provided further, That such increase in the annuity shall not begin to accrue more than sixty days before the filing date of the application for an increase in the annuity based on military service, and in the event the annuity is a joint and survivor annuity, the actuarial value of the increase in annuity shall be computed as of the effective date of the increase.

"'(m) In addition to the amount authorized to be appropriated in subsection (a) of section 15 of this Act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Railroad Retirement Account for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, an amount sufficient to meet the additional expenditures necessary to be made during each such fiscal year by reason of crediting under the Railroad Retirement Acts military service prior to January 1, 1937. The Railroad Retirement Board, as promptly as practicable after the date of enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, and thereafter annually, shall submit to the Bureau of the Budget estimates of such military service appropriations to be made to the account in addition to the annual estimates by the Board, in accordance with subsection (a) of section 15 of this Act, of the appropriations to be made to the account to provide for the payment of annuities, pensions and death benefits not based on military service. Each such estimate shall take into account the excess or the deficiency, if any, in such military service appropriation for the preceding fiscal year.'

"SEC. 626. Section 202 of such act of June 24, 1937, is hereby amended by inserting immediately after the second proviso of such section the following new proviso: 'And provided further, That for the purposes of determining eligibility for an annuity and computing an annuity there shall also be included in an individual's service period, subject to and in accordance with subsections (a) to (l), inclusive, of section 3A of this act, voluntary or involuntary military service of an individual prior to January 1, 1937, within or without the United States during any war service period, if, in the calendar year in which his military service in a war service period began, or in the calendar year next preceding such calendar year, he was in the compensated service of a carrier, or of a person service to which is otherwise creditable, or was serving as a representative; but such military service shall be included only subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, in the same manner as though military service were service rendered as an employee:' ".

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

TITLE VII—CREDIT AGAINST, FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT TAXES

"SEC. 701. CREDIT AGAINST FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT TAXES.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—Against the tax imposed by section 901 of the Social Security Act for the calendar year 1936, 1937, or 1938, or against the tax imposed by the Federal Unemployment Tax Act for the calendar year 1939, any taxpayer shall be allowed credit for the amount of contributions paid by him into an unemployment fund under a State law—

"(1) Before the sixtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act;

"(2) On or after such sixtieth day (except in the case of the tax for the calendar year 1939) with respect to wages paid after the fortieth day after such date of enactment;

"(3) Without regard to the date of payment, if the assets of the taxpayer are, at any time during the fifty-nine-day period following such date of enactment, in the custody or control of a receiver, trustee, or other fiduciary appointed by, or under the control of, a court of competent jurisdiction.

The amount of such credit, in the case of contributions with respect to the calendar year 1939 paid after the last day upon which the taxpayer was required under section 1604 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act to file a return for such year, shall not exceed 90 per centum of the amount which would have been allowable as credit on account of such contributions had they been paid on or before such last day. The provisions of the Social Security Act in force prior to February 11, 1939 (except the provision limiting the credit to amounts paid before the date of filing returns) shall, with respect to the tax for the calendar year 1936, 1937, or 1938, apply to allowance of credit under this section, and the provisions of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (except section 1601 (a) (3)) shall, with respect to the tax for the calendar year 1939, apply to allowance of credit under this section. The terms used in this subsection shall, with respect to the tax for the calendar year 1936, 1937, or 1938, have the same meaning as when used in title IX of the Social Security Act prior to February 11, 1939, and shall, with respect to the tax for the calendar year 1939, have the same meaning as when used in the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. The total credit allowable against the tax imposed by section 901 of the Social Security Act for the calendar year 1936, 1937, or 1938, or against the tax imposed by section 1600 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act for the calendar year 1939, shall not exceed 90 per cent of such tax.

"(b) Refund: Refund of the tax (including penalty and interest collected with respect thereto, if any), based on any credit allowable under this section, may be made in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of erroneous or illegal collection of the tax. No interest shall be allowed or paid on the amount of any such refund."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out title I (excess-profits tax) of the House bill and substitutes title I (corporation income tax) and title II (excess-profits tax); and the House recedes with an amendment.

Title I of this amendment being new and title II being in effect title I of the House bill with amendments, the action on this amendment will be discussed section by section.

Title I—Corporation Income Tax

House bill: There is no comparable provision in the House bill. Section 710 of the excess-profits tax as passed by the House did, however, provide, as part of the excess-profits tax in the case of corporations which elected to compute their excess-profits credit on the average earnings plan, for the payment of an additional amount equal to 4⅒ percent of the normal tax net income.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment increased by 3⅒ percent the corporate income tax of all corporations (except nonresident foreign corporations taxable under section 231 (a)). Such increase applied to the entire rate schedule contained in sections 13 and 14, that is, whether or not the corporation's normal tax net income was in excess of $25,000. The permanent corporate tax rate applicable to corporations not entitled to the special treatment provided for small corporations was therefore 22⅒ percent. It was provided, however, that in computing the 10-percent increase in tax imposed by section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code, added to such code by section 201 of the first Revenue Act of 1940, the corporate tax prior to the 3⅒ percent increase contained in the Senate amendment was to be used as the basis for such computation. Thus, the general effective rate applicable to corporations with normal-tax net incomes in excess of $31,964.30, so long as the defense-tax provisions of section 15 were in force, would be 24 percent.

Conference agreement: Under the conference agreement, there is no increase of the chapter 1 tax of corporations whose normal-tax net income is not in excess of $25,000, if such corporations are entitled to the treatment provided by section 14 of the Internal Revenue Code. In the case of corporations whose normal-tax net income is slightly in excess of $25,000 and which are taxable as provided in section 13, the full 3⅒ percent increase is not applicable in fact until the normal-tax net income reaches $38,565.89. Like the Senate amendment the bill as agreed to in conference provides that the additional 10 percent imposed by the First Revenue Act of 1940 is to be figured on the basis of the permanent rates prior to their increase by the bill. Therefore, in the case of corporations whose normal-tax net income is slightly in excess of $25,000, the 10 percent increase may be computed on the basis of the tax (at the unincreased rates) under the general rule, even though the corporation may still be subject to the alternative tax under the bill. The applicable rates under the conference agreement are illustrated by the following table:

	Permanent rate			Temporary additional rate (defense tax)	Total normal tax rate
	Existing law	Additional rate under the conference bill	Total
Corporations with normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $31,964.30:	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
First $5,000	13.50	0	13.50	1.35	14.85
Next $15,000	15.00	0	15.00	1.50	16.50
Next $5,000	17.00	0	17.00	1.70	18.70
Next $6,964.30	33.00	2	35.00	3.30	[1] 38.30
Corporations with normal-tax net incomes in excess of $31,964.30, but not in excess of $38,565.89:
First $5,000	13.50	0	13.50	1.9	15.4
Next $15,000	15.00	0	15.00	1.9	16.9
Next $5,000	17.00	0	17.00	1.9	18.9
Next $13,565.89	33.00	2	35.00	1.9	[1] 36.9
Corporations with normal-tax net incomes in excess of $38,565.89 [2]	19.00	3.1	22.10	1.9	24.00

[1] This is the "notch provision." The specified rate, coupled with the low rates applicable to the first $25,000, does not produce an effective rate as high as that applicable to large corporations until the normal-tax net income reaches $31,964.30, in the case of existing law, and $38,565.89, under the bill.

[2] In this group would also fall mutual investment companies and foreign corporations not taxable under section 231 (a) regardless of the amount of their income.

Title II (Title I of House Bill)—Excess-Profits Tax

Section 710. Imposition of Tax

House bill: Under the House bill, the excess-profits tax imposed upon corporations which elected to compute their excess-profits credit on the income plan consisted of 4⅒ percent of the corporation's normal-tax net income plus a graduated tax of from 25 to 50 percent of the corporation's adjusted excess-profits net income. The excess-profits tax imposed upon corporations which elected to compute their excess-profits credit on the invested capital method consisted solely of a graduated tax of from 20 to 45 percent of the corporation's adjusted excess-profits net income. The term "adjusted excess-profits net income," which constituted the measure of the graduated tax, was defined as the excess-profits net income less a specific exemption of $5,000 and the amount of the taxpayer's excess-profits credit for the taxable year.

In the case of any corporations which had been through certain types of tax-free exchanges, adjustments were to be made in the dollar amounts constituting the dividing lines between the various brackets. If, for example, a corporation, in a tax-free transaction, split up into two corporations, the rate schedule was adjusted so that the sum of the amounts of income of both corporations subject to each bracket would not exceed the amount of income which would have been taxed in such bracket had the original corporation remained intact. The amount in each bracket was divided between the two corporations on the basis of the relationship of its invested capital immediately after the exchange to the invested capital of the original corporation immediately preceding the exchange. To accomplish this result, since section 759 required a similar adjustment to be made in the case of the preferential rate amount, which in the case of corporations which had not been through a prior tax-free exchange was always $500,000, the ratio of the taxpayer's preferential rate amount to $500,000 was, as a matter of convenience, applied in the adjustment of the dollar amounts in the rate schedule provided by section 710.

Senate amendment: The additional 4 1/10 percent of the normal-tax net income of corporations electing the excess-profits tax based on average earnings was eliminated. The 5-percent differential in rate between corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the invested-capital plan and corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the income plan was also eliminated and the 25 to 50 percent graduated rate schedule applicable under the House bill to corporations electing the income credit was made applicable to all corporations. However, such rate schedule was further modified so as to make the dividing line between the brackets depend upon specified dollar amounts of adjusted excess-profits net income only if such specified dollar amounts are greater than alternative amounts representing specified percentages of the excess-profits credit. The rate schedule contained in the Senate amendment is as follows:

"Twenty-five percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as does not exceed the greater of $20,000 or 20 percent of the excess-profits credit;

"Thirty percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as exceeds the greater of $20,000 or 20 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $50,000 or 40 percent of such credit;

"Thirty-five percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as exceeds the greater of $50,000 or 40 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $100,000 or 60 percent of such credit;

"Forty percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as exceeds the greater of $100,000 or 60 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $250,000 or 80 percent of such credit;

"Forty percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as exceeds the greater of $250,000 or 80 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $500,000 or 100 percent of such credit; and

"Fifty percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as exceeds the greater of $500,000 or 100 percent of the excess-profits credit."

The adjustment in the rate schedule required in the case of taxpayers which had been through certain types of tax-free transactions was eliminated.

The definition of "adjusted excess-profits net income" contained in the House bill was retained except that the specific exemption allowable in computing such adjusted excess-profits net income was increased from $5,000 to $10,000.

Conference agreement: Under the conference agreement, the excess-profits tax of all corporations, whether computing their excess-profits credit on the income or invested-capital plan, is based solely on the following rate schedule:

	Rate of tax percent—
Amount of adjusted excess-profits net income:
First $20,000	25
Next $30,000	30
Next $50,000	35
Next $150,000	40
Next $250,000	45
Over $500,000	50

This was the graduated schedule applicable to corporations computing their excess profit on the income plan under the House bill and was the schedule applicable to all corporations under the amendment as reported by the Senate Finance Committee.

The adjustment in the above rate schedule which was required, under the House bill, in the case of taxpayers which had been through certain types of tax-free transactions has been restored, with clerical changes.

The specific exemption allowable in computing the adjusted excess-profits net income has been restored to $5,000. An additional credit is also allowed, in computing such adjusted excess-profits net income, to corporations whose normal-tax net income for the taxable year is not in excess of $25,000, such additional credit to consist of the amount if any, by which the excess profits credit for the preceding taxable year exceeded the excess-profits net income for such year. It is understood that the Treasury and members of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation will study the operation of this limited carry-over, with a view to its possible extension or modification, and will report to the appropriate committees on the subject as soon as possible.

Section 711. Excess-Profits Net Income

House bill: Under the House bill the excess-profits net income was defined to be the normal-tax net income with certain adjustments.

Senate amendment: In addition to certain technical amendments, the Senate amendment made the following changes in and additions to the adjustments contained in the House bill:

(1) The additional deduction on account of corporate income taxes was modified so as to exclude the section 102 tax imposed on corporations improperly accumulating surplus. Under both the House and Senate bills, however, the normal corporate income tax (after the allowance of the foreign tax credit) for the taxable year for which the excess-profits net income is being computed is allowable as an additional deduction.

(2) The treatment of gains and losses on depreciable assets held for more than 18 months as long-term capital gains and losses and their consequent exclusion from the computation was eliminated. In lieu thereof a provision was inserted providing that only the excess of gains arising from the sale or exchange of such assets over any losses arising therefrom should be excluded from the computation. The effect of this provision is to allow losses from the sale or exchange of depreciable assets held for more than 18 months to be deducted from ordinary income to the extent such losses exceed the gains from similar transactions.

(3) The adjustment on account of income derived from the retirement or discharge of bonds, etc., was rewritten to make certain that amounts which would be otherwise includible upon such retirement or discharge on account of any premium received upon issuance should be left out of the computation, and that the adjustment should apply although the indebtedness retired or discharged is indebtedness which has been assumed by the taxpayer and although it is evidenced, so far as the taxpayer is concerned, only by a contract with the person whose liabilities have been assumed.

(4) A corresponding adjustment was added requiring that certain deductions otherwise allowable on account of the retirement or discharge of bonds, etc., should be excluded from the computation.

(5) A new adjustment was added, applicable only to taxable years after the base period, requiring the exclusion of income attributable to refunds of Agricultural Adjustment Act taxes and interest upon such refunds.

(6) It was also provided that, if the excess-profits credit is computed under the invested-capital plan, the normal-tax net income should be increased by an amount equal to the interest on United States obligations and the obligations of Federal instrumentalities not specifically exempted from excess-profits taxes and, in addition thereto, the interest on all other Federal, State, or local obligations, if the taxpayer elects, under section 720 (d) (added by the Senate amendment), to treat all such other obligations as admissible assets for the taxable year.

(7) Losses arising from the demolition, abandonment, and loss of useful value of property are excluded from the computation of excess-profits net income for taxable years in the base period.

(8) An additional adjustment was provided, applicable only to taxable years in the base period, to the effect that deductions attributable to any claim, award, judgment, or decree against the taxpayer, or interest thereon, would not be required to be taken into account if, in the light of the taxpayer's business, it is abnormal for the taxpayer to incur a liability of such character or, if the taxpayer normally incurs liabilities of such character, the amount of the particular liabilities of such character in the taxable year is grossly disproportionate to the average amount of liabilities of such character in each of the four previous taxable years.

(9) Income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt, if a deduction from gross income was allowed with reference to such debt was allowed from gross income for a taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1940, is excluded in the case of taxable years after the base period.

(10) A new adjustment, applicable to both the taxable years in the base period and taxable years after the base period in the case of corporations computing their excess-profits credit under the income plan, was added requiring the exclusion of any deductions in connection with exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property, patents, formulae, or processes, or any combination of the foregoing.

(11) Corporations computing their excess-profits credit under the income plan are given the same dividends received credit, both for taxable years in the base period and for taxable years after the base period, as is given to corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the invested capital plan; i. e., the full amount of all dividends received, except dividends on stock of a foreign personal holding company.

(12) Amounts received pursuant to an award of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, are excluded from income for taxable years after the base period in the case of corporations computing their excess-profits credit under the income plan.

(13) In case of taxable years in the base period, the deduction under section 23 (k) for bad debts is decreased by an amount representing unrecovered loans made by a parent corporation to its subsidiary, insofar as such deduction includes an amount representing such unrecovered loans.

In addition to applying section 117 of the Internal Revenue Code (relative to capital gains and losses) to taxable years in the base period, which was done in the House bill, the Senate amendment applies section 23 (g) and (k) to such taxable years in order that long-term losses due to securities (stocks and bonds) having become worthless would be disallowed in computing excess-profits net income for taxable years in which such losses were not treated as capital losses under the income-tax law applicable to such years.

Conference agreement: With the exceptions and modifications described below, the Senate provision is adopted:

(1) The adjustment relative to income realized upon the retirement or discharge of bonds, etc., has been further redrafted so as to make certain that the excluded income on account of the issuance of the bonds at a premium relates only to premium unamortized on the date of retirement or discharge. There is not to be excluded from income the accrued amortization of bond premium for that portion of the taxable year preceding such retirement or discharge.

(2) The adjustment requiring that certain deductions otherwise allowable on account of the retirement or discharge of bonds, etc., should be excluded from the computation has been eliminated for taxable years after the base period. As retained relative to taxable years in the base period, it has been redrafted so as to make certain that the excluded deduction on account of the issuance of bonds, etc., at a discount relates only to discount unamortized on the date of the retirement or discharge. The ordinary deduction for amortization of bond discount accrued for that portion of the taxable year preceding the retirement or discharge is not to be excluded from the computation.

(3) The adjustment relative to interest on Federal, State, and local obligations has been revised as follows: The distinction between certain United States obligations and obligations of Federal instrumentalities, on the one hand, and all other Federal, State, or local obligations, on the other, has been eliminated, and the treatment of all such obligations has been made optional with the taxpayer. Instead of requiring the taxpayer to elect to treat such obligations as admissible assets and having the taxation of the interest derived therefrom follow as a consequence, however, the conference agreement provides that the taxpayer's election shall be with respect to the inclusion of the interest in income and that, if such an election is made, the obligations from which such interest was derived shall be treated as admissible assets for the taxable year. See discussion under section 720. A taxpayer must elect as to all such interests and may not elect as to only a portion thereof.

(4) The adjustment requiring the exclusion of any deduction in connection with exploration, etc., has been eliminated as to taxable years after the base period. As retained relative to taxable years in the base period the adjustment has been limited to deductions allowed in respect of expenditures for intangible drilling and development costs paid or incurred in or for the drilling of wells or the preparation of wells for the production of oil or gas, or for development costs in the case of mines. Such deductions are excluded only if and to the extent that in the light of the taxpayer's business it is abnormal for the taxpayer to incur a liability of such character or, if the taxpayer normally incurs such liability, only to the extent that the amount of such liability in the taxable year in question was grossly disproportionate to the amount of such liability in the 4 previous taxable years.

(5) Corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the income plan are allowed a dividends-received credit of 100 percent of the dividends received from a domestic corporation, but, unlike corporations on the invested-capital plan, are given no credit for dividends received from a foreign corporation. Such dividends, however, if their receipt constitutes an abnormality, are entitled to the treatment provided by section 721.

(6) The specific adjustment excluding from income awards of the Mixed Claims Commission has been eliminated, since it is already covered by the general provisions of section 721. Such income would be abnormal in kind, and, to the extent it constituted compensation for past losses, would be attributable to the years such losses occurred. Most of these awards of the Mixed Claims Commission were paid many years ago. However, a number of awards to American nationals were rendered by the Commission only recently and have not yet been paid. The conferees were unanimous that such awards when paid, to the extent they do not include current interest, should not and would not be subject to the excess-profits tax. Section 711 (a) (1) (I) of Senate amendment has been omitted from the bill as agreed to in conference by reason of the fact that the conferees are convinced (and have the assurances of the Treasury) that section 721 of the bill accomplishes the same result, since the very nature of the award makes any resulting income abnormal, and none of the amounts paid pursuant to such awards will be attributable to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, within the meaning of such section. Insofar as such amounts are properly includible in the normal tax net income of the recipients, they will, of course, be subject to the normal tax in the year in which they are accrued or (in the case of recipients upon the cash receipts basis) are actually received.

(7) The adjustment in the base period on account of bad debts representing unrecovered loans made by a parent corporation to a subsidiary has been eliminated.

Section 712. Allowance of Excess-Profits Credit

House bill: Under the House bill a domestic corporation was permitted to choose between the income credit and the invested capital credit only if it had been in existence during the entire 48 months prior to the beginning of its first taxable year which began in 1940. Foreign corporations subject to excess-profits tax were required to compute their excess-profits credit on the income plan if they were in existence during the entire 48 months prior to the beginning of their first excess-profits tax taxable year beginning in 1940 and were engaged in trade or business within the United States or had an office or place of business therein at any time during each of the taxable years in the 48 months prior to such date. All other domestic and foreign corporations subject to excess-profits tax were required to compute their excess-profits credit on the invested-capital plan.

Senate amendment: Under the Senate amendment all domestic corporations which have been in existence prior to January 1, 1940, and all foreign corporations which, under the House bill, were required to compute their excess-profits credit on the income plan, are permitted to choose between the income and the invested-capital plan. All other corporations, including corporations which for any taxable year do not file returns, must compute their excess-profits credit on the invested-capital plan.

Conference agreement: The Senate provision is adopted.

Section 713. Excess-Profits Credit Based on Income

House bill: Under the House bill all taxable years in the base period, including taxable years for which there were deficits, were taken into account in computing the average base period net income, except that the loss for 1 deficit year (the largest, if the taxpayer had more than 1) was not to be applied in reduction of the aggregate income for other years. In ascertaining the average, however, the period covered by such taxable year was taken into account; i. e., the aggregate for the other years was divided by the total number of years in the base period, not by such total number less one.

Senate amendment: In lieu of the treatment relative to deficits contained in the House bill, the Senate amendment provides that a taxpayer may entirely exclude one base period taxable year in computing its average earnings. Not only may the excess-profits net income or the deficit for such year be excluded from the computation, but the period embraced by such taxable year is excluded in ascertaining the average base period net income for the base period. Thus, if the base period includes 4 calendar years and the taxpayer chooses to drop one of such years out of the computation, the aggregate income for the remaining 3 years is divided by three, and not by four, in ascertaining the base-period average.

Since under the Senate amendment all domestic corporations which have been in existence prior to January 1, 1940, are permitted to choose between the income and the invested capital plan, even though they may not have been in existence during the entire base period, the Senate amendment also provides for a constructive excess-profits net income in the case of corporations electing the income plan for such portion of the base period as the corporation was not in existence. Such excess-profits net income is to be computed in the same manner as the House bill provided in the case of corporations electing the invested-capital plan; i. e., 8 percent of the invested capital for the day following the close of the base period, reduced by the same ratio of inadmissibles as is applicable to the last year of the base period.

The adjustment on account of capital additions and reductions was amended so as to treat 100 percent of the stock of another corporation owned by the taxpayer as excluded capital. This conforms with the change made in the dividends received credit of corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the income plan.

Conference agreement: The Senate provision permitting the complete exclusion of 1 year in the computation of average base-period net income has been eliminated, and the House provision relative to the treatment of deficit years has been restored. In addition, it is provided that, in computing the income credit, the amount thereof, prior to adjustment on account of capital additions or capital reductions, shall be 95 percent of the average base period net income instead of 100 percent of such average base-period net income. This 5-percent reduction of the average base period net income is in lieu of the House provision which included an additional 4⅒ percent of the normal-tax net income in the excess profits tax of corporations electing the income plan and provided a 5-percent differential in the graduated rate schedule applicable to such corporations.

In view of the conference agreement on sections 711 and 712, the Senate provision relative to a constructive excess profits net income in the case of corporations in existence during part, but not all, of the base period has been retained, and the treatment of corporate stock as excluded capital has been limited to the stock of domestic corporations.

Section 714. Excess-Profits Credit Based on Invested Capital

House bill: Under the House bill the invested capital credit for any taxable year reflected, in part, the base period experience of the taxpayer. In general, the excess-profits credit consisted of an amount representing the base period rate of return (but not less than 7 percent or more than 10 percent on the first $500,000 and not less than 5 percent or more than 10 percent on the remainder) on so much of the corporation's invested capital for the taxable year as did not exceed its invested capital at the close of the base period, plus 10 percent of so much of the remaining invested capital as did not bring the total invested capital beyond $500,000, and 8 percent of the remainder.

Senate amendment: Under the Senate amendment the base period experience of a corporation electing the invested capital credit is eliminated from consideration. The excess-profits credit of any such corporation is 8 percent of the taxpayer's invested capital for the taxable year, without regard to its earnings record in the base period.

Conference agreement: The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Sections 715–718. Invested Capital

The only change, other than clerical and technical changes, made by the Senate amendment in these sections of the House bill was the insertion of a new sentence in section 715 authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, pursuant to regulations, to permit, in the computation of invested capital, the use of averages or ratios on a monthly, annual, or other appropriate basis, where in his opinion the circumstances do not require daily computation.

Under the conference agreement, the authorization to compute invested capital on some basis other than a daily basis is limited to cases where such other method will not cause the invested capital to vary by more than $1,000 from the invested capital computed on a daily basis. The conference agreement also makes further technical changes in order to eliminate duplications in the computation of equity invested capital. Provisions have been inserted governing the extent to which the equity invested capital of a parent corporation is to be increased or decreased following a liquidation under section 112 (b) (6). This provision enables the provisions of section 718 (b) (3) to be expanded so as to cover all situations in which, under the doctrine of Commissioner v. Sansome (60 F. (2d) 931), the earnings and profits of one corporation become the earnings and profits of another. A proper application of the provisions of section 718 prevents, it is believed, improper duplications in the case of the merger or consolidation of two or more corporations, one of which owns stock in the other; for the sake of clarity, however, subsection (c) (4) has been inserted dealing with the merger or consolidation of two or more corporations, one of which owns stock in the other. In case the corporation whose stock is owned by the other, is merged into the other, no corresponding provision is necessary, since the property transferred in the merger represented by such stock is not within any provision of section 718 (a).

Section 719. Borrowed Invested Capital

House bill: Under the House bill borrowed capital (i. e., indebtedness evidenced by a bond, note, bill of exchange, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust) was included in invested capital under a graduated limitation at varying percentages (100, 66⅔, 33⅓), these percentages depending upon the size of the corporation.

Senate amendment: Under the Senate amendment all borrowed capital is included in invested capital at 50 percent, regardless of the size of the corporation. Borrowed capital is defined to mean, in addition to the types of indebtedness described in the House bill, certain amounts received as advance payment in connection with a contract with a foreign government to furnish articles, materials, or supplies, to the extent such amounts would be repayable, pursuant to the terms of the contract, if cancelation by such foreign government occurred at the beginning of the day for which the borrowed capital is being ascertained. Such contract must have been made before the expiration of 30 days after the date of enactment of the bill.

Conference agreement: The Senate provision has been adopted except that the clause relative to amounts repayable to a foreign government has been redrafted so as to make certain that the amounts included as borrowed capital thereunder do not include amounts treated as income and therefore reflected in equity invested capital through the accumulated earnings and profits account.

Section 720. Admissible and Inadmissible Assets

House bill: Under the House bill, in addition to corporate stock, all Federal, State, and local obligations were treated as inadmissible assets for the taxable year, and the interest derived therefrom was not included in normal-tax net income, upon the basis of which the excess-profits net income was computed.

Senate amendment: Under the Senate amendment all United States obligations and obligations of Federal instrumentalities, the interest from which is not exempt from excess-profits taxation, are treated as admissible assets and the interest derived therefrom is subject to tax. In addition, the taxpayer may elect to treat all other Federal, State, and local obligations as admissible assets for the taxable year. If such an election is made, the normal tax net income is increased by the amount of interest derived from such obligations. The taxpayer is required to make a single election relative to all such obligations and may not elect as to only a portion thereof.

Conference agreement: Under the conference agreement the distinction between certain United States obligations and obligations of Federal instrumentalities, on the one hand, and of other Federal, State, and local obligations, on the other, is eliminated. The taxpayer's election, instead of being an election to treat the obligations in question as admissible assets, is an election to include the interest derived therefrom in normal tax net income. It is provided that, if such an election is made, the obligations from which such included interest is derived are treated as admissible assets for the taxable year.

Section 721. Abnormalities in Income in Taxable Period

House bill: There were no comparable provisions in the House bill.

Senate amendment: Section 721 (a) of the Senate amendment was designed to provide relief in the case of—

(1) Income arising out of a claim, award, judgment, or decree, or out of interest on any of the foregoing;

(2) Income received with respect to a contract whose performance required more than 1 year;

(3) Income resulting from the exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property, patents, formulas, or processes, or any combination thereof, by the taxpayer or any of its predecessors, providing that such exploration, etc., extended over a period of more than 1 year;

(4) Income which is required to be included for the taxable year as a result of a change in the taxpayer's accounting period or method of accounting;

(5) Income received by the lessor of real property on the termination of the lease as a result of improvements on the property during the lease.

Any of the above types of income which is abnormal in kind, or which, in the light of the taxpayer's experience in the 4 previous taxable years, is abnormal in amount, is entitled to the following treatment:

The amount thereof attributable to any previous taxable year or years is to be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of income from exploration, etc., the Commissioner is required to allocate in equal amounts so much of such income as is not attributed to the taxable year to each of the preceding years (not exceeding 5) during which the exploration, etc., was conducted. The excess-profits tax for the taxable year shall not exceed the excess-profits tax for such taxable year computed without including such income in gross income, plus the aggregate of the additional excess-profits taxes which would have been payable in each of the preceding taxable years (including the current taxable year) to which a portion of such income is attributed if such portion had been included in income in such year.

Section 721 (b) provides a 2-year carry-over of the unused excess-profits credit for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, in the case of corporations 80 percent or more of whose gross income is derived from mining or processing minerals or from processing or otherwise preparing for market any seasonal fruit or vegetable, or any fish or other marine life. The unused excess-profits credit for any taxable year is the amount by which the excess-profits credit for such taxable year exceeds the excess-profits net income for such taxable year.

Conference agreement: The conference agreement retains section 721 with the following modifications:

(1) The item relative to income resulting from explorations, etc., has been rewritten. The exploration, etc., from which the income is derived must be the taxpayer's own exploration. Income resulting from activities of such a character carried on by a predecessor corporation is not entitled to the treatment provided in section 721.

(2) The item relative to income arising from the termination of a lease has been broadened so as to include all income arising from such source and not merely income occasioned by improvements on the property during the term of the lease.

(3) A new category of potentially abnormal income has been added, consisting of dividends on stock of foreign corporations, except foreign personal holding companies. This is part of the conference agreement relative to the dividends received credit of corporations computing their excess-profits credit on the income plan. See section 710.

(4) The fixed rule of allocation applicable to income resulting from exploration, etc., has been eliminated.

(5) A new provision is inserted making certain that income attributed to any future year or years will be included in excess-profits net income for such future year or years and subjected to excess-profits tax.

(6) Subsections (b) and (c), providing for a special 2-year carry-over of the unused excess-profits credit in the case of certain businesses, are eliminated.

Section 722 (Sec. 721½ of the Senate amendment). Adjustment of Abnormalities in Income and Capital

Section 721½ of the Senate amendment provides that the Commissioner shall have authority to make any adjustments which abnormally affect income or capital, and that his decision shall be subject to review by the Board of Tax Appeals.

Conference agreement: Under the conference agreement section 721½ is renumbered section 722 and given the heading "Adjustment of Abnormalities of Income and Capital." It grants the Commissioner authority to adjust any items which abnormally affect income or capital, and provides that the Commissioner's decision shall be subject to review by the Board of Tax Appeals. It is understood that the Treasury and members of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation will give further study to the entire problem covered by this section and will report to the appropriate committees on the subject as soon as possible.

Sections 723 and 724 (Secs. 722 and 723 of the Senate Amendment and Secs. 721 and 722 of the House Bill). Equity Invested Capital in Special Cases—Foreign Corporations, Invested Capital

In addition to changes in section numbers, a clerical change was made by the Senate amendment because of the changes made in section 714. The Senate provision is adopted with a further change in section number.

Section 724 (Sec. 723 of the House bill). Personal Service Corporations

House bill: The House bill allowed a personal service corporation an election to have its income taxed in the hands of its shareholders in lieu of paying an excess-profits tax. A personal service corporation was defined to mean a corporation whose income is attributable primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and are owners at all times during the taxable year of at least 80 percent in value of the stock of the corporation, and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income-producing factor. Foreign corporations and any corporation 50 percent or more of whose gross income consisted of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal were excluded. For the purposes of the stock-ownership test, an individual was considered as owning stock owned by his spouse or minor child.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains, in effect, three alternative definitions of a personal service corporation. The first is that contained in the House bill. The second defines a personal service corporation as a corporation (in which capital is not an income-producing factor) at least 80 percent in value of whose stock is owned at all times during the taxable year by shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the corporation's affairs. This definition differs from the House definition in that it does not require the corporation's income to be ascribed primarily to the activities of such shareholders. The third alternative contained in the Senate amendment defines a personal service corporation as a corporation (in which capital is not an income-producing factor) the income of which is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are actively engaged in the conduct of the corporation's affairs and all of the stock which is owned at all times during the taxable year by or for not more than 20 individuals. The effect of this alternative is to include corporations which have so-called silent partners who own more than 20 percent of its stock. As to both alternatives added by the Senate amendment, it is provided that an individual shall be considered as owning stock owned not only by his spouse or minor child, but by any guardian or trustee representing them.

Conference agreement: Under the conference agreement a personal service corporation is defined to mean a corporation whose income is attributable primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and are owners at all times during the taxable year of at least 70 percent in value of each class of stock of the corporation, and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income-producing factor. Foreign corporations and any corporation 50 percent or more of whose gross income consisted of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal are excluded. For the purposes of the stock-ownership test, an individual is considered as owning stock owned by his spouse or minor child or by any guardian or trustee representing them.

Section 726 (Sec. 725 of the Senate Amendment and Sec. 724 of the House Bill). Corporations Completing Contracts Under Merchant Marine Act, 1936

In addition to changing the section number, only a clarifying change was made in this section by the Senate amendment. The Senate provision is adopted, with a further change in section number.

Section 727 (Sec. 726 of the Senate Amendment and Sec. 725 of the House Bill). Exempt Corporations

The Senate amendment made no change in this section as contained in the House bill except to change the section number and to advance from Decemebr 1, 1940, to July 1, 1941, the date before which an investment company must register as a diversified company under the Investment Company Act of 1940 in order to qualify for exemption for the taxable years 1940 and 1941. The Senate provision is adopted with a further change in section number.

Section 728 (Sec. 727 of the Senate Amendment and Sec. 726 of the House Bill). Meaning of Terms Used

The Senate amendment and the conference agreement merely change the section number.

Section 729 (Sec. 728 of the Senate Amendment and Sec. 727 of the House Bill). Laws Applicable

House bill: Section 727 (b) of the House bill provided that no return need be filed by a corporation whose excess-profits net income (placed on an annual basis in the case of a taxable period of less than 1 year) was not greater than $5,000, the amount of the specific exemption contained in the House bill.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment provides that no return need be filed unless the corporation's excess-profits net income (placed on an annual basis in the case of a taxable period of less than 1 year) is in excess of $10,000, the amount of the specific exemption provided by the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement: In view of the conference action restoring the specific exemption to $5,000, the House provision is adopted with a further change in section number.

Section 730 (Sec. 729 of the Senate Amendment). Consolidated Returns

This section was not in the House bill. As added by the Senate amendment it permits consolidated returns to be filed by affiliated groups of corporations under certain circumstances, among which is the requirement that all the corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year for which the return is made must consent to regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. The making of a consolidated return shall be considered as such consent.

The term "affiliated group" is defined to mean one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation if—

(1) At least 95 percent of each class of the stock of each of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 95 percent of each class of the stock of at least one of the other corporations.

Foreign corporations (except certain 100-percent owned foreign subsidiaries of domestic corporations), China Trade Act corporations, and certain corporations deriving income from United States possessions are not to be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this provision.

Under the conference agreement—

(1) The class of corporations excluded from membership in an affiliated group is expanded to include certain other corporations in addition to those specified in the Senate amendment. As thus expanded, the class of corporations excluded from the affiliated group includes all those corporations which, by reason of the fact that they are themselves exempt from the excess-profits tax, or are taxable on a basis different from that used in the case of corporations generally (as in the case of foreign corporations), or are otherwise allowed special treatment (as in the case of China Trade Act corporations, personal service corporations, and corporations doing business in possessions of the United States), cannot appropriately be associated for tax purposes with corporations not accorded such special treatment. While insurance companies in general are not includible in an affiliated group, an insurance company may be affiliated with other insurance companies of the same taxable character. For example, an insurance company taxable under section 201 may file a consolidated return with another insurance company taxable under the same section, assuming both companies meet the stock ownership test. An insurance company taxable under section 201 may not, however, file a consolidated return with another insurance company taxable under section 204 or section 207. The conference agreement preserves the exception relative to certain 100-percent owned foreign subsidiaries of domestic corporations contained in the Senate amendment.

(2) The definition of the term "affiliated group" has been revised so as to speak in terms of includible corporations (all corporations not excluded from membership in an affiliated group being termed includible corporations) and to provide that the type of stock to which the 95-percent ownership test applies shall not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

The term "affiliated group" is defined to mean one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is itself an includible corporation if—

(a) At least 95 per centum of the stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

(b) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 95 per centum of the stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

In view of the above definition consolidated returns may not be filed by subsidiary corporations as an affiliated group unless the parent corporation through which such subsidiaries are connected is a member of the group. For instance, there will not be recognized as an affiliated group two industrial corporations the common parent of which is an insurance company or a personal holding company. In addition, no corporation which is connected by stock ownership with an affiliated group of includible corporations only through a nonincludible corporation may be included in a consolidated return. If a common parent which is an includible corporation owns 95 percent of the stock of a nonincludible corporation and 95 percent of the stock of an includible corporation, it, and the other includible corporations may, of course, file a consolidated return.

Under section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code and corresponding sections of prior revenue acts, the Commissioner has prescribed by regulations the requirement that all corporations falling within the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year shall join in the consolidated return. The section provides that all the members of the group shall consent to such regulations as a condition to the privilege of filing such return. It is contemplated that the Commissioner will prescribe like requirements for the purposes of the consolidated returns authorized by this section and the section provides that such regulations shall be consented to by all of the includible corporations.

Section 731. Income From Mining Strategic Metals (Sec. 730 of Senate Amendment)

This section is new in the Senate amendment, no comparable provision having been contained in the House bill. It exempts from excess-profits tax income derived from mining, reduction or beneficiation of tungsten, quicksilver, manganese, platinum, antimony, chromite, and tin, or the ores and material containing such metals. These materials have been declared to be strategic materials by the War Department. The exemption provided in section 730 is intended to encourage their domestic production.

Under the conference agreement, this section is changed to section 731 and it is given a new caption. It exempts from excess-profits tax that portion of the adjusted excess-profits net income of a domestic corporation which is attributable to mining within the United States of tungsten, quicksilver, manganese, platinum, antimony, chromite, or tin. The tax on the remaining portion of the adjusted excess-profits net income is an amount which bears the same ratio to the tax computed on all the adjusted excess-profits net income as such remaining portion bears to the entire adjusted excess-profits net income.

Supplement A. Exchanges: Excess-profits credit based on income

Except for technical changes and the changes indicated below, supplement A of the Senate amendment is the same as supplement A of the House bill.

House bill: Supplement A of the House bill contained provisions whereby, in computing the excess-profits credit of a taxpayer on the average earnings plan, the base-period experience of corporations, the assets of which had previously been acquired by the taxpayer in certain types of transactions, could be taken into account. This provision was intended not only to enable the base-period experience of the enterprise to be more truly reflected but to enable the income credit to be available in certain cases even though the taxpayer had not been in existence during the entire base period. The types of transactions in which the assets of another corporation must have been acquired to entitle the acquiring corporation to these benefits were as follows:

(1) Whereby all the assets of another corporation were acquired in whole or in part for all the stock of the acquiring corporation.

(2) Complete liquidations of subsidiaries under section 112 (b) (6).

(3) Statutory mergers or consolidations.

Senate amendment: Aside from certain technical changes the Senate amendment changed this provision of the House bill only in the following respects:

In addition to the types of transactions covered by the House bill, the Senate amendment added the type of exchange described in section 112 (g) (1) (C) of the Internal Revenue Code, that is, the acquisition by one corporation, in exchange solely for all or a part of its voting stock, of substantially all the properties of another corporation, the assumption by the acquiring corporation of a liability of the other or the fact that property acquired is subject to a liability being disregarded in the determination of whether the exchange is solely for voting stock. There were also added transfers before October 1, 1940, by one corporation of property to another corporation solely as paid-in surplus or a contribution to capital in respect of voting stock of the transferee corporation owned by the transferor corporation, assumptions of liabilities being disregarded as in the case of section 112 (g) (1) (C) reorganizations. Neither of these types of transactions are includible unless the transferor corporation is forthwith completely liquidated in pursuance of the plan under which the acquisition is made, and the transaction of which the acquisition is a part has in all respects the effect of a statutory merger or consolidation.

The Senate amendment also provides that in the case of a taxpayer which became an acquiring corporation in a taxable year after December 31, 1939, if, on September 11, 1940, and at all times thereafter until the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation, either the taxpayer or one of the transferor corporations involved in the transaction in which the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation owned not less than 75 percent of each class of stock of each of the other corporations involved in the transaction, then the average base period net income of the taxpayer should not be less than either (1) its average base period net income would have been if the transaction had not taken place or (2) the average base period net income of that transferor corporation whose average base period net income is the greatest.

A change, corresponding to that made in section 713, was made in section 742, authorizing the omission of one taxable year in the computation of average base period net income.

Conference agreement: The Senate provisions are adopted, except to the extent they authorize the complete exclusion of one taxable year in computing average base-period net income. (See sec. 713.) The conference agreement also makes a clarifying change, whereby section 743 (c) is stricken out and section 740 (g) inserted in lieu thereof. Section 740 (g) provides that the term "component corporation" includes a component corporation of a component corporation, except as used in section 742 (d) (1) and (2) and section 743 (a).

Supplement B. Exchanges: Highest bracket amount and invested capital

House bill: In the computation of the invested capital credit under the House bill, a number of variable factors were employed depending upon the size of the corporation. The preferential treatment accorded small corporations made it necessary to include provisions to prevent a large corporation from receiving small corporation treatment through breaking itself up into a number of small corporations by means of tax-free transactions. Supplement B of the House bill provided the necessary rules for adjusting the various factors employed in the computation of the invested capital credit following certain tax-free transactions.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment eliminates most of Supplement B as no longer necessary in view of the change made in section 714, relative to the computation of the invested capital credit. Section 751, relative to the determination of property paid in for stock and of borrowed capital in connection with certain exchanges, was retained, however, with a clerical amendment. Section 759, relative to the determination of the preferential rate amount (renumbered sec. 752 and entitled "Highest Bracket Amount"), was also retained, with technical amendments.

The definitions of "exchange", "transfer or upon exchange", "transferee upon exchange", and "preferential rate amount" (renamed "highest bracket amount"), contained in section 750 of the House bill, were also retained but the term "exchange" was clarified so as to make it clear that only transactions occurring after December 31, 1917, are embraced in the definition. Broadly speaking, the tax-free exchange provisions did not appear in the income-tax law until after such date.

Conference agreement: The conference agreement adopts the Senate provisions.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, and 4: These are changes in title and section numbers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: Section 124 (d) as added to the Internal Revenue Code by the House bill provided for making certain adjustments on account of changes in prior amortization or depreciation deductions occasioned by the provisions of subsection (d) (1), (2), (3), and (4), which adjustments were to be made without regard to the statute of limitations, closing agreements, or any other final determination of tax liability. This amendment expands such provision so as to cover the recomputation required by subsection (i), added by amendment No. 11. Because of the changes made in subsection (i) in conference, this amendment is no longer necessary, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 6: This is a clarifying amendment expanding the definition of the term "emergency facility" to include any facility which meets the required conditions, as well as land, buildings, machinery, or equipment, in terms of which the definition in the Houes bill was phrased. This is to make certain that the cost of dry docks, channels, airports, and similar facilities may be amortized. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 7, 8, and 9: These amendments substitute January 1, 1940, for July 10, 1940, the date contained in the House bill, as the date (1) after which the construction, reconstruction, erection, or installation of any facility must have been completed or its acquisition have taken place in order that the cost thereof may be subject to amortization, (2) with which the period of national emergency begins during which the facility must have been necessary in the interest of national defense, and (3) in terms of which the portion of the adjusted basis subject to amortization is defined. The House recedes with an amendment fixing June 10, 1940, as such date.

Amendment No. 10: Under the House bill, the certificate entitling the taxpayer to amortization must have been issued before whichever of the following dates was the later: (1) The beginning of the construction, etc., of the facility, or the date of its acquisition, or (2) the sixtieth day after the enactment of the bill. The Senate amendment changed the day specified in (2) to the one hundred and twentieth day after the enactment of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 11: This amendment substitutes for section 124 (i), (j) and (k) of the House bill a new subsection (i). In general, subsections (i), (j) and (k) of the House bill prohibited the destruction, demolition, etc., of any emergency facility without the consent of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and provided penalties for violations thereof. The substitue provision inserted by the Senate amendment provides that, if the taxpayer has been or will be paid or substantially reimbursed by the Government for all or a part of the cost of any emergency facility pursuant to any Government contract for the construction or acquisition of such facilities, or the purchase of supplies, or otherwise, amortization of the cost of such facility (including any amortization previously taken) will be disallowed unless within 30 days after making of such contract, or 60 days after the date of the enactment of the bill, whichever of such periods expires the later, the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy have certified to the Commissioner Internal Revenue that the contract contains provisions adequately protecting the public interest with respect to the future use and disposition of the facilities. The terms and conditions of such contracts with reference to payment or reimbursement of the cost of such facilities and the protecting of the Government's interest therein shall be made available to the public.

The House recedes with an amendment: Under the conference agreement, reimbursement by the United States must have been either (1) directly, by provision of any contract with the United States dealing expressly with such reimbursement, or (2) indirectly, because the price paid by the United States (insofar as return of cost of the facility is used as a factor in the fixing of such price) is recognized by the contract as including a return of cost greater than the normal exhaustion, wear and tear. In the event of such reimbursement and in the absence of the required certificate, amortization with respect to the facility in question is disallowed, but only for the period following the end of the month in which the contract is made. The time within which the certification that the Government's interest is adequately protected is required to be made has been increased to 90 days after the making of the contract or 120 days after the date of enactment of the bill. It is further provided that a certificate made by the Advisory Commission and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within 90 days after any contract is made or 120 days after the enactment of the bill, to the effect that, under such contract, reimbursement is not provided for within the meaning of the above provisions, shall be conclusive of such fact for the purposes of this provision.

Under the conference agreement the provision with respect to publicity has been retained.

Amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, and 15: These are clerical amendments. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 16 and 17: The effect of these amendments is to add to the class of contracts or subcontracts relative to which the profit-limiting provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act are suspended, any contracts or subcontracts which were entered into before the beginning of the contractor's or subcontractor's first taxable year which began in the year 1940 and which are not completed until after the last taxable year to which the excess-profits tax is applicable. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 18: This amendment adds a new section suspending the profit-limiting provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 as to any subcontract which would otherwise be subject to such act, if such subcontract was entered into by a corporate contractor with a corporate subcontractor in any taxable year of the subcontractor subject to the excess-profits tax, and if the principal contractor and the subcontractor were not affiliated at the time such subcontract was entered into or at any time thereafter up to and including the date of its completion. The definition of "affiliated" is substantially the same as that contained in section 2704 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code, i. e., two or more corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns at least 95 percent of the stock of the other or others, or (2) if at least 95 percent of the stock of two or more corporations is owned by the same interests. For the purposes of such rule the term "stock" is not to include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 19 and 20: These are changes in title and certain numbers. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 21, 22, 23, and 24:

The House bill provided rules applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938, for determining the effect on earnings and profits of the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation or the receipt by it of tax-free distributions. It also provided that such rules should not affect the extent to which accumulated earnings and profits are increased by reason of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913, but realized on or after such date. In order to effect a uniform rule for all prior taxable years, it provided that the stated rules shall be applied for the purpose of the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior revenue act as if such rules were a part of each such act when it was enacted. The rules apply not only for the purpose of determining when a distribution is a taxable dividend but also for the purpose of determining accumulated earnings and profits in computing equity invested capital for excess-profits-tax purposes.

The Senate amendments rearrange the provisions of the House bill, define earnings and profits, provide a method for determining that part of the earnings and profits consisting of the increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913, and, as to prior acts, provide that the rules for determining earnings and profits shall not affect the tax liability of any taxpayer for a particular year now pending before, or heretofore determined by, the Board of Tax Appeals, or any court of the United States.

The House recedes on amendment No. 23 and with amendments Nos. 21, 22, and 24, which substitute for the Senate provisions two subsections providing as follows:

Subsection (l) provides that the gain or loss realized from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation is to be determined for two purposes: (1) The computation of earnings and profits of the corporation as a whole, primarily for invested-capital purposes and (2) the computation of earnings and profits of the corporation for any period beginning after February 28, 1913, for the purpose of determining the character of dividend distributions. In (1) there is used the adjusted basis (under the law applicable to the year in which the sale or other disposition is made) for determining gain, but disregarding value as of March 1, 1913. In (2) there is used such adjusted basis for determining gain, giving effect to the value as of March 1, 1913, whenever applicable. The term "adjusted basis" means adjusted basis specified by the law, for example, see section 113 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, but is subject to the limitations of the third sentence of subsection (l) relative to adjustments proper in determining earnings and profits. The proper adjustments may differ under subsection (l) (1) and (2). Where the operation of subsection (l) results in a loss to be applied in decrease of earnings and profits, such loss may be subject to an adjustment required by subsection (m) (2).

The provisions in the House and Senate bills, that gain or loss so realized shall increase or decrease the earnings and profits to, but not beyond, the extent recognized in computing net income under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made, are retained. As used in this subsection the term "recognized" relates to a realized gain or loss which is recognized pursuant to the provisions of law, for example, see section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code. It does not relate to losses disallowed or not taken into account.

The provision in the House bill and Senate amendment, for cases in which the adjustment, prescribed in section 113, to the basis indicated in paragraph (1) or (2), as the case may be, of subsection (l), differs from the adjustment to such basis proper for the purpose of determining earnings or profits, and the provisions with respect to tax-free distributions, are also retained.

Subsection (m) provides rules for determining, for the purposes of section 115 (b) of the code, that part of the earnings and profits which is represented by increase in value of property accrued prior to March 1, 1913, but realized on or after such date.

Paragraph (1) of subsection (m) sets forth the general rule with respect to computing the increase to be made in that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913. Illustrations of the application of this paragraph are set forth in examples (1) and (4) of the Senate Finance Committee Report No. 2114, pages 25 and 26.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (m) is an exception to the general rule in paragraph (1) of subsection (m) and also operates as a limitation on the application of subsection (l). It provides that, if the application of subsection (l) to a sale or other disposition after February 28, 1913, results in a loss which is to be applied in decrease of earnings and profits for any period beginning after February 28, 1913, then, notwithstanding subsection (l) and in lieu of the rule provided in paragraph (1) of subsection (m), the amount of such loss so to be applied shall be reduced by the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of the property used in determining the loss, exceeds the adjusted basis computed without regard to the value of the property on March 1, 1913. If the amount so applied in reduction of the loss exceeds such loss, the excess over such loss shall increase that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913. The following examples will show the application of subsection (m) (2):

Example (1). Nondepreciable property was acquired prior to March 1, 1913, at a cost of $8, its value as of March 1, 1913, was $12, and it was sold in 1939 for $10. Under subsection (l) (2) the adjusted basis would be $12 and there would be a loss of $2. Assuming that such loss is recognized under section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code, the application of subsection (l) (2) would result in a loss from the sale in 1939 to be applied in decrease of earnings and profits for that year. Subsection (m) (2), however, applies and the loss of $2 is reduced by the amount by which the adjusted basis of $12 exceeds the cost of $8, namely $4. The amount of the loss is, accordingly, reduced from $2 to 0 and there is no decrease in earnings and profits for the year 1939 as the result of the sale. The amount applied in reduction of the decrease, namely $4, exceeds $2. Accordingly, as a result of the sale the excess of $2 increases that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

Example (2). Nondepreciable property was acquired prior to March 1, 1913, at a cost of $10, its value as of March 1, 1913, was $12, and it was sold in 1939 for $8. Under subsection (l) (2) the adjusted basis would be $12 and there would be a loss of $4. Assuming that such loss is recognized under section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code, the application of subsection (l) (2) would result in a loss from the sale in 1939 to be applied in decrease of earnings and profits for that year. Subsection (m) (2), however, applies and the loss of $4 is reduced by the amount by which the adjusted basis of $12 exceeds the cost of $10, namely $2. The amount of the loss is, accordingly, reduced from $4 to $2 and the decrease in earnings and profits for the year 1939 as the result of the sale is $2 instead of $4. The amount applied in reduction of the decrease, namely $2, does not exceed $4. Accordingly, as the result of the sale there is no increase in that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

The House bill and Senate amendment provided that, in order to effect a uniform rule for all prior years, the stated rules are made applicable to prior acts, but the Senate amendment added a provision providing that such rules should not affect the tax liability of any taxpayer for any year now pending before, or heretofore determined by, the Board of Tax Appeals, or any court of the United States. The tax liability may be that of the corporation the earnings or profits of which are being determined, or the tax liability of a shareholder of such corporation, or of some other taxpayer. These tax liabilities are left to be determined according to such decisions as the Board or courts may make under existing law. As to all matters except such tax liabilities, such stated rules are applicable, and res judicata will not be applicable. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the exception added by the Senate amendment relative to pending or decided cases shall apply only if the tax liability in question was pending before the Board of Tax Appeals or any court of the United States on September 20, 1940, or was determined prior to such date by the Board of Tax Appeals or any court of the United States.

Amendments Nos. 25 to 33, both inclusive: These amendments are changes in section numbers and cross-references. The House recedes on amendments Nos. 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and with amendments making further changes in cross-references on amendments Nos. 26 and 27.

Amendment No. 34: This amendment adds at the end of supplement A of subchapter C of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code a new section providing a special rule for the taxation of certain compensation received from the United States for patent infringement. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 35: This amendment was inserted by the Senate to carry out the recommendations contained in the President's message of September 14, 1940. Due to the time element, the amendment was written in broad language so that the entire subject matter of such message would be before the conferees for such action as they deemed appropriate to take. As the amendment passed the Senate, it conferred authority on the President (1) to establish a system of allotments and allowances for the dependents of persons serving in the land or naval forces of the United States, (2) to provide a system of insurance for such persons, (3) to provide unemployment allowances for them upon termination of their service, and (4) to preserve and modify their benefit rights under the Social Security Act and the Railroad Retirement Acts. There was no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which is divided into two parts.

Part I establishes a new system of insurance, called National Service Life Insurance, for persons in the active service of the land or naval forces (including the Coast Guard) of the United States. Such insurance (1) will be payable only in the event of death; (2) will carry premium rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at the rate of 3 per centum; (3) will be first issued as five-year level premium term insurance with the privilege of converting it into ordinary life, 20-payment life, or 30-payment life; (4) will contain provision for waiver of premiums, in the discretion of the Administrator, in the event of the continuous total disability of the insured for six months; (5) will provide that the United States will bear the excess mortality cost and the cost of waiver of premiums on account of total disability, when death or disability is traceable to the extra hazard of military or naval service; (6) will be payable in 240 equal monthly installments if the beneficiary is under 30 years of age, and in 120 equal monthly installments if the beneficiary is 30 years of age or over with payments continuing during the remaining lifetime of such beneficiary; and (7) will provide that unpaid installments remaining at the death of the beneficiary will be paid at the same rate and, unless designated in a different order by the insured, to the persons specified and in the order enumerated in section 602 (h) (3) of the amendment.

Persons in the active service may not take out United States Government life insurance after the date of enactment of this Act, but will be limited to National Service Life Insurance as provided in this part. The rights of World War Veterans under existing law with respect to United States Government life insurance is, however, not changed. No person may carry more than $10,000 of National Service Life Insurance nor a combined amount of National Service Life Insurance and United States Government life insurance in excess of $10,000 at any one time. The decision of the Administrator is made final and conclusive on all questions of law and fact, and there is specific provision that such decision shall not be reviewable by any other official or court of the United States, except in the event of suit as provided in section 817. The right to waiver of premiums is the only item which would involve any considerable amount of controversy between the insured or his beneficiaries and the Government, and as the waiver of premiums is an entirely gratuitous feature, it is not believed that suit against the United States to secure such gratuity should be authorized. For this reason section 817 authorizing a suit pursuant to section 19 of the World War Veterans Act specifically makes the decisions of the Administrator as to waiver or nonwaiver of premiums binding on the court.

Part II of the amendment prevents loss of annuity credit under the Railroad Retirement Acts, which occurred by reason of the interruption of service in the railroad industry by military service during periods prior to January 1, 1937, when a Federal Conscription Act was in effect or during periods of war or during periods when members of the National Guard or of other Reserve forces of the United States may have been required by any act of Congress, or by a call of the President pursuant to such act, to serve in the armed forces of the United States. In some cases individuals have failed to qualify for annuities because the time they spent in military service during the last World War or in other war periods could not be included in their years of service, and in other cases, although the individuals have qualified for annuities, such annuities were in amounts less than would be the case could such periods of military service have been taken into consideration. To prevent such losses to individuals whose railroad service has been interrupted by military service in such periods as above described, part II of the amendment provides for the inclusion of such military service, both for eligibility for an annuity and for computing the amount of the annuity. It provides methods for adjudicating again claims which have been adjudicated in the past but in which military service was not considered; and for the adjudication of claims in the future in which military service prior to January 1, 1937, may be a factor. Inasmuch as the additional costs resulting from the payment of benefits under the Railroad Retirement Acts on the basis of military service is not properly chargeable to the railroad industry, provision is made in the amendment for the payment of these costs by specific Government appropriations.

The managers on the part of the House desire to state that they agree with the managers on the part of the Senate that all of the proposals contained in Senate amendment numbered 35 should be given prompt and careful consideration. Inherent in those proposals, however, are broad and important problems of public policy which need intensive study and investigation before intelligent decisions may be reached with respect thereto. It is hoped that a comprehensive study of the subject matter contained in the President's message of September 14, 1940, be made as soon as practicable to the end that the proposals contained therein may be enacted into law with all reasonable dispatch.

Amendment No. 36: This amendment is intended to permit credit against the Federal unemployment tax for the calendar year 1936, 1937, 1938, or 1939, on employers of eight or more employees, for contributions paid by the employer before the sixtieth day after the date of enactment of this act into an unemployment fund under a State law. If the employer has paid the Federal tax without the benefit of the credit, a refund based on the credit would be permitted. With certain limited exceptions, the time has expired under existing law for paying contributions upon which credit against the tax for such years may be based. The House recedes with an amendment allowing the same extension of time as is provided in the Senate amendment, permitting credit against the tax for the same years, and providing for refunds based on the credit. However, in the case of the tax for 1939 and subsequent years, the provisions of existing law contained in section 1601 (a) (3) of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act limit the amount of credit, on account of contributions paid after the due date of the Federal return of the tax against which credit is taken but before July 1 next following such due date, to 90 percent of the amount which would have been allowable as credit on account of such contributions if they had been paid on or before the due date. The conference agreement retains that limitation on the credit against the tax for 1939 with respect to contributions paid before the sixtieth day after the date of enactment of this act. No similar limitation is provided with respect to the tax for prior years. In addition to certain clarifying changes from the Senate amendment, the conference agreement permits credit for contributions paid, without regard to the date of payment, if the assets of the taxpayer are at any time during the 59-day period following the date of enactment of this act, in the custody or control of a receiver, trustee, or other fiduciary appointed by, or under the control of, a court of competent jurisdiction.

Amendment No. 37: This amendment adds a new title, entitled "War-Profits Tax", imposing increased income and excess-profits taxes in the event of war. The Senate recedes.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
THOMAS H. CULLEN,
JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
JERE COOPER,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
FRANK CROWTHER,
HAROLD KNUTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further reading of the statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Since we have only a short time to consider this conference report, it seems to me that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee should have someone explain the tax proposal, because when this tax bill first came before the House it was called an excess profits tax bill. Now we have changed it to "the corporation income-tax bill."

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is in error on that. It is not changed.

Mr. RICH. It is called "the corporation income-tax bill."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, that is included, but it is not changed. The excess-profits tax is still in the bill.

Mr. RICH. I said you had changed it from "excess-profits tax" to "corporation income tax."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, it is both. The gentleman has been inquiring where we would get the money, and we can get considerable money there. Surely the gentleman would be favorable to that.

Mr. RICH. I would like to know how much money you are going to get by this bill, but I would like to know what difference and changes you have made in the regular excess profits tax schedule from what we had previous to the enactment of this conference report, if we do enact this report, which I think will be the case. Then we should have somebody explain to us what changes have been made in the excess-profits tax and the normal corporate taxes, because we are going to pass this bill in the next hour, and I think the Members of the House ought to know at least something about the bill, for they legislate and the people pay. Certainly they should know a little of what it is all about.

Mr. DOUGHTON. With all due respect for the distinguished statesman from Pennsylvania, I think he is a little premature, because that is what we had in mind—to explain the bill and to answer any questions. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that after I make a general statement I shall yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], chairman of the subcommittee on taxation, who is perhaps more familiar with the details of the bill than anyone else, and under whose leadership the bill was largely prepared. We shall endeavor as far as we can to make a general explanation and answer any questions that may be in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other Member.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is recognized.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, after 7 days in conference, the conferees of the House and Senate have reached an agreement on the matters in disagreement between the House and Senate on the excess profits tax bill (H. R. 10413).

In all my experience since I have been a Member of Congress, and especially since I have been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I have never known any tax bill that is as complex and involved as an excess profits tax bill. This one is no exception to the rule.

All tax legislation must, of necessity, be complex. Our corporate system is so involved that we must make our taxes agree as far as we possibly can or comport with our corporate system. We cannot make the corporate system comport with or agree with our tax laws. The whole question of excess-profits taxation is within itself a complex subject. Anyone who has not had experience in the writing of an excess profits tax law cannot even imagine the headaches connected with an honest effort to bring out a well-balanced, fair, and equitable excess profits tax bill. But under the circumstances, as you all know, I think it was the considered judgment of the Members of Congress, as well as the American people, that we should have an excess profits tax law at this time.

Of course, the need of haste in the preparation of this bill perhaps prevented the committees of the two bodies of Congress from giving as complete and full consideration as we ordinarily would in the preparation of a tax bill, but I will say with respect to the matter of haste that your committee did not permit the necessity for haste to interfere with making a very thorough and painstaking study of the subject. When the bill was originally brought before the House by our committee, the House did us the honor of passing the bill almost unanimously. We appreciated that very much, because we felt it was a tribute to the work of the Committee on Ways and Means. In fact, this House has always been very generous in its consideration of the work of our committee. We hope that in the future we will not do anything that will in any way cause the Members of the House to have less confidence in our committee than they have manifested in the past.

At the time the bill was before the House we gave the House assurance that we had made careful study of the matter and up to that time had brought out the best bill that in our considered judgment was reasonably possible.

When the bill went to the Senate, of course, as is always the case and properly so, it was referred to the Senate Committee on Finance. Hearings were held and careful study was given the subject. The Senate added quite a number of amendments to our bill, many of them merely clerical in character and making typographical changes, amendments that did not effect any fundamental change in the bill as it left the House.

As agreed upon by the conferees the fundamental principles of the House bill are retained in the conference agreement. There are, of course, some modifications. The Senate had more time than we. They, too, conducted hearings, they called additional witnesses and had the advantage, of course, of the study the House committee had given the question. I think that had we had additional time some of the amendments adopted by the Senate probably would have been included in the bill as it was presented to the House.

My good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], mentioned the increase in the corporation tax. The Senate added an amendment increasing the normal corporation tax by 3.1 percent. In the conference this provision was changed so as to apply only to those corporations earning more than $25,000 net income per annum. We did this because of the urgent need for additional revenue. The excess-profits tax and the increase in the normal-profits tax are separate but we thought that in consideration of the great need for additional revenue, we could very well afford to agree to that amendment with the proviso excepting, as I have stated, small corporations. We always try to look out for the small corporations, for they have more difficulty in the management of their business than do the large ones. They have more difficulty in securing credit, they do not have large purchasing power, and in other ways small corporations are at some disadvantage as contrasted with the large ones. So we gave them the benefit of the exemption from the increase in the normal corporation tax. As I just stated, need for additional revenue was the reason we agreed to this increase, and I think in this we acted properly. I was in full accord with it myself.

You will recall that we recently passed a billion-dollar tax bill known as the tax bill of 1940 which is estimated to increase the revenues of the Federal Government by about $1,000,000,000. In my judgment, after getting the very best estimate I can, if business continues, as we have every right to suppose it will, I believe this bill we are now considering will in a full year's operation produce revenue of $1,000,000,000—at least from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000; and this in itself will be quite an item in the revenues of the Government.

In a conference, of course, each body has to respect the views of the other, and there must be concessions by each body. Where there are material or considerable differences, concessions on the part of each body are absolutely necessary. I feel that the concessions by the conferees on the part of the House and Senate were about equal. As I stated, we have retained the fundamental principles of the bill; and I believe the conferees have brought out a bill that under all the circumstances under which it was considered and has been reported is as fair and reasonable a tax bill and will come as near producing the results we desire as would be reasonably possible in the time available to us. Had we had months and months we might have brought out a better bill, but it would take years of study. After all, no tax bill has ever been perfect, and we do not claim that for this one; but I do believe that the future administration of this law and subsequent events will disclose that this conference report under all the circumstances is as fair and equitable as could be brought back.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other Member desires to ask me any questions I shall be pleased to try to answer them, but right here let me say that so far as explaining the details of the bill is concerned I prefer that it be done by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], who has made a more thorough study and done more work on the bill than probably any other member of the committee. His labors in this connection have been arduous in the extreme, and when I complete my remarks I shall yield to him for the purpose of explaining the bill and answering questions.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman. Will the gentleman from North Carolina himself, or will he have some member of the committee, possibly the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], set out in the RECORD a table showing the taxes assessed under the bill as it left the House compared with the taxes assessed by the bill as it comes back from conference that the general public may have information from which it can understand the bill? Nowadays it requires a tax expert to digest these things. So if the gentleman will have that done I shall appreciate it myself and I know it would be appreciated by everyone.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Somebody will do that.

Before taking my seat let me express my thanks and appreciation to the staffs that worked so earnestly, faithfully, and intelligently on this bill. I am delighted with the fact that throughout the entire consideration of this bill by the House Committee on Ways and Means and in the conference committee there was not the slightest trace or evidence of partisanship. I compliment and express my thanks to the minority members of our committee. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and other minority members worked just as faithfully, assiduously, and diligently as any of the rest of us to bring out a workable bill. I repeat, it is heartening to me in this time of national stress and strain that this great committee could work on this complicated and far-reaching measure free of any suspicion, taint, or trace of partisanship.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. There has been some publicity to the effect that the Senate has reduced the amount of taxes that the great large corporations will have to pay. That is to say, under the Senate version and under the measure now before us, some of the large corporations will not have to pay as much taxes as they would have under the Senate version or even under the version of the conferees. Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman's question is not clear to me.

Mr. REES of Kansas. There has been quite a little publicity to the effect that big corporations will not have to pay as much tax as they would have had to pay under the House bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Probably some of them will not, but all corporations will pay more than they would pay under the present law.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will they pay as much or more under the bill as we have it today or under the bill as it left the House?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Some of them will pay slightly less and some of them will pay considerably more.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Perhaps the gentleman has answered the question.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I think a fair statement in answer to the gentleman's question is that the conference report is estimated to yield more revenue than the bill was estimated to yield at the time it passed the House.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. And under the Senate bill too. The conference report is estimated to yield more revenue than either the bill passed by the House or the bill passed by the Senate. Because of the nature of things, we have had to combine both bills.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. While this bill yields more money, will that be because of the fact that you have this 3.1 percent on the corporations over and above $25,000, and have you reduced what we called and termed the excess-profits tax on corporations that made a great amount of money over and above the 8 percent that it was intended to yield on their capital stock?

Mr. COOPER. The conference report will yield substantially more revenue than the bill would have yielded as it passed the House or the bill would have yielded as it passed the Senate. In the very nature of things, in working out a compromise it has been necessary for your conferees to combine certain features of both bills. The combination will result in more revenue.

Mr. RICH. Will certain corporations that have made exorbitant profits on their capital invested be permitted to earn a greater amount by this bill than they would by the bill passed by the House?

Mr. COOPER. Well, they cannot earn any more than 8 percent of their invested capital. Of course, as the bill passed the House there was a provision on invested capital. For the first $500,000 they were allowed 7 percent, and all above that they were allowed 5 percent. Under the bill as it now stands they are allowed 8 percent on their invested capital for the taxable year.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. In view of the inquiries that have been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other gentlemen, I think it might be well if the gentleman from Tennessee would start his remarks with an estimate furnished us by the experts as to the probable receipts under the existing bill. It may be difficult to present those figures, but I think the House would be glad to have some definite reference to those figures.

Mr. COOPER. I will be pleased to do that if it is desired at this time.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have several questions I would like to propound for the purpose of clarifying section 401 which the gentleman will recall was rewritten in the Senate and then rewritten in conference because the drafting board had not gotten just exactly what we thought we wanted.

Mr. COOPER. I will do the best I can to try to answer questions, but I will have to take them one at a time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the conference agreement in any way prevent increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913, or earnings and profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, from being distributed tax-free?

Mr. COOPER. The answer to that is no.

Mr. KNUTSON. The conference agreement carries out the policy of including both increase in value realized and earnings and profits before March 1, 1913, in accumulated earnings and profits, does it not?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have just one more question. Does section 401 entitled "Earnings and Profits of Corporations," as amended in the Senate and rewritten in conference permit the inclusion of pre-March 1, 1913, appreciation, realized since that date, in equity invested capital?

Mr. COOPER. Yes. Since the gentleman from Minnesota has raised those questions, I may add that the conference agreement in no way disturbs the Attorney General's opinion that pre-March 1, 1913, dividends from another corporation may be distributed by the receiving corporation tax-free to its shareholders.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in response to the question asked by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] I should like to give the House the benefit of this statement of estimates furnished me by the Treasury Department with respect to this bill.

Second Revenue Act of 1940. Estimated yield at estimated calendar year 1940 income levels and under arbitrary assumptions as to increase in net income over the lower estimate for calendar year 1940, in millions of dollars.

Nineteen hundred and forty levels, gross yield excess-profits tax, from one hundred and eighty-five to two hundred and ninety-five millions. Increase in normal tax, from two hundred and twenty to two hundred and thirty millions. Total, four hundred and five to five hundred and twenty-five millions.

Assuming an arbitrary income increase of 10 percent, the gross yield, excess-profits tax, would be four hundred millions, the increase in normal tax two hundred and forty millions, or six hundred and forty millions.

At an estimated income increase of 15 percent their figures would be five hundred and five millions excess-profits tax, and two hundred and fifty millions increase in normal tax, or a total of seven hundred and fifty-five millions.

Assuming an increase of 20 percent, the excess-profits tax would be six hundred and ten millions, the increase in normal tax two hundred and sixty millions, or eight hundred and seventy millions.

Assuming a 25-percent increase, the excess-profits tax would be seven hundred and twenty-five millions, the increase in normal tax two hundred and seventy millions, or a total of nine hundred and ninety-five millions.

Assuming a 30-percent increase, the excess-profits tax would be eight hundred and fifty millions, the increase in normal tax two hundred and eighty millions, or a total of $1,130,000,000.

The net yield excess-profits tax for 1940 is estimated at from $155,000,000 to $245,000,000. The increase in normal tax 1940 is estimated at from $185,000,000 to $190,000,000. This is a total of from $340,000,000 to $435,000,000.

Without going further into detail I will insert a table showing estimates of the revenue under the bill.

Second Revenue Act of 1940 [1]—estimated yield at estimated calendar year 1940 income levels and under arbitrary assumptions as to increase in net income over the lower estimates for calendar year 1940

[Millions of dollars]

In estimating the amount of revenue to be yielded by any bill, you have to take into consideration the conditions as they exist and improvements in business that are contemplated; in other words, the Federal Reserve index and various other factors that we have a right to look to for some degree of guidance and assistance in trying to arrive at estimates indicate there will be a further upturn or improvement in business conditions of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has probably answered the question I rose to ask, with reference to the 20-, 25-, and 30-percent increase. Does this mean an increase in the national income or in general business, or does it mean all those factors the Treasury takes into consideration in figuring the probable increase in income?

Mr. COOPER. Statutory net income, assuming arbitrary income increases.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. As I understand, consolidated returns are not allowed under the normal corporate tax.

Mr. COOPER. That is correct, except in the case of railroad companies.

Mr. LEAVY. Under this bill, however, consolidated returns are provided for.

Mr. COOPER. That is right.

Mr. LEAVY. Is the language of the bill such as to protect the individual corporation that stands alone as against the corporation that is one of a great group? In other words, is there not an advantage to a corporation that is a part of a group or part of a holding company or an affiliate in a corporate structure, by reason of allowing consolidated returns?

Mr. COOPER. No; I do not believe it can be answered in exactly that way. Of course, the bill provides that where, as an illustration, the parent corporation owns 95 percent of each class of the voting stock of the subsidiary corporation, consolidated returns are permitted.

Mr. LEAVY. Would it be possible for a holding company or a large corporate structure to set up new corporations that would take a chance, and thus absorb the profits?

Mr. COOPER. No; we definitely provide in this bill that they cannot split up or divide, and thus gain an advantage by reason of the consolidated-return provision.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I correctly understand the gentleman to say that the parent company has to own as much as 90 percent of the stock in order to be permitted to file a consolidated return?

Mr. COOPER. Ninety-five percent of the voting stock of the subsidiary corporation.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LECOMPTE. An amendment to the Social Security Act for credit for unemployment taxes was placed in the bill in the Senate. It was offered by Senator CLARK of Missouri, I believe. Is that amendment retained?

Mr. COOPER. It is retained in the conference report.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Is it amended or just retained?

Mr. COOPER. There is only a clarifying amendment added. In other words, it gives them one more chance. We said in 1939 that we were giving them one more chance, and the last chance, but we recognized that there is a considerable degree of equity in a number of cases that have been presented, so the conferees have accepted the so-called Clark amendment with certain clarifications, and we are going to allow them one more chance. However, we hope they will take advantage of this opportunity to get the thing cleaned up for these back years so that we will not be called upon from time to time to extend the privilege further.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I thank the gentleman. I believe that will result in bringing in a good deal of money.

Mr. COOPER. We think it will be helpful.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to call attention to the fact that there is virtually a 10-percent penalty in the amendment that was adopted as drawn up by the Treasury Department.

Mr. COOPER. It is the same as the provision in the 1939 Social Security Act.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thought that was 100.

Mr. COOPER. No; the fact is, as I recall the Senate amendment, it provided for 100, but in conference we worked it out so that the provision in the conference report conforms to the provisions of the Social Security Act passed in 1939. So the situation now will be the same as it was under the 1939 Social Security Act.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEEFE. On page 7, of the report, under the heading "Excess-profits credit," a question has been asked me by several of my constituents as to why you arrive at the 95 percent of the average base period income as an excess-profits credit rather than 100 percent.

Mr. COOPER. I will be pleased to answer that and that is one of the main things, I think, which should be explained to the House. It may take more than a moment to do that, if I may be indulged.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER. It will be remembered that under the House bill your Committee on Ways and Means unanimously worked out an arrangement for corporations to take either one of two alternative plans. They could either take the average-earnings plan, which contemplated the average earnings of the corporation over a base period of the years 1936 to 1939, inclusive, or they could take the invested-capital plan. The House bill also provided for the same 4-year base period for the invested-capital plan. The House bill also imposed for the privilege of taking the average-earnings plan an excess-profits tax of 4.1 percent of the corporation's normal corporation tax net income. The Senate changed that, in that it eliminated the 4.1-percent differential and it changed the invested-capital plan to the extent that it eliminated the 4 years of the base period and simply provided that for the taxable year the corporation would be allowed 8 percent on its invested capital under the invested-capital plan.

It will be recognized, and I think was recognized, by the members of the Ways and Means Committee that there should be some differential between these two alternative plans, in the interest of fairness for the new corporations, the low-income corporations, and those that could not take the average-earnings plan, for as I endeavored to illustrate during my remarks when the bill was under consideration in the House, a corporation having to take the invested-capital plan was cut off at 10 percent of its invested capital, whereas it might be in direct competition with a corporation that could take the average-earnings plan and might have been making 30 or 40 or 50 percent over the base period and would have to pay no excess-profits tax, whereas the corporation taking the invested-capital plan would be cut off at 10 percent. We recognize there should be some differential. So, the House bill provided for this 4.1-percent differential. The Senate bill eliminated that provision. The conference report provides that that differential shall be just about cut in half; in other words, instead of having the 4.1 percent, we have about 2 percent provided under this bill.

We changed it further in this respect. Instead of having the definite 2-percent difference on the normal corporation tax, we changed it so that instead of a corporation electing to use the average-earnings plan being allowed 100 percent credit on its average earnings over the base period, we would only allow it 95 percent. The 4.1 percent figured out on that basis amounted to about 90 percent that a corporation would be entitled to. The Senate bill, of course, provided for 100 percent. So we split the difference between 90 percent and 100 percent, and the conference report provides 95 percent. I think this is about as fair a compromise as we could have reached.

We still recognize that there is a difference between the two plans and we maintain the principle that the difference must be recognized, and we provide this 95 percent of the earnings over the base period so as to take care of that phase of the matter.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman this question? In reference to the invested capital, in order to determine invested capital, is there anything in this bill that would change the invested capital on which the corporations have been paying to the Federal Government under their sworn statements during the past 2 or 3 years? Several years ago we made a change in that respect, and people wanted to knife the Government and refused to pay what they should pay. Then we changed the law and gave them a clean bill of health. Is there anything in this bill now that will permit a corporation that has not paid up its full capital-stock tax to the Federal Government to come in now and increase its capital stock?

Mr. COOPER. There is nothing in here that has anything to do with that. The gentleman will recall that under the income-tax law there is a capital-stock tax levied on corporations, and for many years we have also had an excess-profits tax to protect the capital-stock tax, simply not to allow a corporation to so change or manipulate the capital stock and thereby reduce its payments of the capital-stock tax. We corrected that by providing an excess-profits tax. There is no change in this law with respect to that, except that we change the name only of that tax.

Mr. RICH. I hope we will always maintain that and compel them to pay on their sworn affidavits with respect to the amount of capital stock.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Not having that time to go through this printed report since reading it this morning, can the gentleman advise what the provision is as to the amortization period?

Mr. COOPER. There is no change in that.

Mr. KEEFE. That is the same as it was in the House bill?

Mr. COOPER. That is right. In other words, it is the same as was provided in the House bill, in that for new plants, plant expansion, or equipment that is certified by the Advisory Commission to the National Defense Council and the War Department or the Navy Department, as the case may be, as being necessary for national defense, they are allowed to amortize that over a period of 5 years.

Mr. KEEFE. Pardon me. That is not exactly what I had in mind.

Mr. COOPER. There is one change in that respect that perhaps I should mention, and that is that this applies to a facility completed after June 10. The House bill provided July 10.

Mr. KEEFE. The amortization may only be applied to those facilities which have been completed after June 10, 1940?

Mr. COOPER. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. And is not retroactive to January 1, 1940?

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. KEEFE. So as to take care of those plants which have actually been completed and been in operation in the defense program prior to that time?

Mr. COOPER. The House bill included the date, July 10, 1940. The Senate bill changed that to January 1, 1940, and we agreed in conference on the date, June 10, 1940. The controlling reason for fixing that date was that in the report on the first revenue bill of 1940 the Committee on Ways and Means stated that an effort would be made to formulate legislation and present a bill dealing with the question of amortization and excess profits, and it would be made applicable to the year 1940. We felt that on that date, June 10, when that report was made, notice was given that this would be done, so we accepted that date as the effective date for the purposes of this bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman answer one other question that relates to the matter of acquiring corporations? I believe the term is used "component corporations." I have not had time to study it carefully, as set out on page 20 of the report. Do I understand that under the terms and provisions of the bill as it now comes out of conference, a corporation existent under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, for instance, which in 1938 transferred all of its assets to a Delaware corporation through a stock transfer, with no change in capital structure or no change in officers or management or operations or anything else, such a corporation which has its existence beginning as of 1938 can use the entire consolidated return of income of the acquired corporation in determining its excess-profits tax base, under this law?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. That is provided for?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I understand it, there are two main methods, either earnings over a basic period, or the invested capital, that can be used?

Mr. COOPER. That is true. The conference report provides for an alternative plan that the corporation may elect.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What about the case of a corporation that may have an earnings-period history and changes its capital structure materially, either increases it or reduces it, during the taxable period?

Mr. COOPER. It then has a right to elect whichever plan it wants to; and, of course, will elect the plan that results in the less tax.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But is there not any provision in the bill that would take care of greatly increased earnings, because of the increased capital invested?

Mr. COOPER. Well, it is allowed 8 percent on its invested capital for the taxable year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In other words, there is a sort of combination plan?

Mr. COOPER. I mean 8 percent of its income for the taxable year on the invested capital.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is a provision which takes care of changes in capital structure and still permitting the corporation to use its earnings-period history?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I understand there was a Senate amendment which provided for taking any 3 of the last 4 years as the base. Was that Senate amendment agreed to?

Mr. COOPER. No. We did not agree to that amendment. We retained the House provision of allowing the corporation to count any one deficit year of the 4 years of the base period at zero, but we did not accept the amendment to take any 3 out of the 4 years, for the very obvious reason that we were told it would lose about $60,000,000 of revenue.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to inquire what prompted the committee to write into the bill a provision for consolidated returns of corporations. In other words, I would like to have the reasons for it explained.

Mr. COOPER. There are a number of reasons. I cannot detail all of them in a minute, but one of the first reasons was that every excess-profits tax we have had, provided for that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, you are following precedent in that respect?

Mr. COOPER. We followed precedent.

I may say also that I think all of us were impressed with the inherent fairness of it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I just want to express appreciation for the splendid and clear manner in which the gentleman from Tennessee has explained this measure during the short time he has had to talk about it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, let me say that I expect to vote for this conference report, not on the basis that it is a perfect bill—that is impossible—but because I believe it is the best we can get under all the circumstances. The chairman of the committee referred to the element of time. That need not have been as important as it is now, because there was ample opportunity when the first defense-tax bill, so-called, was up in June to have divided this question in two parts, namely, amortization and excess-profits tax. I offered an amendment to that bill providing for a 5-year amortization plan for defense facilities, such as is contained in the present bill. We could have enacted the amortization feature separately, and taken our time to write a proper excess-profits tax. Owing to the insistence of the administration that these two items go together, we find ourselves in the unfortunate position of being under pressure to prepare a bill containing the important and very complicated feature of excess-profits taxes in order to get the amortization provisions on the statute books so the defense program can get under way. I therefore charge the administration with being responsible for the delay in the defense program by refusing to put the amortization plan into effect earlier, and for the makeshift character of the bill resulting from considering it under duress.

This Congress should never have undertaken to write an excess-profits tax bill in the brief time that has been devoted to the preparation of the pending measure.

The people with whom we have consulted during the preparation of the conference report admit themselves that it will be necessary to bring in another tax bill very soon after the Seventy-seventh Congress meets. I think, therefore, the Members of the Congress need not be too much worried about some of the technicalities of the present bill, because parts of it probably will never be in operation at all if we revise the bill in the early part of the next session, whoever may be Members of the next House.

I consider the conference report an improvement over both bills. The House voted the original bill without a division or roll call, and if this bill is preferable to the former bill it certainly is entitled to the support of the House at the present time.

One of the outstanding features which seems to me to be an improvement is the consideration that has been given in this measure to small-business concerns. They have been taken care of in several different ways. The $5,000 exemption will eliminate over 400,000 small concerns from the possibility of any excess-profits tax liability. Those who may be subject to the tax are benefited by the rate brackets, which impose the lowest rate of tax on the smallest concerns. Those with less than $25,000 net income are allowed a 1-year carryover of the unused portion of their excess profits exemptions.

The relief provisions which are incorporated in the bill will very materially relieve hardship cases. Both specific and general relief provisions are included.

The Senate did a fairly good job in simplification, and the conference agreement retains the changes along that line.

About 25 pages of complicated text have been eliminated by adopting a flat 8-percent exemption in the case of corporations wishing to compute their excess-profits credit on the basis of current invested capital. I have always been in favor of this plan, as it is beneficial to concerns with low-base-period earnings who have been struggling to get back on their feet. This is particularly true of small businesses.

We have not claimed at any time that it was a simple bill, and it was impossible to make it so because we started with a complicated problem, and expert though our drafting service may be they are unable to write a simple measure when they start with a difficult and complicated premise. I think therefore we have to admit that it is very difficult to write such a measure as the one before us.

While many of the complexities of the original House bill have been eliminated, it still is too complicated for a mere mortal to understand. In many cases, it is going to cost taxpayers more to find out what their tax liability is under the bill than the amount of tax they will be obliged to pay.

I said before—and I repeat now—that while the bill is intended to prevent the creation of any new millionaires as a result of the defense expenditures, it probably will result in creating a new crop of millionaires in the legal and accounting professions.

In the tax bill we passed following the World War we tried to do away with war millionaires, and perhaps we did to a certain extent, but this bill will create a new class of millionaires, namely, the so-called tax experts. Any man who has sufficient nerve to tell business people that he can explain the details of this bill can be a millionaire overnight. I do not hesitate to make this statement, and in corroboration I want to read just a brief passage from the bill [reading]:

SEC. 752. (b). * * *

(4) Taxable years after certain exchanges under section 112 (b) (5): In the case of an exchange after the beginning of the first taxable year under this subchapter of any transferor or transferee upon such exchange, involving two or more transferors, or one or more transferors and one or more other persons, if immediately after the exchange no one of such transferors, or its shareholders, or both, and no one or more of such other persons are in control of the transferee and if such exchange is an exchange described in section 112 (b) (5) or so much of section 112 (c) or 112 (e) as refers to section 112 (b) (5), the highest bracket amount of any such transferor for any taxable year after the exchange shall be an amount equal to its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange—

(A) Minus an amount which bears the same ratio to its highest bracket amount immediately preceding the exchange as the excess of its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange over its daily invested capital for the day after the exchange bears to its daily invested capital for the day of the exchange, and

(B) Plus an amount which bears the same ratio to the excess over $500,000 of the sum of the amounts computed under subparagraph (A) with respect to each transferor, as the amount computed under subparagraph (A) with respect to such transferor bears to the sum of the amounts computed under such subparagraph with respect to each transferor.

Unfortunately, no "rosetta stone" or crystal ball is furnished to aid in arriving at the meaning of these hieroglyphics. The lawyer who can explain to a client the details of the section I have just quoted—and there are others equally complicated—will be in the millionaire class we are setting up under this bill. I think he will have an awful nerve to tell his client that he can explain it. If my colleagues on the other side can explain it I, of course, will yield my time to them for that purpose, but not seeing any of them rise I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe the average corporation, whether it be small or large, is going to have men in their organization who will be able to make out a tax return under this bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. A witness before the Senate Finance Committee very appropriately referred to the House bill as—

A monumental specimen of statutory incomprehensibility.

That, to my mind, is a very apt description of the bill. No business concern can possibly make out its returns under this bill without calling in expert advice. I do not believe there are brains enough down town in the Treasury Department or in the Bureau of Internal Revenue absolutely to explain these various complicated sections, but they do have the authority to tell a corporation or an individual where they get off, and to come up to the counter and pay. The taxpayer will be helpless.

This measure is perhaps the result of the demand of the people that we go the limit for national defense, but the people back home, your constituents and mine, very little realize what is before them. Let me say that this is just the beginning of the payment of our obligations under the defense program. I wish we had not wasted so many billions of dollars before it was started. We are now forced with raising fifteen or twenty billions with our national debt already approaching fifty billions, and with our available tax sources tapped almost to the limit. That is the situation we face, and the taxpayers of the country must realize that this is only the entering wedge of the most extravagant line of taxation this country or any other country has ever known. The fact is that we have not yet begun to tax.

It is unfortunate, but that is the situation.

Mr. RICH. Why has it been necessary for us to have to wait until this time before we start in providing a bill for taxation? We have needed this for the last 10 years.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is absolutely correct. We needed these tax bills long before the defense program came along. The administration has simply been taking us along the road to national bankruptcy by its irresponsible fiscal policy.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say one word further before I yield. The minority Members, although we had divergent views from those of the majority, have endeavored to do our part to bring about a report. It has been the most difficult, the most arduous, the most tedious, and the most disagreeable conference I have ever sat in during my experience as a member of the Ways and Means Committee. However, there has been a unanimity of feeling on the part of the conferees that the question was such a serious one that personal differences should be set aside and no partisanship exist.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. May I ask a few questions with reference to amendment No. 35? First, I see there is provision for a new system of insurance called national service life insurance, which is patterned after war-risk insurance. Will the national service life insurance in any way interfere with benefits which the World War veterans now enjoy under war-risk insurance?

Mr. TREADWAY. It will not. No amendment was given more consideration in conference than the very one of which the gentleman speaks. Our purpose was to keep intact the World War insurance for the veterans who are entitled to it, setting up an entirely new system for those who are liable to be drafted at the present time, entirely independent of the World War veterans or any benefits to which they were entitled. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It does. In part 2 of the amendment you define the loss of annuity credit under the Railroad Retirement Act.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is to take care of railroad men who served in the last war. It gives them credit for that service in determining their eligibility for railroad-retirement annuities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Then do I understand that the railroader who may be called under the draft will have his annuity benefits protected?

Mr. TREADWAY. They will be given somewhat similar treatment, as I understand it.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts did not fully catch the import of the gentleman's question.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman then to answer the question.

Mr. COOPER. All the provision included in the conference report does with respect to the railroad retirement program is simply this, and I can state it quicker and perhaps more clearly by an illustration: It was my privilege to serve in the Army 2 years during the World War. If I had been a railroad man, I would now be entitled to count those 2 years of service during wartime in figuring my 30 years' retirement benefit.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Can the same privilege be enjoyed by the potential veteran?

Mr. COOPER. No. It only takes care of the past. It does not go forward and take care of the future. In other words, this provision allows railroad men to count the time they spent in the military service of their country during wartime in figuring their 30 years' service.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to ask me any questions before my time expires?

Mr. COOPER. I was simply prompted by the gentleman's remarks with respect to the conference to offer this observation: During the time I have been privileged to serve as a House conferee during the past 6 or 7 years on bills coming from the Ways and Means Committee, I think we have a right to feel some degree of pride in the fact that there has never been a single item reported in disagreement. We have always threshed these things out in conference, and we have always brought in a full and complete conference report.

Mr. TREADWAY. But we never came nearer not getting a full report than with this bill?

Mr. COOPER. I think that is true.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is probably the very fair solution of a very difficult problem and contains the best of the Senate and House provisions, benefited, of course, by some modifications. In my opinion, Mr. Beaman of the legislative drafting service could explain the difficult paragraph to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] referred so that everybody could understand it in less than 5 minutes.

Tax law is an intricate subject and the layman such as I am and such as I represent finds it a little difficult to understand the technical phraseology contained in this bill, but we have to satisfy ourselves with appreciating what is attempted to be done in line with a well-defined policy. There has been much criticism of the bill in the limited time for debate and I want to talk for a few minutes on another subject related to taxes. That is the necessity in the very near future for more taxes, and I am going to keep talking about that until some decisive action is taken by the Ways and Means Committee and the Congress to produce the revenue necessary to meet the serious financial problem that has developed in this country during the last few years.

Let me read this to you. You are all familiar with it. But it will bear repeating. It is as applicable today as it was in 1933, on the 10th of March, when it was included in a message of the President to the Congress.

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

Now the figure can be changed to 10 years.

Thus we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000.

Our national debt is now $45,000,000,000, and we have accumulated deficits amounting to $26,000,000,000.

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed.

The unemployed still number more than 9,000,000.

Our Government's house is not in order and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

Recollect, if you please, that I am quoting from a message of the President of the United States on March 10, 1933, a President who had just taken office, who was a candidate again in 1936, and who is now a candidate in 1940, in defiance of an age-old tradition.

I quote further:

Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rests the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects those fundamental human values. It therefore becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.

No attempt has been made to make secure the foundation.

Then there is this closing, very significant, sentence, which is just as applicable today as it was the day it was uttered:

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

Are we avoiding it? No; our debt is so rapidly increasing that we had to raise the debt limit $4,000,000,000 in the last tax bill. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before us and told us that unless they soon had new revenue the national debt limit would have to be raised $9,000,000,000 more, and that the borrowing power would be almost exhausted on the 28th day of next February, with a greatly reduced general fund.

It looks now as though we were going to embark upon another program of deficit financing. We are doing nothing to coax private money into enterprise in this country. When the Defense Committee came before us they said it was their hope that private capital might be brought into the defense activities, but up to the present time it appears that very largely only Government money has been put into them, and we have placed these special amortization privileges in the bill that are intensely liberal.

We are still issuing tax-exempt securities. This is a matter of such vital importance that the question ought to be taken up by this Congress. By continuing this policy we are still providing a haven and a hiding place for the investments of those who do not care to take the risks that will face them in this unusual period in the years to come.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When President Roosevelt made the statements the gentleman has just quoted, nothing finer could have been said by any man. I wonder what he thinks about that question today. Does the gentleman believe he would make a statement today, when he is running for a third term, such as he did at that time?

Mr. CROWTHER. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the reading of this statement, which, as the gentleman said, is a sound and logical statement, indicates at this moment the marked difference between New Deal promises and New Deal performance. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Right you are; and I wonder whether he is going to make any such statements now. We will wait for them.

Mr. Speaker, the New Deal has adopted a policy of procrastination insofar as balancing the Budget is concerned. Many of its spokesmen declare that it is not necessary to balance it. We have been told that our wild orgy of spending should be recognized as investments by a new type of bookkeeping. President Roosevelt declared that our national debt was not a serious matter and suggested that it was in fact negligible, because we "owed it to ourselves." The taxpayers of this Nation are entitled to something more substantial regarding present and future national debt than the Pollyanna plan suggested by the President.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

JULY 17, 1940.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.:

I hereby tender to you my resignation as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE P. DARROW.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 618

Resolved, That FRED C. GARTNER, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby elected to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Detroit News of September 4 and an editorial from the Polish Daily News dated September 17, as translated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

EXTENDING THE NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 617.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 617

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3936, an act to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and yield myself 5 minutes at this time.

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate on the bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, as amended, known as the National Stolen Property Act.

The Judiciary Committee of the House struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill as passed by the Senate, and substituted, by way of amendment, an entirely new bill. The only unusual features of this rule are that all points of order against the bill are waived and, further, that it shall be in order to consider, without the intervention of any point of order, the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill.

The bill will be fully explained by the chairman and by other members of the Judiciary Committee of the House. Very briefly, the bill provides, as stated in section 2:

Whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States contrary to the public interests, he may, if in his judgment those interests would be served thereby, order the exclusion of such property from importation. If the property has been processed or transformed into property of a different character, or has been commingled with other property of a like or similar character in such manner as to lose its identity or to render impracticable its segregation from such other property, the President may order the exclusion of such processed, transformed, or commingled property from importation into the United States.

Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of any order issued by the President shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934 as amended and extended.

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary on this bill is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act, having considered the same, report it favorably to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The committee amendments are as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the act of May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794), as amended, is hereby further amended and extended to include and apply, subject to the provisions of this act, to any confiscated property.

"SEC. 2. Whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States contrary to the public interests, he may, if in his judgment those interests would be served thereby, order the exclusion of such property from importation. If the property has been processed or transformed into property of a different character, or has been commingled with other property of a like or similar character in such manner as to lose its identity or to render impracticable its segregation from such other property, the President may order the exclusion of such processed, transformed, or commingled property from importation into the United States.

"Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of any order issued by the President shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934 as amended and extended.

"SEC. 3. The term 'confiscated property' shall be deemed to include property which has been taken by means of force, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign state or government, whether recognized or unrecognized, or of any political subdivision of such state, or of any official board, commission, instrumentality, or agency of any such state, government, or political subdivision, without payment of just compensation or reasonable provision therefor having been made.

"SEC. 4. Nothing herein shall be construed to affect the status of any property assigned, conveyed, or transferred to the Government of the United States."

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, as amended, known as the National Stolen Property Act."

EXPLANATION OF SENATE BILL

The Senate bill as referred to the committee proposed to extend the National Stolen Property Act to include and apply to any property seized in violation of law or which had been confiscated. The bill defined the word "confiscated" to include the taking of any property by means of force by any foreign government, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign sovereign or government or of any political subdivision or instrumentality thereof or of any official board, commission, or agency whereby private property is taken without payment in United States currency or its equivalent having been made or provided for in a manner acceptable to the owners of the property so taken.

The Secretary of State did not recommend the identical House bill, H. R. 9669, stating that it appeared the primary purpose of the bill represented an attempt to compel foreign governments to defend their acts in our courts. The Secretary also pointed out the lack of discrimination between unlawful confiscations and lawful confiscations, and the necessity there would be in determining to which class the particular confiscation belonged, if the types were distinguished. The Secretary of State further suggested the unfavorable effect upon international commerce, and stated that from the standpoint of international relations he did not feel that he could recommend the enactment of the bill.

Hearings were held on the bill H. R. 9669, and the Committee on the Judiciary considered the objections of the State Department and heard other witnesses for and against the legislation.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

The committee amendment is identical with the bill H. R. 10529 and proposes to extend the National Stolen Property Act to include and apply, subject to the provisions of this act, to confiscated property. It provides that whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States contrary to the public interests, he may, if in his judgment those interests would be served thereby, order the exclusion of such property from importation.

The amendment also would authorize the President to exclude the confiscated property if it has been processed or transformed into property of a different character or commingled in such manner as to lose its identity.

A violation of an order excluding such property would subject the offender to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act.

"Confiscated property" is deemed to include property taken by means of force, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign state or government, whether recognized or unrecognized, or of any political subdivision of such state or of any official board, commission, instrumentality, or agency of any such state, government, or political subdivision without payment of just compensation or reasonable provision therefor having been made.

The act will not affect the status of any property assigned, conveyed, or transferred to the Government of the United States.

The objections to the bill which passed the Senate as made by the Secretary of State to the companion House bill H. R. 9669 do not obtain concerning the committee amendment, which is the same as H. R. 10529, and following are letters from the Secretary of State and Attorney General concerning the same:

SEPTEMBER 20, 1940.

The honorable HATTON W. SUMNERS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SUMNERS: I am in receipt of your letter of September 20, 1940, enclosing copies of a bill H. R. 10529, introduced by you, to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, as amended, known as the National Stolen Property Act, concerning which you request an expression of my views.

I have examined the bill with care and I perceive no objection to its enactment.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1940.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This acknowledges your letter of September 20, concerning a bill (H. R. 10529) to amend the National Stolen Property Act.

The National Stolen Property Act (act of May 22, 1934; 48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 413) makes it a criminal offense to transport in interstate or foreign commerce any stolen property, knowing it to have been stolen.

The purpose of the bill under consideration is to apply the provisions of that act to any property confiscated by any foreign State or Government, without payment or reasonable provision for just compensation, provided the President has ordered the exclusion of such property from importation into the United States. Property assigned, conveyed, or transferred to the Government of the United States is expressly exempted from the provisions of the legislation.

Whether the bill should receive favorable consideration involves a question of legislative policy, concerning which I prefer not to submit any suggestions.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to use some time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any objection to the consideration of this bill under the pending rule.

I have had no opportunity to analyze this bill but believe it should be debated and properly explained. From a hasty reading of it I concluded that the Congress of the United States has taken notice and cognizance of the situation that exists in Mexico where the property of our nationals has been seized, expropriated, and confiscated by the Government of Mexico, a so-called friendly Government. It is not only a question of the oil lands, but of farm lands and mines. These properties have been expropriated and no compensation has been paid for them. Expropriation without proper compensation is nothing more or less than communism or highway robbery.

I believe the purpose of this bill is to enable the President and the Government of the United States to prevent these stolen goods, seized by the Mexican Government, from coming back into the United States. I see no reason for anyone in the House to quibble on this issue. I believe we should call a spade a spade. I would not care to vote for this bill unless Mexico and the Mexican Government knew what the bill is and that it is aimed against such acts of highway robbery committed by the Mexican Government against citizens of the United States. I do not propose, as a Member of this House, to try to cover up the purpose of this bill or in any way to defend the practice of communism in any country in the American hemisphere.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman spoke with reference to the farm lands that have been confiscated belonging to American cititzens. I wish to inquire whether the bill pertains to products of lands in the delta of the Colorado River, some of which lands have been confiscated and are being tilled with water from our own country, the Colorado River, by Japanese farmers, and the farm produce is coming in competition with that of our own truck growers of the Southwest. If such are the bill's provisions, I certainly agree that the bill should be considered.

Mr. FISH. I want to go a little further and I think the gentleman will probably agree with me, at least I hope he will. The Mexican Government owes to citizens of the United States approximately $1,000,000,000. They have defaulted on their railroad bonds and other bonds for the last 10 years, some for a much longer period of time. Altogether they owe our citizens about $1,000,000,000. It seems to me that if the Mexican Government persists in expropriating, without compensation, properties of our nationals in Mexico, the time will soon be reached when we will be forced to take some action, not just action like this which is not very far reaching, but we may be forced to say to Mexico, "What do you propose to do?" and I for one would like to see the Government of the United States suggest that if they are unable to pay us this $1,000,000,000, which they are not, that we offer to liquidate the entire $1,000,000,000 and to cancel it for Lower California and, maybe, the delta of the Colorado River.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to my good friend that, perhaps, considering the situation that we are in diplomatically with all the world, we might just as well forego for the present such statements, and I say that in all kindness.

Mr. FISH. I know the gentleman does, and I know that is his feeling. I regret to say to the gentleman that I have an entirely different point of view from the gentleman. I know the gentleman is honest and sincere and I respect him.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I think the proper place for a Member of Congress to speak out on foreign affairs is in the House of Representatives. If I believed in the point of view of the gentleman from Texas, whom I admire greatly, I would be in favor of wiping out the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate of the United States and admitting that the Congress had no right to discuss foreign affairs in the House or in the Senate, but I hope that time may never come. I am afraid that we do not discuss foreign affairs sufficiently in the House and in the Senate and that we do not take our proper place in the consideration of and shaping of foreign policies that we ought to take.

I am rather inclined to say that if we did consider and debate our foreign policies in both the House and Senate, we might have some check on some of them that are leading us perilously close to war at the present time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman seems to be confining his remarks to Mexico. Under the language of the bill, I read "any foreign state or government"; does that not apply to all governments of the world?

Mr. FISH. I believe it does. I believe it applies to Soviet Russia as well. I hope it applies to all governments which seize the property of our citizens. It certainly is the function of the Congress of the United States to protect its citizens all over the world in their right to trade. That has been the historic policy of the past, and I hope it will continue to be. I hope the Members of Congress will stand upon their feet and demand that the right of American citizens to trade and to own property and to be safe in the ownership of their property will be safeguarded throughout the world.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It may be that the New Deal policy of condoning the highway robbery which the gentleman has mentioned is a portion of the New Deal program to sell American citizens down the river in order that our New Deal brethren can play Santa Claus in a big way to foreign nations and foreign people under their so-called good-neighbor policy.

Mr. FISH. We have certainly played Santa Claus to the whole world, but there is one thing the House does not want done. It does not want to condone the robbery of American citizens by any nation, regardless of the good-neighbor policy, or any other policy. That is an American policy that we cannot quibble about, and we must take an open stand to protect the rights of our citizens to trade in every nation of the world, whether it be China or Mexico or Bolivia.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the charming lady from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I wonder if the gentleman knows that some American citizens had considerable quantities of valuable interests in Poland?

Mr. FISH. The principle is the same in all nations.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. What does the gentleman propose that we do as to that?

Mr. FISH. I propose that we always, as far as we humanly can, will protect the rights of our citizens in every nation of the world; and eventually, when peace comes, I assume that we will have justifiable claims in those countries that have been invaded.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to inquire of the gentleman just what conditions exist that cause a bill of this kind to be brought before the House. What are we driving at? This is a very unusual bill.

Mr. FISH. That is what I think the House is entitled to know, and that is what I have tried to tell the House, and I will repeat a little more concisely. I do not believe that we should bring in legislation here and try to hide the purpose of the legislation. That is not the American way. We should say what we mean and mean what we say, and when we legislate, the House ought to know exactly what we are legislating about and the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. FISH. I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

As I understand the purpose of the legislation—I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is, and I see him on his feet. He may want to correct me or confirm what I say, but my understanding is the purpose of the legislation is to prevent the importation of stolen American goods into the United States, either in the original form or in their processed form; and I cannot understand how any single Member of Congress would want to oppose that. If the bill is more far reaching, we have a right to know it before we vote on it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not made up my mind on the bill, but I am trying to find out what is the specific case that has arisen that causes this bill to be introduced.

Mr. FISH. I should say it is directed primarily at the stolen oil, that oil that was confiscated in Mexico, and no compensation, in most cases, provided by the Mexican Government to the American owner. But it applies to other property as well.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The point about this bill that causes me particular concern begins on line 15, section 2, "whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States, contrary to the public interest, he may"—then it provides what he may do.

We are here passing a law giving the President plenary power to make a determination, the result of which may very conceivably be such that will plunge us directly into a war. Now, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee. I was attending as a member of the Rules Committee when this bill was reported out. It was my feeling that the bill had nothing very serious in it, but if you will study the bill carefully you will find that it is pregnant with danger. You will find that it lodges with the President a discretion which the Congress may well rue that it ever granted in a moment of hysteria at a time when we are engrossed with a great national defense.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has made a very important contribution to the consideration of this bill. That is the reason that I opposed this bill going through without any discussion as far as I was concerned. I had hoped that some members of the committee would tell the House what was in the bill. I am not inclined to support the bill after that statement which shows that it is a very far-reaching bill, gives enormous powers to the President; and the gentleman from Michigan now says it gives him power that may involve us in war. I trust this is not so. I hope we will not give the President carte blanche authority to involve us in war. I thought this bill was aimed at protecting the property of American citizens, to protect them against having their property seized in foreign countries and imported for sale in the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK rose.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HANCOCK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill is not limited to property of American citizens which has been confiscated abroad; it applies to all confiscated property, as I understand it.

Mr. FISH. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. HANCOCK. As I understand it, for instance, if property has been confiscated from private individuals by the Soviet Government under this bill the President could stop all importations of such property into this country. Is that not true?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is a member of the committee that considered the bill. He must remember that I am not and did not attend any of the hearings. The gentleman's statement makes it all the more necessary to analyze and to discuss the purpose, intent, and scope of the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. I thought the gentleman did not understand the full purpose of the bill.

Mr. FISH. I thought at first glance that it applied to property of American citizens but evidently it goes much further.

Mr. HANCOCK. No; it is not limited to American property.

Mr. FISH. I hope the members of the Judiciary Committee will have time to explain the bill to the House, that we may have ample debate on the merits and demerits of the bill. That is all I am demanding, that we have adequate consideration of this bill and not rush it through under a rule and say that we must not discuss any foreign policy at this time.

We might as well realize that America under its present defense policy proposes to arm itself and make itself invincible on land, sea, and air and that it is not afraid of any one nation or any group of nations. We propose to consider these bills before us as they affect the interest of American citizens and our own interests regardless of that of any other nation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I point out now, since the issue has been raised, that we have not got a friend in the world today except England and some of the South American countries. We have not got a friend among the major nations except England; but I think we might have had a few more friends if the Members of Congress had taken more active part in formulating our foreign policies and had had more to say about them. I think we could have had more than one friend in the world today among the major powers.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I certainly will.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman kindly name the nations that are not friends of ours that he would like to be our friends?

Mr. FISH. I just said I should like to be friends with all nations who would like to be friendly to us. Today we have one friend, and that friend is England. The other major nations——

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I am talking about major nations.

Mr. BLOOM. We still have Turkey, we still have Belgium, we still have France.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman wins. We have Turkey. I am glad we still have Turkey, but I doubt if she, in her present situation, would be very helpful. Thanksgiving is still coming, and we have two Thanksgivings.

Mr. BLOOM. Would the gentleman want to be friends with Hitler and Stalin?

Mr. FISH. I should like to be friendly with every nation that wants to be friendly with us. We still have diplomatic relations with both the Nazis and Communists.

Mr. BLOOM. Or with Mussolini?

Mr. FISH. And with Fascist Italy. I do not want America to go to war with any nation that does not want to attack us.

Mr. BLOOM. Nobody else wants to go to war.

Mr. HAWKS. What is the gentleman talking that way for?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] claims that France is our friend. If that be so, then why are his New Deal brethren stripping essential portions of Uncle Sam's defense establishments and sending his warships, airplanes, arms, munitions, and implements of war to the British in order to help them carry on their offensive war against the French and murder many Frenchmen as the British have been doing?

Mr. BLOOM. That is not so.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is so. The British turned their guns on the French and slaughtered many Frenchmen. Dakar was the last but not the first slaughter.

Mr. BLOOM. That is not so. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. FISH. If the gentlemen do not mind, I should like to use my own time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In view of the suggestion of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to the gentleman speaking, if there is anything in the bill that may cause this country to get into trouble as a result of open discussion of the merits or demerits of the bill, I do not believe it is a good time to bring such a bill to the floor of the House. I think that if we are going to bring bills upon the floor of the House that may jeopardize our peace with other nations it is about time we got out of here, and cool off. Otherwise we may become a menace to the country.

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman from Montana that if this bill jeopardizes the peace of America and might involve us in war I will certainly vote against the bill. If the members of the Judiciary Committee present arguments that prove that, I hope the House will vote the bill down.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] covered part of my question. It is clearly evident to me that the gentleman now speaking has not read this bill, because it involves not only American citizens but it involves property located in Mexico, it involves property located in every nation of the world, friendly or unfriendly. Any confiscated article can be stopped at our shore under the terms of this bill, whether it be a work of art, money, or in fact anything else if we know it has been confiscated. That is the way I read the bill. It applies not only to taking something from an American citizen but it applies when one country or another takes something from its own nationals and later sends it to this country.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is correct. When I first read the bill I thought it applied merely to the property of American citizens that had been seized or confiscated. It now appears the bill goes much further. If that is the case, we are giving enormous power to the President, and if the Members of the House believe this might involve us in war then I hope the bill is defeated.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Missouri called attention to the fact that this bill would affect stolen property even though it was not stolen from American nationals. The real danger of this bill is that it gives to the President the right to determine when property has been illegally confiscated, taken, or stolen. He may make a finding here that all the property in England or all the property in Russia has been confiscated.

Mr. FISH. In other words, you are giving the President unlimited power.

Mr. MICHENER. That is right.

Mr. FISH. I am very glad that I started this discussion because when I began I was practically told we should not discuss this bill at all, that we must proceed to pass it immediately. Evidently new light has been thrown on the situation and I hope that now the House will consider it on its merits and openly decide what in its judgment should be done.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman will read section 3 he will observe that the term "confiscated property" may mean not only that which has been taken by force but that which has been taken lawfully in some foreign country but for which compensation has not yet been paid to citizens.

Mr. FISH. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. Even though it is by virtue of the law of that nation.

Mr. FISH. That is correct; yes.

Mr. KEEFE. That is going a long way.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has to say about this bill. Personally, I have been hoping ever since last spring that a bill along this line would be brought up so that we could vote for it. If there is some better way to do it than to have this authority lodged in the President of the United States, well and good, but if there is no other person in whom we can lodge authority, I am in favor of doing it this way. For instance, let us consider the Dutch East Indies with its rubber and other commodities which we desire from there. If they fell in the hands of the Japanese without payment therefor to whoever owns it, I suppose, under this act, the President could say those goods cannot come in here. Something like that might happen, although I do not think it will happen. There is a case where he can use his discretion, I assume, under this bill and let the goods come in if he wanted to let them come in or if he did not find they were so taken, it might be a case where we might want the goods to come in.

Let us swing over to western Europe now.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman take that up when the Committee is considering the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may not be able to get time.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman will remember that some weeks ago we passed a bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee giving the President and the Secretary of the Treasury power to impound the funds of foreign nationals in this country.

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is not this bill somewhat of an anomaly to that one?

Mr. FISH. Yes. In view of all this, I do not see the necessity for it. I welcomed this bill when I first read it, because I thought it would protect American citizens in Mexico. Now I find it goes much further and I believe it is a bill that we should very carefully discuss from all angles.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. This bill, as I read it, also covers the property of the nationals of the country from which the property comes.

Mr. FISH. It does.

Mr. KNUTSON. We have no right to tell a foreign country how it shall handle property within the confines of its own country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is there not a more fundamental principle involved in this bill? Are we not extending to the executive department of this Government judicial powers that ought to be retained by the courts? We are giving to the President, whoever he may be, power to adjudicate facts; also power to embargo imports from any country.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman has raised an important question, and I think that question should be discussed by members of the Committee on the Judiciary who will have charge of this bill. All I have done is to raise the issue and seek to have it discussed, to see if we cannot find out what the bill means. That is the only purpose for which I have taken this time. I did not know what it meant when I first took the floor, but I have found out a lot about it since and am opposed to it as granting dangerous and too far-reaching powers to the President. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWKS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the worst thing about this bill is that it delegates more discretion to the President of the United States. I think it is about time that we get to the point where we do not give any more discretion to the President [applause], because he is not properly using the discretion he already has. In my opinion, it is about time for the President of the United States to begin cooperating in conserving our resources for national defense. Right now he is spending money that was appropriated for national defense for the Navy to buy 5,000 silver-plated finger bowls and 5,000 silver-plated trays to go with them. What possible relation these things can have to national defense is beyond my comprehension. How we can afford such things at a time when every effort should be devoted to national defense is impossible for me to understand.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It may be that those who have been looting the Treasury have occasion to use finger bowls.

Mr. TABER. That may be; but finger bowls for national defense is some byword, is it not? Is not that a watchword to go before the country with?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The finger bowls and the plates are to keep up the morale of the Navy.

Mr. TABER. That may be, but it must be a funny kind of morale if they expect the rest of us to get along with paper cups. To my mind, the Advisory Commission for National Defense, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Congress should put the "kibosh" on such performances, because it is impossible to get the President to support national defense by getting rid of waste. I believe the more discretion we give to the President, the worse off this country is going to be. I believe this discretion, if it is to be vested somewhere, should be vested in definite language determined by the Congress. I hope that before we get through considering this kind of a bill we will place the discretion right here in the Congress and not do a lot of monkey work and permit the President to make a fool of the country any more. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my previous remarks on this rule the committee report on the bill which is now before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to presume to advise or lecture any Member of the House or the Senate with reference to his utterances. But certainly it is a high duty resting upon the Members of the Congress to help guard against the possibility of being worked into a position of isolation insofar as the nations of the earth are concerned. We face a situation that calls for the highest degree of restraint on the part of Members of Congress and the highest type of diplomacy that this Nation has ever been challenged to produce. These are serious times. We are confronted by this definite situation: Mexico, pursuing a policy which it has adopted with regard to property located in Mexico, has taken over a good deal of oil production. A great deal of debate and argument and diplomatic exchanges has taken place, as you all know.

Regardless of how this situation came about, the oil is now, this minute, being brought into the United States imperiling the solvency of every oil producer in this country, so we are advised. If you defeat this rule you leave the situation exactly there. That is all there is about it. I am talking about the rule now. When we get to where we discuss what sort of a bill we have, that is different. I am talking about the rule now which is the subject matter now up for consideration. That is what we are soon to vote on. We are now considering the rule that brings the subject matter before the House for consideration. Vote down the rule and you leave the inflow of this oil that you have been criticizing without any chance to do anything about it if the rule is adopted then. When we get to the merits of the bill and consider amendments, the present matter soon to be voted on is whether we will consider the general subject matter of the bill. This rule proposes that we may do it. I do not believe there is anything else to be said at the moment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary if it would be possible to limit this legislation to oil? As it is now it covers everything.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I said to my distinguished friend, when we get to considering the bill amendments may be offered, and the judgment of the House can then be taken as to what the provisions in the bill ought to be.

Mr. KNUTSON. Are we going to consider this bill under an open rule?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is an open rule; yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I should like it understood that I also am in favor of the good-neighbor policy and want friendly relations with all nations, especially the republics to the south of us, but I would hate to see this pending measure limited only to oil, although that may be the commodity of paramount interest.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that we will consider that when we have agreed to this rule. That is what I am trying to say, that we consider one thing at a time, namely, are we going to consider the subject matter that is covered by this bill? That is all that is before the House at the moment.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is understood, and I am for the rule. I merely wish to point out that likely metals, minerals, and lands have been seized in Mexico belonging to American citizens, the products of which may be competing with similar products of our own country. Without having studied the bill to be taken up yet, I am very anxious to protect fully and properly our own people.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to insist on this. It is true that the House has the privilege of expressing its views, but I want to submit to the common sense and the patriotic impulses of every Member on this floor that in hours like this, in critical conditions like this, there is no higher duty resting upon the American Members of Congress than to leave as free from embarrassment as possible the diplomatic agencies of this country that are trying to prevent us from becoming isolated.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman's committee held extensive hearings on this subject, did it not, and has not the measure received a good deal of careful consideration? Let me ask first if the subcommittee did not conduct extensive hearings on this measure?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] was chairman of the subcommittee that has been working on this thing for many weeks. We are dealing with a concrete, definite situation. This oil is coming into this country and threatening the solvency of an American industry. The committee of which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is chairman is composed of distinguished gentlemen on each side of the House. The committee has been working on this matter for months. They have finally brought in a bill. Nobody is fully satisfied with it, but there is no objection on the part of the State Department, the Department of Justice, or the oil people, who are the folks who are most interested. They have been working on the matter for a long time. They know what the situation is. They would like to have this bill passed.

There is just one question at the moment, and that is whether you want this condition to continue as it is or do you want the Congress to consider this as a practical matter and see exactly what can be done about it?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am in perfect sympathy and accord with what the gentleman says——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand that.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is an able lawyer and I am wondering if we cannot adopt an amendment that will limit the operations of this bill to property that has been seized from American nationals.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Since the gentleman asks me the question, I would say, of course, he understands we can do that if that is the judgment of the House when we go into the merits of the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would be for it if we adopted that amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But we cannot do anything at all about it until we get this rule adopted.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will admit that the way the bill is now it applies to Russia and every other country in the world and not just Mexico.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We will get to that later. That is not the matter we are now considering. The sole matter we are now considering, as the gentleman knows, is whether we will adopt the rule.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think we should adopt the rule and then thresh the whole thing out.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course, that is common sense.

Mr. KNUTSON. There should not be any opposition to the adoption of the rule.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. You always did have a lot of sense and sometime you use it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the hearings that were conducted was oil the only commodity that was shown to be moving in that comes within this classification?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will say very candidly to my friend, although I do not know what the chairman of the subcommittee would say about it, that it is probably true that the oil situation is responsible for this proposed legislation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the hearings show that anything else came in?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know about the hearings before the subcommittee or what they showed, but I will be very candid with the gentleman and state that it is the oil situation that is responsible for this proposed legislation.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to take part of the time which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] has so courteously granted me to say that I have studied this legislation for the last 4 months, ever since May, and have been through all its stages with the distinguished gentlemen who compose Subcommittee No. 3, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SATTERFIELD], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL]. This bill is the best we can do. We believe in this bill wholeheartedly. We believe we can defend it, if you will allow us to do so, on its merits. We think there ought not to be a single vote against this rule.

May I say further that we do not sympathize with the criticism which has been heaped upon our good neighbor on the south, the Republic of Mexico. She is a sovereign nation, whose laws and court decisions we are bound to respect. The Supreme Court of Mexico has held the oil expropriations, within the boundaries of Mexico, by the Government of Mexico, in accord with the law of Mexico, to be valid. Our own Supreme Court has repeatedly held that we have no right to review, gainsay, or reverse any decision by the courts of another nation. Inveigh as some will, this is the law.

The bill which the pending resolution seeks to have considered does not attempt to abrogate the law nor disregard our treaty obligations. It is a sincere attempt to utilize our constituted diplomatic authorities to deal diplomatically with a delicate situation that needs attention for the common good and which may not be dealt with otherwise.

The question now at issue is, Shall we consider the bill which the adoption of the pending rule would make in order?

We most earnestly urge the adoption of the resolution by unanimous vote.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to remind the House that the only question before us at this time is whether this bill, which has been carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee, shall be considered under the rule which has been presented.

I repeat that this is an open rule and the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule with opportunity for amendment.

I now yield such time as he may desire to the chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was absent when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] addressed the House. Personally, the evidence presented before the Rules Committee by committees that considered the bill was such that we could not deny bringing the measure before the House for its consideration. This has been the policy of the Rules Committee during the entire Congress.

The rule is a broad and liberal one. It provides for 1 hour general debate after which the bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule for amendment.

I shall not offer any amendments to the bill, but I am informed that some will be submitted and I am not in position at this time to state whether they should be adopted because the Committee on the Judiciary claims that the bill, as drafted, has the approval of the State Department. I cannot question the statement of members of that committee but, on the other hand, I am not informed that the passage of the bill is urged by the State Department.

Mr. Speaker, personally I do not know how much of the so-called properties have been stolen but, instead of using the word "properties" I think the committee should have been more candid and used the word "oils." I was made to believe originally that the bill applies to oil which finds its way surreptitiously to the aggressor nations. And I, for one, believe that we should not permit any irregular diversion of an essential product of such tremendous aid to Germany, Japan, and Italy.

The secret understanding between these aggressor nations which has long existed but only recently publicly revealed with the announcement of the signing of a treaty is especially aimed at the United States. Officials of the three nations boastfully admit it. This situation calls for our very serious attention and consideration. We should not hesitate to take appropriate action and, if necessary, strong measures, short of war, to protect our interests, and to serve notice to these nations that America is on guard.

MEXICO SINCERELY DESIRES TO BE FRIENDLY TO THE UNITED STATES

I hope this measure will not be taken as an unfriendly act with respect to Mexico because I feel Mexico is extremely friendly to our country. I realize there are some gentlemen who seem to disapprove of the action of Mexico with regard to the oil interests in that country, but I am of the opinion that we cannot and should not attempt to dictate internal policies to Mexico. We would resent any other country attempting to dictate or interfere with our domestic policies.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, Mexico has endeavored to pay the oil companies a fair and reasonable value for the properties they have expropriated as determined by the Claims Commission appointed to settle such claims. When we take into consideration the activities of our large oil companies as brought out in the Teapot Dome investigation, and the unfairness of the power companies against the Government and power consumers, I, for one, do not blame Mexico; in fact, I feel it was justified in taking over the oil lands within its domain which in many instances have been acquired by questionable methods. And I feel that nothing should be done that would in any way disturb our friendly relationship with Mexico. In this connection I also desire to make some remarks on the Russian situation.

WHY SHOULD WE NOT ALSO CULTIVATE THE GOOD WILL OF RUSSIA?

Yesterday's leading editorial in the Washington Times-Herald emphasizes a viewpoint concerning Russia that I have suggested and recommended on several occasions; the last time as recently as September 24.

My query has been and still is today: Why should not the United States try to cultivate the good will of the Soviet Republics? It is realized now in many quarters that Great Britain made a serious if not well-nigh fatal mistake by not concluding and cementing friendly relations with Russia ahead of Germany. Should we repeat that error?

Says today's Times-Herald editorial:

HERE'S A CHANCE

Things being balled up as they are, it would seem as if the most sensible thing we could do would be to scout around for some more friends—powerful friends—if such can be found.

Stalin has some 176,000,000 people under his thumb. Out of that 176,000,000 it is possible to round up seven or eight million soldiers.

Wouldn't it be better to have Russia benevolently neutral toward us than to have it hostile to us?

Russia has boundaries contiguous with those of both Germany and Japan. Hitler obtained Russia's benevolent neutrality, if not active friendship, before he invaded Poland. Wouldn't it be wise for us to try to obtain Russia's benevolent neutrality before we take on Germany or Japan, or both?

ACCIDENT INSURANCE

Not knowing which way the Russian cat might jump, neither Germany nor Japan could afford to unleash as much force against us as if they knew Russia was on their side. Not having a 2-ocean Navy as yet * * * we might find such an accident insurance policy invaluable.

To better our relations with Russia would in no way commit us to official approval of communism, any more than it would mean Stalin had suddenly fallen in love with capitalism. It would be plain, realistic power politics, played for our own safety.

We think our Government ought to look into this possibility.

Mr. Speaker, I agree fully with the logic of the foregoing editorial. It seems to me to suggest but the plainest of common sense. As I stated on the floor of the House on September 4:

RUSSIA'S FRIENDSHIP IS WORTH HAVING

Mr. SABATH. I feel we should discontinue the exportation of many raw materials, scrap iron, oils, gas, including all strategic materials used in warfare, to other countries with the exception of England, and especially to Japan, which uses these materials in the wanton, cold-blooded massacre of defenseless old men, women, and children in righteous, worthy China.

I do not desire to say or do anything that might unfavorably involve us, but I do think that drastic action by our Government will force these Japanese war lords to come down off their high horses, shed some of their conceit, and cause them to discontinue their arrogant, bellicose attitude toward the United States.

Also, I read in today's newspapers that Russia desires to become more friendly toward the United States and that she desires to negotiate the purchase of certain articles for her own use. I believe that due favorable consideration should be given to that proposal, because she will, perhaps, unfortunately, be the only country in Europe, except chivalrous Great Britain, open to our future export surpluses.

Obviously, the Fascists and the capitalist group of this country dislike the Russian form of government, but that should not be our national concern. Russia always has been friendly toward the United States, notably during the Civil War; and she does not need our assistance. She is and will be able to take care of herself; therefore, why should we not cultivate and promote friendly commercial relations with her?

NAZIS IN UNITED STATES ARE ENEMIES OF SOVIET REPUBLICS

Mr. Speaker, the United States has been very lenient with Japan. No other nation would have been so patient. We have overlooked more than one affront from the Nipponese. Sometimes it has seemed as if they were bent on intentionally provoking us. Japan's often insolent attitude is all the more reason why we should leave no stone unturned to obtain the good will of Russia. Russia would come in handy if we are ever obliged to call Japan's bluff.

I know there are critics of Russia and its policies. Investigation will reveal, I sincerely believe, that a whole lot of the criticism of Russia is due to Nazi and Fascist propaganda. That is one of the subtle tricks of the leaders of these two "isms." They conduct all kinds of subversive activities and then try to escape detection and blame by pointing their fingers at the Communists.

I concede there is a certain school of misguided Communists, but I will say this for them, they work in the open, which is absolutely opposite to the fifth-column methods of the Nazis and Fascists.

Communists have a political party. They conduct their campaigns openly within the law. The candidates place their names on the ballots under the name of the Communist Party. They address the people publicly over the radio. Thus we know where to find the Communists but not the cowardly vassals of the madman Hitler. Their method is to work unobserved in the dark.

Mr. Speaker, the recent action of Japan in joining forces with Hitler should open the eyes of all intelligent Americans, regardless of their political affiliations, race, or religious creed. Henceforth no one having any respect or love for our flag and country should in any way give the slightest comfort to the evil-minded triumvirate that seeks first to destroy all democracies and then to rule the world by the sword.

Our duty is to show a solid front to our enemies. Let the entire world know that we in America are united, ready, prepared, and willing, if necessary, to defend our liberties and freedom to the last ounce of our strength.

Though this Government may not be 100 percent perfect, it is the best in the world. No people in all history have been able to devise a better one. It is the duty of every patriotic man and woman in the Nation to bring home to the few misguided ones where their duty lies.

Every person within our borders must understand this Nation henceforth will not tolerate disloyal utterances or unpatriotic activities which in these serious times constitute outright treason.

Persons of Nazi leanings may as well understand once for all that the United States will positively not tolerate divided allegiance. I submit that it is neither unfair nor unreasonable to expect that those who live in this country and enjoy its blessings shall be loyal to this country. This word to the wise should be sufficient.

EXPRESSED BELIEF IN SECRET CONSPIRACY YEARS AGO

Mr. Speaker, I have never pretended to be a prophet or the son of a prophet, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will bear me out in the statement that as long as 2½ years ago I voiced the belief on the floor of this House that a secret or tacit agreement existed between Hitler, Mussolini, and Japan to dominate Europe, Asia, and Africa, but my warning went unheeded.

In the Orient, Japan was already pursuing a course toward domination of the yellow races, apparently with preassurance that Italy and Germany would so engage the attention of the European democracies that interference in China would be impossible.

As long as 2½ years ago I predicted in this House nearly everything that has since happened. Permit me in this connection to quote the following excerpts from my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18, 1938:

Mr. SABATH. Hitler's seizure of Austria is but a prelude of more ambitious plans. Peace- and liberty-loving Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary, and the other small independent nations now see his shadow across their lands—Memel, Danzig, and the Polish Corridor.

For the time being, engaged in consolidating his gains, he may utter reassuring words to Poland and Yugoslavia. But they have only to recall his utter disregard of treaties, and his oft-repeated statements as to his ultimate aims, to realize how necessary it is that they prepare to resist invasion, for invasion is bound to come.

* * * * * * *

Many ripe scholars feel that the suppression of Great Britain will mean the consummation of a plan to form three great powers outside of North and South America.

I doubt very much that France, which is fighting domestic problems with her back to the wall, could, after the disappearance of the other countries I have named, long withstand being dismembered also.

* * * * * * *

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind but that Hitler, Mussolini, and the raving-mad Japanese war lords are in a conspiracy to divide the entire world among themselves, or at least as much of it as they can manage to grab.

WARNED POLISH LEADERS NOT TO FORGET TREATMENT OF POLES BY PRUSSIA

Great Britain, rather late, is commencing to realize its danger. Does Poland realize her danger?

The leaders in Poland might well hearken back to other days, and consider the former treatment of Poles in Prussia. I remember in 1908 how Prussia prohibited, by edict, the teaching of the Polish language in their own schools, and how they proposed in their Parliament a compulsory dispossession of the homes of Polanders. For 2,000 years the Poles and their fathers before them had occupied this land, but notwithstanding and in contravention of the Congress of Vienna of 1815, and in violation of Prussia's organic laws prohibiting distinctions between citizens of the Kingdom, that Prussia's Parliament even then showed its prejudice by discrimination against the Polish.

At the time I speak of, Congressman Arthur L. Bates, of Pennsylvania, was impelled to introduce into this House a resolution extending good wishes and sympathy to the Poles in Prussia in their efforts to maintain their property rights.

Recalling this, and viewing the present prejudice which governs in Germany, Poland should properly estimate the future insofar as her relations with that country are concerned.

EVEN AMERICA MAY NOT BE AS SAFE AS SHE FEELS

Up to about 12 years ago we confidently believed ourselves properly protected against possible attack from any and all quarters; but in view of the increased and ever-increasing knowledge of aviation and mammoth airplane carriers, are we really free from military danger?

If this nefarious triumvirate should effect the dismemberment of the great British Empire, what would become of Canada? Could we still feel free and at ease without present-day Canada?

URGED ADEQUATE PREPAREDNESS LONG AGO

Only a little while ago I read in the public press about concessions that had been or were contemplated to be granted by Mexico to Japan in Lower California. That recalled to my mind the offer by Germany in 1917, in the Zimmerman note, to give Mexico a part of the United States if Mexico would join Germany, and the offer to Japan of the Philippine Islands in return for military aid. When those audacious offers were first brought to light it was thought they were sheer allied propaganda, but we were soon convinced of the authenticity of these reports by documentary evidence that came into possession of our Government.

In view of all this and our enemies within, I feel that it behooves us adequately to protect ourselves against even the remotest eventuality. * * * I am ready to vote for the construction of a navy and an air force that will be unmistakably adequate for our proper defense.

If Great Britain and France had taken a firm stand against the initial rearmament of Hitler, Mussolini, and Japan, and had not been lulled to sleep by undependable peace assurances, they would have been in position 2 years ago to stop Mussolini and Hitler in their mad rush toward a menacing world conquest.

* * * * * * *

The only interest I have in the problem of national defense is the welfare of our whole country, to which I owe much and for which I am ready to give everything I possess. This great country of my adoption has been kind to me, and if I leave behind only one legacy, I want it to be a contribution, weak though it be, to the defense, not offense, and the promotion of the welfare of the land that made me whatever I am and gave me whatever I have.

I LIKE TO FEEL THAT I CAN CHANGE MY VIEWPOINTS IN ACCORDANCE WITH CHANGED CONDITIONS

And so, in conclusion, let me say that, in view of the alarming world conditions to which I have alluded, I shall vote and work for the passage of the pending bill. This may be surprising to some of the critics who have accused me of being a pacifist, charging that I was against adequate national defense; but let me say to them it is not they who have changed my view. I was just as conscientious when I opposed large Army and Navy appropriations in past years as I am conscientious today in supporting this bill. I have changed my views because and only because world conditions have changed. When I get so old or so benumbed of brain and character that I cannot change my view in accordance with changing conditions and a changing world, it is time for me to be carried out feet first, and I want to be.

I have criticized conditions and things at times, and I shall do so again whenever I see anything that I think merits criticism. But I love this country. I will vote any amount of money necessary to protect it from enemies either within or without. Today, perhaps more than at any other time in its history, the United States of America stands out against the dark and stormy seas of racial persecution, intrigue, conspiracy, and jealousy as the one and only enduring beacon light of hope.

I am grateful to the people of my district for having permitted me for so many years to be a Member of this great American Congress, the greatest democratic legislative body on earth, wherein every man is accorded the unfettered right to say what he pleases. Let us strive to preserve and promote this priceless heritage for ourselves and posterity. I do not expect to be here forever, but I do want the Stars and Stripes and a democratic form of government to endure here forever.

Mr. Speaker, neither Poland, France, Great Britain, nor any of the other now destroyed nations paid any heed to the warnings, and I hope that such will not be the case with the United States.

And regardless of what the Nazi, Fascist, or capitalistic groups in the United States may say about Russia, I reiterate that the best interest of the United States will be served not by criticizing and assailing Russia but by taking just the opposite course and seeking her friendly cooperation. The latter course will inure to the benefit of America, and it is the welfare and safety of America that in these critical days should be our sole objectives.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter from a Briton addressed to an American.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOXEY). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3936, with Mr. COLE of Maryland in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] is recognized for 30 minutes, under the rule.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill simply vests in the President, no matter who he may be, permanently, the right to determine whether or not any importation of any confiscated property is detrimental to the interests of the public in the United States. If so, then he is given the right to bar its importation.

Since May we have been diligently seeking a better way. We realize the fact that there is just criticism, whether it be from the Democratic or the Republican standpoint, in vesting more power in the President. From our standpoint it is unfair to him to burden him with more duties. He is already bearing a superhuman load.

From your standpoint, of course, it is unfair to him for this same reason, and also you may contend that it is unwise to increase the power of the office. No one wishes to increase the power of any governmental official unless it is necessary. It is necessary in this instance, for the President is our only voice and agent in foreign affairs. No other agency nor branch of our Government is either so well recognized or so well qualified for such a function. We think it wise to charge our Chief Executive with this new duty. We would so think no matter who was the occupant of the White House. We believe implicitly in the great man who is now the head of this Nation. He has demonstrated his tact and ability. He can be trusted to the limit to safeguard the interests of the people of America. Therefore, with confidence, we bring you this bill, which is the only thing that we could agree upon to do this job.

It is a ticklish business. Under our treaty engagements we have given guaranty to other nations that they, not we, should rule in their own sovereign jurisdictions. We may not legislate for them. We may not amend nor repeal their statutes, nor overrule their courts. We worked for weeks to perfect a feasible and enforceable law for the courts to administer. It cannot be done. Therefore we bring you this bill and commend it as the only safe, feasible approach to the solution of this problem.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it true that oil which was owned by American citizens and which has been confiscated is the very oil that is being sent to the United States to be sold?

Mr. HOBBS. It is certainly true that oil has been expropriated in Mexico. It is true that our State Department has contended that what Mexico denominated "expropriation" was confiscation. It is perfectly true that American operators of oil properties in Mexico have lost what rights they formerly exercised under bona fide claim of ownership.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am glad the gentleman has made that clear.

Mr. HOBBS. It is also perfectly true that the Mexican Government has offered to pay in American currency the fair value of every drop of that oil that has been expropriated or confiscated, whichever you please to call it. Therefore we cannot say that had the original bill been passed, it would have applied to Mexico at all. I wish to call the distinguished gentleman's attention to another matter. It is absolutely impossible to identify any of the oil in question. It is all commingled in the pipe lines. Mexico, now, as she did before the so-called expropriation or confiscation, operates more of her own wells than were expropriated. Mexico, in its proposition to the foreign oil companies, said that she would guarantee that every gallon of the oil sold to produce the revenue to pay for the expropriated oil would be from her own wells, distinct and separate from those expropriated.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman has made a very clear statement. Now, there is some criticism here about giving power to the President. Who else could possibly have the power to iron out and clear up these questions and protect American property rights of American citizens other than the President of the United States?

Mr. HOBBS. No one.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Was there any suggestion made with reference to that paragraph?

Mr. HOBBS. There was a suggestion made that it be left to the courts, but of course the Supreme Court of the United States in three cases has held that that cannot be done; that no court of the United States has the power to review, or revise, or overrule a decision of the supreme court of another sovereign power.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I should be delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Why is it this bill is not limited in scope to the confiscated or expropriated property, or legally taken property, if one may say, without compensation of American nationals? And why is it so broad as to include the power in the President to exclude the property of nationals of Mexico, or of Russia, of Germany, or of any nation in the world that may have been taken by force or may have been taken by justification of law, although compensation has not yet been paid? Why has it not been limited to property of American nationals only? Why are we interested in the property of every other person on the face of the earth? That is what I would like to have answered.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I am delighted to answer the distinguished gentleman. I am sure, good lawyer that he is, he will recognize the validity of the reasons from a legal standpoint; and also, good American that he is, that he will appreciate the force of our reasons, from a practical standpoint, for incorporating in the bill the provisions that are there.

This bill is aimed solely at one objective, the protection of American markets from foreign dumping. It makes no difference whatsoever whether the property has been confiscated from American citizens or from any others. What we propose is to deny importation to any property that has been confiscated, if and when, in the judgment of the President, its importation would be contrary to the interests of the public. We seek to prevent unfair competition with our own businessmen.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be delighted to yield again.

Mr. KEEFE. Why, then, is not that a proper subject to be handled by tariff legislation? Why is it to be taken up under a Stolen Property Act? That is what I cannot understand as a lawyer.

Mr. HOBBS. I am sure if the gentleman had studied this question as we have——

Mr. KEEFE. Indeed, I have not.

Mr. HOBBS. He would not think that a tariff barrier would be a satisfactory solution. What we say is that under certain circumstances where the taking has been unconscionable, the properties confiscated should not be permitted to enter here at all to come into competition with American products.

This proposes an embargo against incoming property that was confiscated. Such imports are to be stopped—not licensed. We decline to say, "Such importations are wrongful, but if you pay us we will let them in." That would be compounding the wrong and would make us particeps criminis. That would put money into the United States Treasury, but would leave our own suffering businessmen to their suffering.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Our markets would be affected just the same whether the property that was brought in was the confiscated property of American citizens or the confiscated property of nationals of other countries.

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, they would; and I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Let me give a concrete illustration. Let us take silver, for instance. There is a nation which has confiscated tons of silver and which has found a market for some of that silver in the United States to a considerable extent—bootlegging it in. We want to stop that. We do not wish to bring that stolen silver, or confiscated silver, or expropriated silver, or whatever you may call it, into this country in competition with our own silver mines. We do not think that is a proper article of commerce to enter our channels of trade, and we are going to stop the importation rather than by saying "If you pay us, we will let you bring it in."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the learned gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Did the gentleman consider whether it would not be possible, by legislation, to confer additional jurisdiction upon the courts—our Supreme Court, for instance—so that these questions of fact under a statutory definition could be determined judicially rather than politically or in an executive way?

Mr. HOBBS. We considered that for all of 2 months with representatives of the Department of Justice and of the State Department. We sought desperately to work out a bill on that line; and not until we found the situation hopeless, as far as that avenue of approach was concerned, did we accept this compromise.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean by hopeless that it would be impossible to do that under our Constitution?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; I will state to the gentleman that it is impossible.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Under the Constitution?

Mr. HOBBS. It is utterly impossible to do what the gentleman has in mind under our Constitution, treaties, international law, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, we all understand the motive behind this bill, and I believe we are sympathetic. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated, the purpose of the bill is to exclude imports of what we regard as stolen oil from Mexico.

The original draft of the bill was considered in the committee at some length and was rejected because we felt it was impractical and that it went too far; that it was like taking a sledge hammer to kill a mosquito on a baby's head. If we want to exclude foreign oil, the thing to do is to increase the excise tax or to put a tariff on it.

There are not many of us here today, but I ask all of you to read the bill carefully before you vote on it. It is not confined to stolen property that formerly belonged to American citizens; it gives the President the power to exclude property of every name and nature that has been confiscated in any foreign nation anywhere on earth if he deems the importation contrary to American interests. "Confiscated property" is defined as being property taken by any foreign nation by force or by its own law, decree, order, or ordinance; in other words, it makes the President of the United States the sole judge of the legality of the acts of foreign governments. I am not talking about this President or any particular future President; I am talking about the individual who happens to be or become President of the United States.

This places upon him the responsibility of examining the title, under our laws, of all property on the face of the earth that anyone attempts to import into the United States. He can exclude property which has been acquired pursuant to the law of any foreign nation. How does that square with the good-neighbor policy? We are trying to woo the good will of South America and at the same time we are asked to pass a law which is a direct slap in the face not only of Mexico but of every other foreign country.

What is confiscated property according to our ideas? Practically all the property of Europe has been confiscated. Certainly, we think everything in Soviet Russia has been confiscated, in violation of our definition of title. Whenever there is a revolution in South America, title to property is likely to change hands and to change hands in accordance with the law of that particular country. When a foreign country changes its constitution, when it changes its laws, those changes are often contrary to our ideas of good law, and contrary to the provisions of our Constitution, but whenever a foreign nation makes such a law affecting the property rights of its own citizens or ours, the President of the United States may declare that property owned under that law is "confiscated," and exclude it from the United States, if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. Chairman, let us forget who is President of the United States today and deal with this proposition as an abstract proposition. There should be no politics in this discussion. I think you will agree with me that it would give the President of the United States power to create a situation which might lead directly to war. We talk about centralization of power. Why, this moves straight toward absolute dictatorship. This is the longest step in that direction that has ever been proposed in this Congress, and I think we ought to weigh this question very thoroughly before voting on it. It is interesting to remember that we have had imports of oil from Mexico for a good many years. When the properties down there were owned by the American oil companies there was no protest against the imports, but now that they are owned by the Mexican Government we have this very drastic bill.

At least one large American oil company has negotiated what it regards a satisfactory settlement for its seized Mexican property and is importing Mexican oil. Others have not done so and are asking for this legislation.

It is not introduced in the interest of the owners of American oil properties primarily, but of certain American producers, and it springs from trade rivalry between a few big companies. If you wish to exclude oil produced in foreign countries, increase the excise tax or put on a tariff. That is the orderly and proper way of doing it. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to extend the Stolen Property Act. I happen to have been a member of the subcommittee which held hearings on this bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] was the acting chairman of that subcommittee. We had hearings which extended over a long period of time and we carefully considered this bill and every provision connected with it. We not only heard the various Departments, which included the Department of Justice, and the Department of State was also present and gave testimony respecting this proposed legislation. In addition to that we had a large number of those engaged in the oil business in the State of Texas, and all through the Southern States, before us, and they gave some very potent testimony respecting existing conditions following the importation of confiscated property from Mexico, a policy that we are now attempting to stamp out.

This bill proposes to stop the importation of stolen oil and stolen property into this country, not alone the property itself, but the property which is commingled with other property. Under the provisions of this bill that property which is known to have been confiscated or expropriated is stopped at the border and is not permitted to come into this country and therefore the same cannot come in direct competition with our own products.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman said property which is known to have been confiscated. Where does that knowledge come from? Who determines that?

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, who is also a member of the Judiciary Committee and one of the outstanding members of that great committee, that under the provisions of this bill the power is vested in the President of the United States to determine that question. That is one of the outstanding things which was in the mind of each and every member of the subcommittee at the time this bill was considered and reported to the full committee; I know that the members of the full committee had that same question in mind at the time they voted to report this bill favorably to the House. That point which has confused the committee is the extending of greater power in the Chief Executive to determine when this law has been violated. In other words, to permit the President to sit, hear, determine, and finally decide when there has been a violation of this particular law, if it is passed and enacted.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. As I read it, this bill is not confined to the property of American citizens that may be confiscated or taken by law, but it includes the property of any citizen in the world.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from California is correct. The purpose of the bill is to prevent the importation of confiscated property, which was confiscated in any foreign country, into this country contrary to the public interests.

Mr. HINSHAW. Why does it do that?

Mr. SPRINGER. It applies to any and all citizens whose property may have been confiscated or taken, in a foreign country, and is transported into the United States and dumped on our markets at a lower cost than our own products of a like character can be produced.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it possible for any individual in this country to determine the right of ownership of the property of other nationals than our own?

Mr. SPRINGER. That might be a hard question to determine. Under the bill presented that power is vested in the President of the United States. The only question he may determine is whether the property sought to be admitted has been confiscated. If so, the property is not admitted unless the same has been paid for or provision for payment has been made.

Mr. HINSHAW. Why does the bill go as far as it does? Why is it not confined to the property of American citizens?

Mr. SPRINGER. Had it been limited exclusively to American citizens we would probably have had other legal barriers which would have prevented the passage of a bill of that kind, may I say to the gentleman, and I am glad he raised that point.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, as I said a little while ago, there was in the mind of each and every one of us when this bill was under consideration, and when it was finally voted out of committee, the fact that it extended further and excessive power in the President of the United States. That is power which should not be imposed upon any President. That is power that any President should not desire. I refer to the power of pursuing, following, and determining the question whether the property is actually confiscated or stolen and whether or not the confiscated property is commingled with other property. This bill covers both phases.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does not the gentleman believe that we can get into unlimited difficulties this way if we try to determine that for all the people of the world?

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that question may be very hard of determination; it may be very hard to determine whether or not the property had been confiscated and whether or not it has been commingled with other property, not confiscated. There are possibly some very serious implications in this procedure.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to my friend that this power could not possibly in practice be called into operation unless it is definite, clear, and outstanding. In borderline situations it could not possibly be called into practice.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentleman for the contribution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It could not be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Department of Justice and the State Department were before the committee. We discussed very fully the question of the propriety of either one of these Departments assuming this power and this jurisdiction, and it was finally developed that it was not the policy that they should, and it was probably very impractical that it should be attempted. Also legal barriers were found to exist against such procedure.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] who is a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CREAL. In reference to the proposed amendment to confine it to the confiscated property of Americans, may I say that in the same oil situation they confiscated English oil. The amendment would permit the Mexicans to send the expropriated English oil here and retain the other, and this would be quite a discrimination and relieve only half the situation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. May I say in that connection that this bill provides that the confiscated property of any person, regardless of whether he is an American citizen or a citizen of some other country, is stopped and is nct permitted to come into this country.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Has the gentleman investigated what rights American citizens already have to regain their property? Offhand, it would seem that instead of approaching the problem through this bill they should be permitted more consistently with traditional American rights to go into the courts and attach property which really belongs to them under the law, whether they are aliens or whether they are our citizens.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentlewoman for the contribution. May I say that whatever the rights of individual citizens may be with regard to their property rights, each would have their day in court concerning those rights; and if they could prove their ownership of that property, or that they came in possession of the same rightfully, and not in violation of the provisions of this bill, then no further action could be taken thereunder. However, this bill applies only to property which has been confiscated, or which has been stolen, from coming into this country and being dumped on the general market in competition with our own legal production.

May I say also that those engaged in the oil business in the State of Texas—and the oil business is one of the big industries in that particular part of this country—many of them testified regarding the amount of confiscated oil which is dumped on the market in that immediate vicinity. They are selling this confiscated oil cheaper than oil can be produced and placed on the market there, and this has had a material effect on the business interests of American citizens engaged in the oil industry in Texas.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The bill in its present form includes every conceivable kind of product, including securities.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true. It embraces every character of property.

Mr. KNUTSON. It does not make any difference whether the securities that were seized belonged to American citizens or to nationals of the country where they were seized.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

Mr. KNUTSON. It may be that some of those countries have found it necessary to have a capital levy. We do not know just what prompted an action of that kind. Why should we sit in judgment on any situation that does not directly affect American citizens?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that the one thought the subcommittee and the committee as a whole had in mind in voting out this bill was to protect our own industries in this country against importations of confiscated and stolen property, of whatever character it might be, which might come in direct competition with production in this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had the floor it was clearly evident to me that he had not studied the legislation. He thought at the outset that it applied solely to the oil in Mexico. The Mexican Government has confiscated millions of acres of ground used for agricultural purposes. This land was confiscated long before the oil was confiscated. Some of it belongs to people residing in my city, St. Louis. Some of the oil land likewise is owned by St. Louisians. It is my understanding mines, gold, and silver were confiscated.

In my opinion, this bill is very far reaching; in fact, as far reaching as it is possible to make it. It extends to every country in the world.

We are going to make our President a policeman to find out what has and what has not been confiscated, what has and what has not been processed, and when it arrives at our shores to determine whether or not it can be admitted. Of course, we do not know now all that has been confiscated in Europe up to this time, but it is reasonable to assume that certain nations there have taken over a great deal of property that formerly belonged to individuals without reimbursing them in any way for their property. The same applies to the Far East. If this property be a great steel mill or some other manufacturing plant, its products when they reach our shores, as I understand the language of the bill, will not be permitted to enter this country. In other words we undertake to tell the nations of the world, "You will treat the property of your nationals and other property owners within your boundaries as we treat ours or you cannot send to the United States goods produced from their property."

It seems to me that before we embark upon a policy of this kind it may be well for us to use our best efforts through the State Department to come to some kind of agreement with Mexico in reference to the confiscation of oil as I am firmly convinced from the debate as far as it has gone that if the oil fields in Mexico had not been confiscated this legislation would not be here today. It matters not to me whether it is oil or anything else, all are in the same category. I am not going to support legislation of this kind. We are going to have plenty of trouble with our commerce when the war is over. There is always a way for other nations to retaliate. Take Russia now. How can we accept anything Russia sends to this country? Russia confiscated the property of its nationals. That is a permanent policy of Russia. Pass this law and you treat all nations alike, we accept no shipments from Russia. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], in his remarks, said that in his opinion the trouble with Congress is that we do not discuss foreign affairs enough on the floor of the House. In my opinion we discuss foreign affairs too much. You have no knowledge how often someone by their utterances talking about something they know nothing about embarrasses the President and Secretary of State. The gentleman from New York is 100 percent wrong. It so happened that during the period of the World War I was secretary of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. Every session of the committee was an executive session—not even minutes were kept—and I can tell you that if some of the matters that came before that committee and what was said were ever discussed on the floor of the Senate or the House it would not have been for the best interests of this country.

When a legislator, be he National, State, or local, no matter how insignificant he may be, makes an attack on a foreign country or to an individual head of a foreign country, and that statement is carried to that country and printed in the press, and they characterize him as a public official, it is harmful to the interests of this country. A hostile press will so prepare the article that the people of that country will feel when they read that the speaker talks with the authority and approval of the United States. It creates a bad feeling and only makes it more difficult for those responsible for handling our diplomatic affairs.

I have heard many a speech on this floor and read many extensions of remarks in the RECORD which in my opinion should have never been uttered or printed. Talking for home consumption at the expense of your Government is bad business.

We should approach this legislation calmly, consider it on its merits, discuss the bill and not foreign countries or their rulers, and if we do, in the end we can vote more intelligently.

What other nations do at times is our business if it directly affects us, but what they do within their own borders, to their own nationals, whether we like it or not, is their business. We can deplore their methods and their treatment of their citizens. We can sympathize with those affected, but in the end is it not their business?

It has always been my opinion it is to the best interests of our country to let the Secretary of State and the President handle the difficult foreign problems that come before them. They know a great deal more than we know. For instance, if we are to believe what we read, the President and the Secretary of State knew 10 days in advance that Japan, Italy, and Germany were going to sign a pact. They have information that we do not have. Information they cannot make public.

I say this legislation will be looked upon by many nations of the world as being aimed at them. I do not think the bill should be passed and propose to vote against it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for these 2 minutes to pursue briefly the observation which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has just made.

Unquestionably these diplomatic and semidiplomatic questions cannot be handled on the floor of this House. The gentleman is correct in his statement that it does not make any difference how insignificant any of us may be in times like these, statements made on the floor of this House are caught up and are broadcast in the countries affected to the hurt of this country, if they are not in their nature calculated to bring about a friendly feeling toward this country.

The situation is difficult. This oil is being imported into America to the hurt of American producers. It is not a thing that happens in a foreign country that is now being dealt with, but it is the result of importations, the bringing into this country of commodities which the importer has not paid value for, and can therefore be sold cheaper than the American producer can sell. That is the reason this bill has to be as broad as it is.

This is an unusual bill. It is a part of this emergency situation, a difficult and dangerous situation.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 1 additional minute.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill is satisfactory or there is no objection to it on the part of the State Department that has to deal with the diplomatic aspects of this problem.

There are a number of ways we could go about trying to do something with reference to this situation. The purpose of this bill is to make it possible, if we can, to remove this hurt to American producers through diplomatic channels, to strengthen the arm of the diplomatic agencies of this country in an effort to do that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 1 additional minute.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman and the committee, I am sure, have tried to handle this very difficult problem in the most diplomatic and effective way. I happen to know something about the experience they had with reference to the first bill introduced, and I feel that the statement the gentleman has made is entitled to the respect and the support of this House, when the gentleman tells us that he is dealing with this problem in the very best way to conserve our diplomatic relations with other countries and at the same time protect the rights of our own people.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Anybody can get up here and criticise this bill. We know that. We know there is a chance to play party politics in connection with this measure, but we cannot afford to do that. We are all American citizens, responsible in the hour of the world's greatest tragedy——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 3 additional minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, listen to me, my fellow Members. Now, what are the facts? Everybody knows that the oil producers of America are being put to great disadvantage by the importation of this oil. That is fact No. 1. Fact No. 2 is that we know that we ought to try to handle that situation through diplomatic channels. No one who has any sense can fail to know that. In an hour like this we of the Americas are doing our best to hold ourselves, Mexico, and the South and Central American republics in cordial relationship. We are not children, we do not have any right to be casual or reckless in our utterances or attitudes. We are trying to conserve the strength and strengthen the position of a great republic in which is largely the hope of the nations of the earth who want to be free. It is a hard job. I heard the distinguished gentleman from New York say we did not have a friend on earth. I do not think that is quite true, but it is more nearly true than it ought to be. We cannot possibly build our friendship except through diplomatic channels. We have had the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Judiciary Committee doing its best to handle this situation with as little friction as possible. We might not have done as well as you could have done.

The bill is subject to criticism. What are you going to do about it? This is what we have got to do about it, either pass this bill or defeat it. This thing has been worked out in consultation with every responsible agency of the American Government. It is the best thing we can do. I hope you will pass it without amendment.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. It has been suggested that there is some possible legal barrier to the adoption of an amendment which would limit the application of this act to the property of American nationals in foreign countries. Will the gentleman be so kind as to elaborate, out of his experience, just exactly what the legal barrier might be to the adoption of such an amendment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will my friend excuse me from discussing the legal aspects if I can answer him in another way? It would be just as detrimental to American citizens in this country, attempting to produce oil, for instance, to have confiscated oil that belonged to the nationals of another country imported? Do you see the point? We are trying to protect the American market.

Mr. KEEFE. That is true, but may I ask this question, Do we not have the power under existing law, under the antidumping statutes which are on the books now, to stop the dumping of that oil, under tariff regulations?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it would not do it. Without going into it, it would not do it. We have put the tax up now to 20 cents a barrel. Without going into it, will my friend take my word for it that the committee went into that, but we found no power under existing antidumping legislation to cover the situation? You see, they are not selling it any cheaper in this country than where produced. Antidumping legislation is to prevent a country from dumping its surpluses in this country, on the theory that it is being sold in this country cheaper than it is being sold at home. That does not apply in this case. I say to you, my friends, I had hopes that there might be something done there, but we found it could not be done. I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] and other members of the committee will bear me out in that.

I am sorry I have taken so much time, but in a sentence, I hope you will believe me when I say that this legislation is not objected to by the Department of State. It is not objected to by the Department of Justice, and it is very much hoped, on the part of the American oil producers, that it will be accepted. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

PREVENT THE DUMPING OF LOOT IN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, as early as last spring I became very much interested in this kind of an approach, because, based on statements made by the Treasury Department and press releases which it made at that time and some unusual performances in our securities markets, I was led to believe, and I still believe, there was extreme danger of a considerable dumping of loot in the form of securities taken away from certain European nationals by certain European governments and the moving of those securities into the United States against the interest of our people. Then, as we all know, this oil situation has been before us for some time, and probably growing worse, so far as I know.

Therefore I am very friendly to legislation of this type.

As I read the language, in my limited understanding of such technical statements, it appears to me that "when the President shall find" is the real crux of this proposal. If the President does not find, then the goods can perhaps come in. If the President does find, they cannot come. I certainly have no objection to the President finding that competitive agricultural goods cannot come into this country. I have no objection to his finding that beef and hides, wool and mohair, fats and oils, beans, and sugar, and other foodstuffs, of which we produce, under the present terminology, tremendous surpluses, cannot come into this country. I would feel very unkindly to the President and to the State Department if they should find that rubber and tin could not come into the United States; and I do not believe there is anybody in the Department of State and I do not believe the President of the United States would so find, even if all the rubber and tin owned by other nationals of the world were found to have been confiscated by some enemy. I do not have any idea that the President will get bogged down in this proposition, insofar as the South American countries are concerned. I do believe that every Member who is reelected to this House next November and comes back here January 1, whether Democrat or Republican, will, in due course, be throwing his support toward our maintaining a closer relationship with Mexico, Central America, the South American countries and all those areas which constitute whatever may be defined as the Western Hemisphere. I see no reason at all why Republicans in particular should object to the President of the United States finding that competitive goods should not come into this country, whether located in foreign countries and which by them may be confiscated.

So as far as I am concerned I am going to support this bill if there is a roll call on it. If there is not, it will just slide through, as many others do. I am not at all favorable to limiting this language to oil or of limiting the provisions of the bill so that they apply only to the property of our nationals located in foreign countries and which by them may be confiscated.

WE SHOULD PROTECT ALL PRODUCERS

I am just as afraid of destructive forces being put in operation in this country as a result of securities being dumped into this country as other commodities, or as oil. I am no particular friend of the oil industry, but certainly I am not any particular enemy of the oil industry. I want all of our production, whether it is oil, livestock, or foodstuffs, fully protected, either through this manner, through the imposition of tariff duties where necessary, or the calling into operation of the Antidumping Act. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2½ minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have been sympathetic with the subcommittee. I think we have one of the finest subcommittees on the Committee on the Judiciary considering this legislation, but I have been consistently opposed to the importation of all kinds of products into this country that has been a burden upon the farmer, the oil producer, and upon industry. On the other hand, by experience I have found that the State Department and the executive department have irritated a jittery world with accusations and insinuations until we have hardly a friend on earth. In other words, on the East and on the West, in the Occident and in the Orient our friends have dropped away from us; and now, maybe, we are about to do the same thing with our American republics. We must bind them to us with hoops of steel if we expect to preserve democracy in this Western Hemisphere. So I am torn between two inclinations; on the one hand, to protect the American market from those who ship in articles of commerce in competition with our own products, and on the other hand the fear that the State Department and the executive department will insult the few. Therefore I am not inclined to vote for this bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to speak unexpectedly to this honorable body; but men abroad, British subjects, are risking their lives in the hope of preserving principles they have been brought up to fight for in peacetime as well as war. Here in America, however, we flirt with the idea, every day in Congress, of giving up principles without having a gun fired at us or on account of some emergency which half the time is not even more than an everyday happening.

We talk about being isolationists with only one friend left in the world. What attracted the friends we had? It was because, until 1932, this Nation stood for justice under law and under the administration of the law, every person and every class of persons, however small their minority, whether rich or poor, whether we liked the country from which they came, or did not, received equal treatment; and where each country received the same justice as every other country.

I do not want any foreign products to come in here and compete with products from my district; neither do you. I do not want any stolen property to come in here; neither do you. But it seems to me the question for us to decide is whether or not we should turn back to these earnest, patriotic gentlemen under the Judiciary Committee this bill—recommit it—and ask them to do their duty and report out a bill which will turn over to our courts or to some department, under laws made within the Constitution by the Congress, setting an exact rule as to what kind of products may come in, instead of giving power to the Executive to determine what constitutes stolen property, perhaps to have it hinge on whether we like Mexico, or do not, and want to keep her products out. In Russia all property has been confiscated. How can it be diplomatic or just if the President should embargo Mexican oil and not embargo all importations from Russia? Whether we like Germany or do not, and want to keep her products out, or any other country, we should set up a policy where any country can come in under one and the same rule set up by the representatives of this Congress and know they will receive the same impartial treatment. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from Illinois, quite commendably, has had a good deal to say about principle. It is because of principle that I am very much in favor of this bill.

The distinguished gentleman from Kansas said he was afraid this bill might antagonize someone. This bill specifies no one except the wrongdoer whom we seek to restrain. Since the beginning of time it has been the function of government to write the rules of fair play and then to enforce those rules. We seek to protect our nationals from unfair competition from within this country. We certainly have the right and the duty to protect them from unfair competition from without this country; and, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it becoming of our great country to pussyfoot in any particular with wrongdoers.

In my district thousands of workers and small businessmen depend for their livelihood upon the oil business. Their standards of living, their businesses, their jobs, are entitled to protection from unfair competition from imported foreign oil, especially from importation of oil that has been stolen or confiscated. No courtesy to any foreign government, no favors to any person or interest, either American or foreign, seeking to traffic in such commerce can justify the importation of such property. Every American citizen in every business is entitled to such protection by his Government.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I apologize for speaking again, but I cannot refrain in the light of the remarks of the distinguished and charming gentlewoman from Illinois. The Constitution itself is a barrier against the suggestions which the gentle lady has advanced. The Constitution commits the conduct of international affairs of this Nation to the Chief Executive.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman say that our tariffs and reciprocal-trade agreements are unconstitutional?

Mr. HOBBS. I certainly will not. Tariffs are levied under specific authority in the Constitution, and our reciprocal-trade agreements are negotiated by the State Department with the approval of the Executive, as they should be. I am saying to the distinguished lady that there is no authority anywhere, permitting our courts to overrule the courts of another nation. There is only one way we can overrule a decision of the courts of another nation, and that is by war. We are not ready yet to adopt Hitlerism. We would try diplomacy rather than the arbitrament of arms.

I want to put this thing into a nutshell, in concluding the debate on this subject. What are you going to do about the meats that have been confiscated by force of arms? Are you going to let them come in here to compete with your Illinois farmers and the beef and pork that they produce? Are you going to let your bacon be undersold and its American market confiscated by confiscated meats coming from the Scandinavian countries?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Why do you not raise your tariff?

Mr. HOBBS. We are not buying our peace. We are standing upon our inalienable rights.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always happy to yield to the able gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not the gentleman building up a straw man when he says there is danger of meat which has been confiscated in Scandinavia being sent to the United States in view of the absolute necessity of the Germans themselves eating that meat?

Mr. HOBBS. At the present moment, yes; but this bill is not limited to the present emergency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That makes it the more doubtful.

Mr. HOBBS. We are trying to establish a principle that stolen goods are contraband and outlawed and cannot come in here at any time; and they certainly should not.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Could we pass a law which provides that the importation into this country of goods that had been taken by another government is barred until that government paid compensation, or could we bar the importation of expropriated goods until compensation has been paid without violating our Constitution?

Mr. HOBBS. That is almost exactly what this bill provides. We leave it up to the President, through diplomatic negotiations, to determine the facts upon which to base the conclusion that the goods were expropriated without compensation. The gentleman has very aptly in one sentence expressed the kernel of this bill. The essence of it is just that. Our securities market; our market for American fats and oils; our market for American minerals and farm products—each needs this protection.

I am begging you, not as Democrats, not as Republicans, but as American statesmen, when we need friends, in a world gone mad, in a world almost drowned in a sea of blood, I am begging you for the sake of the long future not to jeopardize our American markets, not to jeopardize our American traditions by voting down this bill. It is the best that can be done. We have worked night and day with the representatives of our State and Justice Departments to bring you this bill which is so sorely needed, but which may never need to be used if enacted into law. We believe it will aid in the upbuilding of an international friendship which will absolutely prevent war. We believe that this will aid in pushing back the dark clouds to the other side of the world. Such a law would obviate quarrels and hatreds abroad and benefit legitimate business at home.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to every Member to vote for this bill. As you believe in fair play, as you trust "the American way," as you hate war and love peace, vote for this bill.

Are you a statesman or merely a partisan?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the act of May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794), as amended, is hereby further amended and extended to include and apply, subject to the provisions of this act, to any confiscated property.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the testimony presented on the floor of the House during the consideration of this bill, the only logical and reasonable action to take is to strike out the enacting clause at this time. A gentleman on my side of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], in his speech in support of the bill, clearly indicated that this legislation was not predicated on principle. The gentleman stated that he wanted to prohibit the importation of stolen property, so-called, which competes with the farm and other products of his district. In the next breath the gentleman stood on the floor of this House and advocated the importation of stolen property which does not compete with those products, such as tin, rubber, and so forth.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] stated that under our court decisions the Congress of the United States could not enact specific legislation to cover the importation of stolen property from foreign countries because the Supreme Court has held that the Congress could not set aside the findings of the supreme court of any foreign country which was at peace with the United States. In the next breath the gentleman from Alabama maintained that Congress could give our New Deal Fuehrer President the authority to issue a manifesto and set aside all laws enacted in every foreign country on the globe in order to prohibit the importation into the United States of all property which the Fuehrer holds is stolen property.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is absurd. Look at section 4, which reads as follows:

Nothing herein shall be construed to affect the status of any property assigned, conveyed, or transferred to the Government of the United States.

The Government of the United States can do no wrong under this section. The Government of the United States can import all the stolen property it desires, and that importation is approved and authorized under section 4. The United States Government does not come into court with clean hands under this section. This bill is not predicated on principle. Look at the last paragraph of section 2, which reads as follows:

Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of any order issued by the President shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934, as amended and extended.

Mr. Chairman, under this section any person in the United States, whether or not he or she had knowledge that any property which he or she proposed to import was stolen, could be sent to jail for 5 years under this bill and the manifestos of the President issued thereunder.

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of this bill does not prohibit the importation of stolen property but grants the President authority to find and hold proposed imports to have been stolen, and that he may in his discretion order the exclusion of such property from importation. Under this permissive authority, John Doe could be permitted to import so-called stolen property and Richard Roe could be denied that opportunity. This section of the bill would permit our New Deal chosen tribe of Karl Marx disciples to operate one of the biggest import rackets ever known to man.

Mr. Chairman, under this bill the President is charged with investigating so-called stolen property in every country on the face of the globe. Are you going to vote him that authority and charge him with those stupendous extra duties in face of the fact that only a short time ago our New Deal ex-international banker President stated that he was so hard pressed with public duties that he did not have sufficient time to devote a few hours to debating Mr. Willkie, his political opponent, on a radio hook-up on the air? If President Roosevelt is so busy, how is he going to find time to locate this so-called stolen property in every country on the face of the globe? Is it proposed that he do so while spending the taxpayers' money using our Navy to go on his very many fishing trips?

Mr. Chairman, this bill is nothing but another New Deal racket springboard and it should be given the kiss of death. We should have a record roll-call vote if this New Deal racket, war-promoting dictatorship bill is enacted, so that the people of the country will know who the Members of Congress are who support and vote for it. If you are going to vote for this kind of legislation, then for goodness sake do not tell the people that you want Congress to stay in session in order to serve our country and our countrymen. If the Congress is going to enact this kind of legislation, then it had better vote to adjourn and go home and get out of Washington, because you will be voting more dictator authority to President Roosevelt such as Stalin, Hitler, and other foreign dictators now have.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is absurd and ridiculous. It is indefensible. It is not based upon principle. It is designed to create a giant New Deal import racket. This bill will involve the United States in war. God knows our half-baked nitwits who are handling the foreign affairs have been carrying on a course of conduct which inevitably will plunge us into the new European war. We should defeat this bill and send word to the country that the Congress of the United States will not rubber stamp any more of the half-baked crackpot unneutral war intervention and warmonger maneuvers of our New Deal bureaucrats. We have some responsibility to our country and our countrymen and to the future generations still unborn. I sincerely hope that without many exceptions our Republican brethren will vote against this bill, which is an essential portion of the New Deal program to establish a Soviet type of dictatorship and rackets in the United States—a form of dictatorship imported direct from Moscow by our New Deal chosen tribe of money changers and Karl Marx disciples. I realize that one of my Republican colleagues has stood on the firing line on the floor of the House in defense of many of these New Deal measures. I feel confident, however, that the great majority of the Republicans and many of the Democratic Members who believe in our American system of representative government will vote against this un-American bill.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am pleased to yield to the able and very distinguished gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Is the gentleman, as a Republican, assuming by that that President Roosevelt is going to be President for the next 4 years?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Absolutely and positively no. I would not vote to grant the dictator authority and power under this bill to the next President of the United States, who is going to be Mr. Willkie, or to any other President. Mr. Willkie would never think or dream of asking for such power and authority. He is too good an American. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama demands that the last words of the gentleman from Wisconsin be taken down.

Mr. HOBBS. The words "half-baked nitwits who are conducting our foreign affairs."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Those are not the last words.

Mr. HOBBS. I am not asking any last words, I am demanding that his words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the words demanded to be taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. God knows our half-baked nitwits who are handling the foreign affairs have been carrying on a course of conduct which inevitably will plunge us into the new European war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COOPER] having resumed the Chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act, certain words used in debate were objected to and on request were taken down and read at the Clerk's desk, and that he herewith reported the same to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. God knows our half-baked nitwits who are handling the foreign affairs have been carrying on a course of conduct which inevitably will plunge us into the new European war.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that those words are out of order and move that they be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have to pass on the question without further debate.

The Chair invites attention to section 363 of Jefferson's Manual, which, in part, provides:

The consequences of a measure may be reprobated in strong terms; but to arraign the motives of those who propose to advocate it is a personality, and against order.

The Chair has examined the words taken down and is of the opinion that these words refer to certain officials in the executive branch of the Government. The Chair is of the opinion that a fair interpretation or construction of the words complained of is that they do not make reference to Members of the House, and are, therefore, not in violation of the rules of the House with respect to appropriate proceedings in the House.

The Committee resumed its session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin be allowed to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Had my time expired when the demand was made to take down some truthful words I had uttered on the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin had expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 52, noes 54.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin and Mr. HOBBS.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 68.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States contrary to the public interests, he may, if in his judgment those interests would be served thereby, order the exclusion of such property from importation. If the property has been processed or transformed into property of a different character, or has been commingled with other property of a like or similar character in such manner as to lose its identity or to render impracticable its segregation from such other property, the President may order the exclusion of such processed, transformed, or commingled property from importation into the United States.

Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of any order issued by the President shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934 as amended and extended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think no member of this committee will ever charge me with being indifferent to what we call the national defense. Indeed, I have been charged upon a good many occasions with being rather a crank on that subject, but when I see this bill and hear it labeled as being something in the interest of the national defense, I am wondering if we are not torturing that phrase and, indeed, that ideal to such an extent that if we go on with legislation of this sort, we shall ultimately destroy our form of government, and that will not be in the interest of national defense.

I read section 3 of this bill which defines the term "confiscated property," and I am not reading the entire sentence:

It shall be deemed to include property which has been taken by means of force, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign state or government, whether recognized or unrecognized, or of any political subdivision of such state or any agency of such state—

And so forth, and so forth.

This bill, apparently, would confer upon the President of the United States the right to pass upon the type of government chosen by the people of another nation and to make up his mind, if you please, that that type of government results in the confiscation of property of the citizens of that government by means, direct or indirect, by the law of that country, and having made up his mind to that effect, he can shut off all foreign commerce between the United States and that country.

This is an amazing proposal. Let us assume that some foreign nation changes its form of government in whole or in part; that it does so, we will say, of its own free will; that in doing so it establishes by law certain governmental policies, and that under those policies certain properties in that country are seized by the government. This is not an unusual procedure. It has happened many, many times in the history of the world, rightly or wrongly. I am not passing upon the merits of steps of that kind, but should that happen with respect to any nation, friendly or unfriendly to the United States, with respect to any nation acting under its own laws, the President then can say that none of the character of goods or articles taken over by that foreign government shall be permitted to come into the United States. In other words, it places in the hands of a President—and I am speaking quite impersonally on this matter and quite without partisanship—it places in the hands of a President of the United States by indirection, at least, power to pass judgment on the governments erected by other peoples, to police them, if you please, insofar as he can police them by excluding their goods from the ports of the United States.

This is not an emergency measure, I note. As I read this thing this is permanent legislation. It establishes a power which it is conceded the Congress does not possess and proposes to give it to a President. I am against it. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no one disputes the very fine and tolerant manner in which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] approaches the consideration of any matter before this body, but there were some statements made by my distinguished friend that I think should be qualified.

There is nothing in this bill which gives a President the right to pass upon the type of government that another people may want. There is nothing in this bill to exclude all imports from any other country. This is a very simple bill when you analyze just what are its objectives.

The bill says, "whenever the President"—that means our President—today it is President Roosevelt; as long as this law is in operation it is some President of the United States—to meet an unusual situation, "whenever the President shall find that property which has been confiscated in any foreign country is being or may be brought into the United States contrary"—to what? "To the public interests." Not only must there be confiscation of property, and that means American property confiscated by another country——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; any property.

Mr. McCORMACK. That includes American property. This includes American property that has been confiscated and brought into the United States contrary to the public interest.

Now, what is the purpose of this bill? This bill is to meet a situation that has arisen with which many States of this Union are well acquainted, property confiscated, and in the particular case, American property, and the products of that property being brought into the United States at a price which is underselling the same products produced in the United States.

The purpose of this bill is to protect industry, the purpose of this bill is to protect American producers, for example, of oil, referring to one particular business activity in the United States. Petroleum and its byproducts are being brought into the United States produced from property confiscated in another country, and not sent abroad, but sold in the United States at a ridiculously low price, flooding the American markets and, obviously, affecting legitimate American industry located in continental United States.

This bill means, in the first instance, the case of a country that confiscates property—and included in that property confiscated is American property—and, second, who sends the products of that confiscated property into our own country and undermines the stability of American business, underselling the products of American business in the markets of the United States. That is the whole purpose of the bill. It has no other objective. It is a bill which is consistent with the best interests of our country. It is consistent with the best interests of American industry.

I am amazed—I am astonished—that representatives of the Republican Party, to whom business looks as their savior, should oppose a bill of this kind; a bill that has, as its objective, the protection of the interests of our people, and particularly the protection of the interests of American industry. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: Page 2, line 16, after the word "property", insert "of American nationals";
Page 3, line 8, strike out the words "shall be deemed" and insert after the word "property" the words "is hereby defined to be";
Page 3, line 9, strike out the words "to include."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that section 3 has not yet been read.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 2.

Mr. KEEFE. I propose to ask unanimous consent at this time that the entire amendment may be considered even though section 3 has not yet been reached, because it is integrally one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has been offered has this simple purpose in mind; namely, to limit the effect of this legislation to the property of American nationals. In other words, the argument has been made by the proponents of this legislation that it has been prompted because Mexico has expropriated or confiscated oil produced by certain oil producers, and that oil which they have thus confiscated from American owners is being dumped upon American markets, depressing the American market.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Not just now. I will yield later on.

The argument has been further made that because it might likewise have confiscated the oil properties of England or the Netherlands or some other foreign country that we, as the American Congress, should legislate so as to prevent Mexico from dumping upon the American market not only the confiscated oil of American producers, but also the oil which has been confiscated from other foreign nationals.

I want to say, if that is justification for the argument, that it seems to me we have the undoubted right to exclude, by proper excise taxes at any time, the importation of oil produced in any nation on the face of the earth, including Mexico. But if this is a bill, as its title indicates, to prevent bringing into America and selling property which has been seized, belonging to American nationals, then why do you not say so in the legislation and why do we not legislate to protect the property of American nationals by saying, as we say in this legislation, if my amendment is agreed to, that the President shall have the power to absolutely exclude the importation of any property of American nationals which has been seized or confiscated in violation of law or under the law of any other nation, when just compensation has not been paid to the American national for the property thus confiscated?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the harmful effect of property confiscated by some other country and sold in the United States at a low price, undermining our business stability and price level, be just as great if the products came from property confiscated which was not owned by American nationals? We have to protect our businessmen.

Mr. KEEFE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is legislation designed to throw up a sort of tariff barrier to protect American industry?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman, of course, did not understand me to say anything of the kind. I said this is legislation to protect American industry against cheap products of confiscated property in other countries that are being shipped into the United States. Does the gentleman oppose that?

Mr. KEEFE. No. I am not opposed to that idea, but I believe, if you will permit an answer and not be capricious about it——

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, I am not capricious.

Mr. KEEFE. I hope not.

Mr. McCORMACK. I respect the gentleman too much for that.

Mr. KEEFE. The Congress has full power, and the gentleman well knows it, to legislate upon that subject and to impose an embargo that would prevent the dumping of these things right now, and to issue tariff regulations that would prevent bringing into this country the property of foreign nationals. We have the right to enact embargo or tariff legislation without attempting it in legislation of this character. That is what I object to. The gentleman from New York very clearly pointed out, if the gentleman has read this bill carefully, that it goes far beyond the objective the gentleman has spoken of and confers an unheard-of grant of discretionary power upon the President. It seems to me we ought to limit it to the property of American nationals, and that Congress should refuse to delegate away its clear legislative functions. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think a very brief statement will indicate to the sound judgment of the Committee that the amendment proposed by our distinguished friend should not be adopted.

As has been stated, the clear purpose of this bill is to protect American producers, people in this country, against competition of commodities which have not cost the people who try to sell them their value; in other words, that which has been confiscated. If this is the object—and it is—it is perfectly clear it would be just as hurtful, as has already been indicated, to have commodities that had been confiscated from any national come into this country in competition with our people as it would be to bring in confiscated oil produced by our own nationals.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Practically speaking, admitting the purpose of this bill, it would be impossible to distinguish which was American oil and which was oil confiscated from other nationals in Mexico.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But it would be just as hurtful to be hit over the head with a barrel of oil produced by somebody else as it would to be hit with one produced by our own nationals.

Mr. FERGUSON. Absolutely; but you could not tell which was American and which was foreign oil.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We want to stop all of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. It would naturally follow, not being able to differentiate between American and foreign oil, that you would have to embargo all of it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; that is what we intend to do. My friend can appreciate that if there are two sources from which this confiscated oil could come it would be perfectly foolish to stop one source and leave the other wide open. I think anybody can appreciate that.

Mr. KNUTSON. We have an antidumping law on the statute books which would prohibit that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am talking about this amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. We would have to stop both in order to stop what we might term "hot" Mexican oil from coming in.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right, but I am directing my remarks to the pending amendment. We are considering legislation that is supposed to be necessary, but under the operation of this amendment we would be preventing competition from one source while allowing it from another.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to my friend is that you cannot embargo one imported oil without embargoing all. You would have to embargo all unless you had this bill, and part of the oil may not have been confiscated. This bill, however, lets the unconfiscated oil come into this country, but raises a bar against confiscated property.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why not limit it to oil and minerals?

Mr. McCORMACK. Because there are other products, farm products, for example.

Mr. KNUTSON. This bill applies to securities and all forms of wealth. They may have had capital levies in some of these countries.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to my friend that it would be very helpful if we held our consideration to the amendment that is pending.

The pending amendment would leave us, if adopted, in the situation of enacting legislation seeking to correct the condition, but leaving the door open to other competition. It seems to me that it is not sensible at all if we are really trying to protect American producers from confiscated oil. Why, in the name of common sense, should we limit that production to such oil as may have been taken from our nationals, but leave our people subject to competition from oil confiscated from nationals of other countries?

Mr. KNUTSON. The matter should be corrected by the introduction of a tariff bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But we are talking about this amendment on which we are going to vote in about a minute.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Would not the President, under the terms of this act, have to exclude all products from Russia where both labor and property of nationals other than ours have been confiscated by the Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not sure I quite understand the gentlewoman's question.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. In Russia the Government has established a communistic form of government, confiscating all private property and all labor. Products from that country, under the provisions of this bill, would be classified as stolen goods should the President so find. Products from countries whose government was similar to that of Russia would also have to be excluded under the provisions of this bill if the President treated all nations with equal justice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I ask my friend: Does she favor excluding competition from commodities in Russia, for instance, that had been confiscated from American nationals but permitting competition from commodities confiscated from other nationals? I am trying to consider the question on which we are just about to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 62, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2, line 15, as an amendment to the first paragraph of section 2:

"SEC. 2. Property which has been confiscated in any foreign country, which is being or may be brought into the United States, shall be excluded from importation and such exclusion shall be enforced by our customs authorities. If the property has been processed or transformed into property of a different character, or has been commingled with other property of a like or similar character in such manner as to lose its identity or to render impracticable its segregation from such other property, such processed, transformed, or commingled property shall be excluded from importation into the United States.

"Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of this act shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934, as amended and extended."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, those who are interested in preventing the importation into the United States of those things which have been taken away from Americans in other countries, and which they are trying to bring into the United States will support this amendment. I have limited it to those things of American ownership that are confiscated, and I have provided that there shall be an absolute prohibition against such importations.

I do not believe, and I am sure that the gentleman from Texas who so seriously argues this proposition will find, that the section is of any benefit to the gentleman from Texas or his business people if discretion is left to the President. We know that he has never exercised that discretion in favor of protecting the American producers, and we know that he will not do that.

The thing that I object to most about this bill is that it delegates power and discretion to the President where he should have no such power or discretion. Those of you who really want to see this problem worked out in a fair way to the American businessman will support my amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] merely to call attention to the fact that this is the same identical proposition couched in different language that we have just voted on, with the exception that it does take into account the customs officials and puts them in as the watchdog of our imports.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. It also wipes out the discretion which the section itself gives to the President and makes this protection to those who are producing things in this country absolute.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, it is purely a partisan amendment to curry favor on the Republican side of the aisle. I submit that the amendment is hopelessly bad, is destructive of the only chance to protect the American businessman and American markets from unfair and disastrous foreign competition, and that the amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 69, noes 72.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. HOBBS and Mr. TABER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 65, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEWIS of Ohio: Page 2, line 15, strike out the words "the President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Tariff Commission."

In line 18, strike out the word "he" and insert in lieu thereof the word "it." Strike out "his" and insert in lieu thereof the word "its."

In line 25, strike out the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Tariff Commission."

On page 3, line 5, strike out the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Tariff Commission."

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the statement of the purposes of the bill made by the esteemed majority leader and by the gentleman from Texas is correct, and that its purpose is to prevent the competition in our own markets of property confiscated by foreign nations, whether it be American property in the first instance or whether it be the property of the nationals of some other government. If that is the purpose, then it seems to me that the authority that should deal with the subject is the Tariff Commission of the United States.

This Commission was set up for the purpose of dealing with foreign imports. It is true that some of its functions have been taken away from it by recent legislation and lodged in the State Department, but for the most part those functions are unimpaired in law, and this is but adapting to the Tariff Commission the function of determining when in the public interest the importation of confiscated goods from foreign lands shall be excluded.

There are many on both sides of the aisle—and I know this from utterances here in the Well of the House as well as from private conversations with the individual Members—who feel that this body is, by constantly conferring increased power upon the Chief Executive of this land, laying the foundation for a change—a fundamental change—in the type of government we have. I know there are many on both sides of the aisle who believe that here we have a situation in which we are either going to give more power to the Chief Executive, whose power has been increased and raised higher in recent years than at any other time in the history of America, and at a time when the institutions of republican, representative government, have been crushed out throughout the world by that very same process of increasing the executive power at the expense of the representatives of the people, or we shall place this power in the hands of a commission set up for this very purpose by former Congresses. We can continue this drift toward totalitarian power by conferring it upon the office of the President or we can place it in the hands of a commission.

It cannot be said in truth or in fact that the President can perform this function better than the Tariff Commission, which has been set up to handle the very type of problem that is here presented. It cannot be said, and in fact we have heard here in the debate on this floor the admission that the President, through these great powers that one after another have been conferred upon him, conferring likewise duties, is burdened down, as one of the members of the committee said, by an almost unbearable burden of power and duty. Why now continue this process?

Mr. Chairman, this is not a partisan proposition on my part. I trust the House will accept this amendment and retain whatever advantages this legislation may confer—this protection for American business, and confer the power where it will not jeopardize American institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to substitute the Tariff Commission and its judgment for the President and his judgment. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the reiterated statement by the distinguished author of this amendment is not exactly accurate. He says the Tariff Commission was created for this very purpose. I doubt if that is an accurate expression; in fact, my opinion is that it is not. The Tariff Commission has no embargo power. The only instance in which there is a deviation from that general rule is where it is charged under the antidumping statute with the power to inquire and report to the President its finding, so that he may exercise his constitutional function in dealing with foreign nations by ordering an embargo.

I submit that there can be no possibility of doubt that this amendment ought to be defeated. What right has a tariff commission to levy an embargo? It is not within the purview of its power, it is not within the line of their work, it is not within their experience. So we would take away these powers, if this amendment should be adopted, from the most experienced and best posted person in our whole Government, and confer them upon amateurs.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I correctly understand from the gentleman's statement that the intent of this bill is to give import embargo powers to the President without further act of Congress?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. HINSHAW. Then it can take effect in respect to the products of almost any nation in the world, because there is no nation of any consequence that has not taken property by force.

Mr. HOBBS. It would apply, in the discretion of the President, should he find that any such property was being imported in defiance of the public interests of the citizens of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The term "confiscated property" shall be deemed to include property which has been taken by means of force, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign state or government, whether recognized or unrecognized, or of any political subdivision of such state, or of any official board, commission, instrumentality or agency of any such state, government, or political subdivision, without payment of just compensation or reasonable provision therefor having been made.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 3, line 15, after "payment of just compensation", insert "to the workmen engaged in its production, as determined by the wages and hours provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section or to any other section of this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman from South Dakota has been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes within the proper time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from South Dakota on the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to point out that this section deals with a definition of what confiscated property is, and my amendment goes to the definition. The definition of confiscated property, as suggested by the language in the bill, covers that which has been taken by means of force or by means of any law without payment of just compensation. It may be presumed—but the bill does not say—that just compensation relates to the owners of the property. My amendment merely adds to that definition and presumption by providing that the payment of just compensation shall also include payment of just compensation to the workmen who are engaged in the production of the property. Consequently, I maintain that the amendment is germane, and germane at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Alabama on the point of order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota, who is usually so accurate, so apt, and so brilliant in his incisive reasoning, should contend that this amendment is germane. This bill obtains and applies only to the property itself and not to the mode of its production. In other words, if property is about to be brought into the United States, having been confiscated elsewhere, and if the President ascertains that fact and the further fact that it will have a deleterious effect on our public interests, then he may embargo the bringing into this country of that product. However, he could not do what this amendment would have him do, go into a foreign country and enforce wage and hour regulations there.

This bill does not say a word about compensation to anybody except the true owner of the property taken, and we respectfully submit that it is manifestly not germane and could not by any stretch of the imagination be brought within the purview of the ideology of this bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, may I make one further observation as to the scope of the bill? It proposes to bring importation of confiscated property under the penalties against transporting stolen property. In section 2 the bill proposes that some power shall be vested with respect to the determination of property that may have been processed or commingled with other property which would involve the labor in production. The entire bill is tied to an act, the National Stolen Property Act, dealing with commerce—interstate commerce. The Fair Labor Standards Act deals with interstate commerce. Section 3 of this bill undertakes to define confiscated property. My amendment seeks to make clear that confiscation is involved if the producers are not fairly compensated. It seeks to make clear what is involved in a determination of just compensation.

Mr. HOBBS. May I point out in answer to that observation, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's amendment deals with section 3 and not section 2, but even if it were applicable to section 2 and if we could go back there to seek to obtain its germaneness, that does not answer my argument at all. It still, whether the goods be commingled or not, deals with a commodity in commerce and not with any wage scale or hour limitations upon its production.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has correctly stated the parliamentary proposition. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment is not germane, and therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am a little surprised that the gentleman from Alabama, who is distinguished for his humanitarian impulses, would have yielded to an impulse which was not so humanitarian to make a point of order against this amendment. I have been so impressed by the arguments that have been advanced in behalf of this bill, how it is for the protection of American standards, that I am at a loss to understand why anybody should want to keep an amendment of this sort out of this bill.

This bill, as a whole, it seems to me might better have been labeled a bill to police the world, because this bill certainly does come within the interdiction that was suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] when he pointed out the powers it proposes to give to the President. This is simply another weapon, it seems to me, that is being sought for the President to add to his armament for the purpose of passing judgment upon the other nations of the world. We have had the imposition under the present administration of a 25-percent countervailing duty against certain countries. We have had the imposition of embargoes and quotas as a means of punishing some countries and blessing others. We have had language—scolding, sarcastic language—used as a means of international discipline. And now, it seems, in this bill we have an attempt to give to the President certain powers to police the world, not simply by his talking, but by taking action against its commerce.

The amendment I offered was inspired by the arguments I have heard. I was moved by the argument of the distinguished majority leader when he talked about the protection of the American businessman. It seemed to me that a man whose heart beats for the American businessman as much as the gentleman from Massachusetts professed to having his heart beat at that time, would also have his heart beat for the protection of the American workingman. Surely he would not want to see this property that had been produced by the blood and toil and sweat of underpaid, overworked laborers in other countries brought here to take jobs away from the workingmen of this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman realizes that, if his amendment were adopted, the very argument advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would then be applicable, because you would be going into another country and undertaking by indirection to regulate——

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; and I am glad the gentleman brings out that point.

Mr. McCORMACK. Regulate the working conditions of another country with respect to property that has not been confiscated.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad the gentleman brings that point out, because it emphasizes the very point I wanted to make by offering the amendment, which is that you are proposing by this bill to give the President the power to poke his nose into the internal affairs of every nation on earth. How can you determine what is confiscated property unless you determine the conditions under which all goods of a given class are produced in a given country and offered to the commerce of the world? How would you separate oil that came from confiscated wells? How would you identify it from other oil? I prefaced my remarks by saying that this bill ought to be labeled a bill to give the President power to police the world. I did not say I was going to vote for the bill, but by offering my amendment I sought to bring out the very point the gentleman has made. Of course, by indirection you will be passing on every barrel of oil or ton of metal produced, legal or illegal. And how would you prevent the confiscators from selling us their clean goods and putting the confiscated goods into other markets? This bill is an attempt to give the President the power to pry into the affairs of every nation on earth. An attempt to use it would be regarded as an insult by the other nations of the world. We ought to give such a power to no President.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PEARSON: On page 3, section 3, strike out all of line 10, after the word "or", and all of lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, and the words "political subdivision" in line 15.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary, because I want to say to them that I have no desire to pit my own judgment against their judgment or to make any suggestions which would weaken this bill, but as I see this measure, and I am laboring under no delusions as to what it seeks to accomplish, the danger, if any there is in it, lies in the language contained in line 10 and down to and including the words "political subdivision" in line 15, of section 3, of the bill.

By this language we seek to make the President the censor of every law, decree, order, ordinance or other act of any foreign state or government, thereby, as I see it, putting in his hands the responsibility of passing at this date upon the validity of at least one decree of a foreign government which has already become existent and which may occur in other countries, making it a very arduous task, as far as the Chief Executive is concerned, and one which may put this country in a very embarrassing predicament unless this language is changed.

If my amendment is adopted this section would read as follows:

The term "confiscated property" shall be deemed to include property which has been taken by means of force, or without payment of just compensation or reasonable provision therefor having been made.

That language, and that alone, is all that is necessary to constitute a sufficient definition for the term "confiscated property" and does not place upon anyone the responsibility of passing upon the validity or righteousness of an ordinance or law or statute of any foreign government. I submit to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that to strike out that language will improve this act, will relieve the Executive of an embarrassing responsibility and prevent this Government from placing itself in an embarrassing position with other governments.

I hope that the chairman will accept this amendment on the theory that it will improve the bill and will certainly protect international relationships which we now seek to enjoy with other nations of the world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have not had an opportunity to consult with the members of the committee generally, but the gentlemen on the committee who are present indicate that they have no objection to the amendment. I think when the language which the gentleman seeks to strike out is stricken from the bill it will broaden the responsibility of the President and will relieve him of any embarrassment that could be developed. But in view of the attitude of my colleagues on the committee and in view of the fact that I do not have any objection in substance, I believe that we may accept the proposed amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the amendment be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Nothing herein shall be construed to affect the status of any property assigned, conveyed, or transferred to the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3936 and, pursuant to House Resolution 617, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the gentleman's motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HANCOCK moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 2, line 15, amend section 2 of the committee amendment to read as follows:

"Property of American nationals, which has been confiscated in any foreign country, shall not be brought into the United States. If the property has been processed or transformed into property of a different character, or has been commingled with other property of a like or similar character in such manner as to lose its identity or to render impracticable its segregation from such other property, the exclusion of such processed, transformed, or commingled property from importation into the United States shall be mandatory. Whoever imports or attempts to import or bring into the United States any such property in contravention of any order issued by the President shall be subject to the provisions of the National Stolen Property Act of 1934 as amended and extended."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 52 and noes 76.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 142, not voting 167, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) entitled "An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short newspaper article pertaining to Hon. James A. Farley, from the Columbus Evening Dispatch, a copy of resolution passed by the National Association of Postmasters, at Columbus, Ohio, September 25–28, 1940, and also copy of resolution passed by the national convention of district postmasters, New York, September 20, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter on the subject of national defense by a World War veteran.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER]?

There was no objection.

BARRING OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8150), providing for the barring of claims against the United States, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after "demand", insert "except a claim or demand by any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATION OF CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS TO SECTION 3709 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10061) to consolidate certain exceptions to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and to improve the United States Code, with Senate amendments thereto and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, strike out line 12.
Page 2, after line 20, insert:
"(18) The Veterans' Administration."
Page 3, after line 5, insert:
"(9) The District of Columbia."
Page 3, strike out line 8.
Page 3, line 9, strike out "(2)" and insert "(1)."
Page 5, after line 15, insert:
"(m) Bureau of Mines—to any purchase or service rendered in the investigation of domestic sources of mineral supply, when the amount involved does not exceed $500."
Page 5, after line 15, insert:
"(n) Bureau of Reclamation—to the purchase of supplies and equipment or the procurement of services for the Bureau at the seat of government and elsewhere made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen, when the aggregate payment for the purchase or the service does not exceed $300 in any instance."
"(b) When the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $300, section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any purchase or service for which expenditures are incurred from funds allocated to Government agencies for obligation under the act of June 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 319), relating to the Civilian Conservation Corps."
Page 5, after line 25, insert:
"(c) All contracts for labor or supplies necessary for the carrying on of operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation pursuant to the act of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. 51), as amended, shall be exempt from the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes."
Page 7, after the line which reads "Stat. 909---------- | 15 | 198", insert:
"Act June 28, 1937, ch. 383, sec. 11, second proviso, 50 Stat. 321---------- | 16 | [1]584j"
Page 7, after the last line, insert the following footnote:
"[1] Second proviso."
Page 10, in the space left blank after "Title I, 54 Stat.", insert the following: "189."
Page 10, in the space left blank after "Title IV, 54 Stat.", insert the following: "211."
Page 10, after the line which reads "Act June 11, 1940, ch. 313, title I, 54 Stat. — -------- | 41 | 6hh", insert:
"Act Aug. 4, 1939, ch. 418, sec. 13, 53 Stat. 1197------ | 43 | 380a"

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I can explain the Senate amendments. When this bill was passed it was simply to place under one heading in the Code all the exemptions to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, which have to do with procurement. There were two or three mistakes in the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] followed the bill to the Senate and made the corrections. The Republican members of the committee are in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are they clerical amendments?

Mr. COCHRAN. They are amendments to keep them within the present statutes. There are no changes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF DELIVERY OF CERTAIN CHECKS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4353) to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes, and for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I understand this is a bill which will hold to this country checks to be paid to our veterans?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. They are veterans of the World War now living in foreign countries. The veterans are receiving the checks, but they are in some cases being confiscated?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, who is the ranking Republican member on the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, that it has been reported to us, and I think it can be very well established, that many of these checks have been confiscated. This measure would throw around them a safeguard to prevent confiscation of those checks.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman would like to have inserted in the RECORD a schedule of the number of veterans in these countries and the amount paid to them.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection to that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The schedule referred to follows:

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say for the benefit of the House that at the present time there are 4,070 veterans living in Germany, Poland, France, Italy, Russia, Belgium, and Norway, and the sum of $2,824,469 was sent to them during the year 1939. The number, the countries in which they live, and the amounts paid to them follow:

	Number of persons	Amounts paid
Germany	179	$99,360
Poland	754	505,683
France	236	132,437
Italy	2,351	1,714,103

Norway	311	209,966
Total	4,070	2,824,469

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no check or warrant drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, shall be sent from the United States (including its Territories and possessions and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands) for delivery in a foreign country in any case in which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that postal, transportation, or banking facilities in general, or local conditions in the country to which such check or warrant is to be delivered, are such that there is not a reasonable assurance that the payee will actually receive such check or warrant and be able to negotiate the same for full value.

SEC. 2. Any check or warrant, the sending of which is prohibited under the provisions of section 1 hereof, shall be held by the drawer until the close of the calendar quarter next following its date, during which period such check or warrant may be released for delivery if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that conditions have so changed as to provide a reasonable assurance that the payee will actually receive the check or warrant and be able to negotiate it for full value. At the end of such quarter, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall otherwise direct, the drawer shall transmit all checks and warrants withheld in accordance with the provisions of this act to the drawee thereof, and forward a report stating fully the name and address of the payee; the date, number, and amount of the check or warrant; and the account against which it was drawn, to the Bureau of Accounts of the Treasury Department. The amounts of such undelivered checks and warrants so transmitted shall thereupon be transferred by the drawee from the account of the drawer to a special deposit account with the Treasurer of the United States entitled "Secretary of the Treasury, Proceeds of Withheld Foreign Checks," at which time such checks and warrants shall be marked "Paid into Withheld Foreign Check Account." Thereafter the drawee shall deliver such checks and warrants, together with other paid checks and warrants, to the Comptroller General of the United States, who shall allow credit therefor in the accounts of the drawer and the drawee.

In the case of checks representing payments under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, when the amount, transferred to the special deposit account on behalf of any individual payee equals $1,000, the amounts of any further checks, except checks under contracts of insurance, payable to such payee under such laws shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The deposit in the special deposit account or the covering into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, pursuant to the provisions of this section, of the amount of any check issued under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be considered for all purposes, including determinations of rights under section 305 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, as payment to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. Payment of the amounts which have been deposited in the special deposit account in accordance with section 2 hereof shall be made by checks drawn against such special deposit account by the Secretary of the Treasury, only after the claimant shall have established his right to the amount of the check or warrant to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury (or, in the case of claims based upon checks representing payments under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, to the satisfaction of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs) and the Secretary of the Treasury has determined that there is a reasonable assurance that the claimant will actually receive such check in payment of his claim and be able to negotiate the same for full value.

In the case of the death of the payee of any check in payment of pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay accruing under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, while the amount thereof remains in the special deposit account, such amount shall, subject to the other conditions of this act, be payable as follows: (a) Upon death of the veteran, first to the widow; if there is no widow, to his child or children under the age of 18 at his death; (b) upon death of the widow, to her children under the age of 18 years at her death; (c) upon the death, prior to disbursement of all or any part of the apportioned amount, of an apportionee of a part of the veteran's pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay, such apportioned amount not disbursed shall be payable to the veteran; (d) in all other cases no disbursement whatsoever of such pension, compensation, or emergency officers' retirement pay shall be made or allowed except so much as may be necessary to reimburse the person who bore the expense of burial: Provided, however, That no disbursement shall be made unless claim therefor be filed in the Veterans' Administration within 1 year from the date of the death of the person entitled and perfected by the submission of the necessary evidence within 6 months from the date of the request of the Veterans' Administration therefor. Such benefits shall include only amounts due and unpaid at the time of death under then existing ratings or decisions.

SEC. 4. The provisions of sections 2 and 3 hereof shall apply to all checks or warrants the delivery of which is now being, or may hereafter be, withheld pursuant to Executive Order No. 8389 of April 10, 1940, as amended, as well as to all checks or warrants the delivery of which is now being withheld pursuant to administrative action, which administrative action is hereby ratified and confirmed: Provided, That any check or warrant the delivery of which has already been withheld for more than one-quarter prior to the enactment of this act shall be immediately delivered to the drawee thereof for disposition in accordance with the provisions of sections 2 and 3 hereof: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to dispense with the necessity of obtaining a license to authorize the delivery and payment of checks in payment of claims under section 3 hereof in those cases where a license is now or hereafter may be required by law to authorize such delivery and payment.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he in his discretion may deem necessary or proper for the administration and execution of this act.

SEC. 6. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as affecting or applying to checks or warrants issued in payment of salaries or wages or for goods purchased by the Government of the United States in foreign countries.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to make a little statement with reference to the airport proposal. I am not going to make any comments of my own on this but will simply state the facts with reference to the situation.

A bill was passed a week ago carrying provision for $30,000,000 cash and $50,000,000 in contract authorizations for the construction of airports. The list of airports, 4,000 in number scattered all over the country, was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee was told, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority has gone on record yesterday in a statement to the press to the effect, that only those airports the construction, enlargement, or improvement of which were absolutely necessary for the purpose of national defense as determined by a Board appointed by the President, the Board representing the Navy Department, the War Department and the Commerce Department, would be built with these funds, so that unless an airport qualifies sufficiently for national defense to come within the range of what that Commission may determine to be essential, it will not be built. Obviously, $80,000,000 will build only a very small portion of the 4,000 airports suggested.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Of course, that does not prohibit the W. P. A. from granting relief funds to the communities if they want to expand the facilities of their own airports.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman mentioned 4,000 locations. Can the gentleman indicate how the Members of the House may have available in the RECORD this list of 4,000 locations?

Mr. TABER. The 4,000 would be beyond the range of putting anything in the RECORD. The list could be printed as a House document. It is available to the public at the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. Can the gentleman tell us whether there is authority to acquire new lands to enlarge present airports with these funds?

Mr. TABER. We were told that primarily the localities would be required to furnish these sites.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. When do they anticipate these reports will be made by the committee to be appointed by the President?

Mr. TABER. The committee will not be appointed, according to what Mr. Hinckley, of the C. A. A., told me this afternoon, until after the bill has been passed and signed. It has not been reported out of the Senate Appropriations Committee yet.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT IN JANUARY 1941

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 467) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 4, after "Ceremonies", insert "on the occasion."

Line 8, strike out "500 of the Revenue Act of 1926" and insert "1700 of the Internal Revenue Code."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONALITY LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DICKSTEIN, LESINSKI, KRAMER, REES of Kansas, and VAN ZANDT.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article recently appearing in the Philadelphia Record by Jay Franklin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter recently written by the president of the Union League of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT

Mr. PACE submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed meal, and peanuts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article from the Dubuque (Iowa) Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

LEVY OF STATE TAXES IN FEDERAL AREAS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6687) to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That (a) no person thall be relieved from liability for payment of, collection of, or accounting for any sales or use tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, on the ground that the sale or use, with respect to which such tax is levied, occurred in whole or in part within a Federal area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect any such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to sales or purchases made, receipts from sales received, or storage or use occurring, after December 31, 1940.

"SEC. 2. (a) No person shall be relieved from liability for any income tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, by reason of his residing within a Federal area or receiving income from transactions occurring or services performed in such area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to income or receipts received after December 31, 1940.

"SEC. 3. (a) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of any tax on or from the United States or any instrumentality thereof, or the levy or collection of any tax with respect to sale, purchase, storage, or use of tangible personal property sold by the United States or any instrumentality thereof to any authorized purchaser.

"(b) A person shall be deemed to be an authorized purchaser under this section only with respect to purchases which he is permitted to make from commissaries, ship's stores, or voluntary unincorporated organizations of Army or Navy personnel, under regulations promulgated by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall not for the purposes of any other provision of law be deemed to deprive the United States of exclusive jurisdiction over any Federal area over which it would otherwise have exclusive jurisdiction or to limit the jurisdiction of the United States over any Federal area.

"SEC. 5. Nothing in sections 1 and 2 of this act shall be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of any tax on or from any Indian not otherwise taxed.

"SEC. 6. As used in this act—

"(a) The term 'person' shall have the meaning assigned to it in section 3797 of the Internal Revenue Code.

"(b) The term 'sales or use tax' means any tax levied on, with respect to, or measured by, sales, receipts from sales, purchases, storage, or use of tangible personal property, except a tax with respect to which the provisions of section 10 of the Federal Highway Act, approved June 16, 1936, are applicable.

"(c) The term 'income tax' means any tax levied on, with respect to, or measured by, net income, gross income, or gross receipts.

"(d) The term 'State' includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(e) The term 'Federal area' means any lands or premises held or acquired by or for the use of the United States or any department, establishment, or agency of the United States; and any Federal area, or any part thereof, which is located within the exterior boundaries of any State shall be deemed to be a Federal area located within such State.

"SEC. 7. (a) Subsection (a) of section 10 of the Federal Highway Act, approved June 16, 1936, is amended—

"(1) By striking out the words 'upon sales of gasoline and other motor vehicle fuels' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'upon, with respect to, or measured by, sales, purchases, storage, or use of gasoline or other motor-vehicle fuels'; and

"(2) By striking out the words 'upon such fuels' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'with respect to such fuel.'

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section 10 is amended by striking out the words 'not sold for the exclusive use of the United States during' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'with respect to which taxes are payable under subsection (a) for.'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to permit the States to extend their sales, use, and income taxes to persons residing or carrying on business, or to transactions occurring, in Federal areas, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HANCOCK and Miss SUMNER of Illinois asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

TITLE TO LANDS ACQUIRED BY UNITED STATES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9736) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize the Attorney General to approve the title to low-value lands and interests in lands acquired by or on behalf of the United States subject to infirmities, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, strike out lines 4 and 5 and insert "as amended, is hereby."

Page 2, line 6, strike out "law" and insert "law."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "or by exchange or donation."

Page 2, line 15, strike out "The" and insert "That the."

Page 2, lines 21 and 22, strike out "nor in cases of donation and exchange shall grants be accepted."

Page 3, lines 8 and 9, strike out "and in cases of donation and exchange by the acquiring authority's appraisal."

Page 4, line 17, after "Authority", insert "and nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner any authority which the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, or the Secretary of the Interior have under the provisions of law in force on the date this section as amended takes effect with respect to the approval by them of title to land or interests in land acquired by the War Department or the Department of the Interior, as the case may be."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly as it was this morning before the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And the committee unanimously adopted it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe it was unanimous. If there was any opposition I did not hear it.

Mr. LEAVY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when this legislation was before the House earlier I desired to know if its terms were sufficiently broad to permit the Interior Department and the War Department to continue to certify titles without having those titles passed on to the Department of Justice for a second certification.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. I understand that the amendment the Senate has written in the bill is for the purpose of establishing definitely the fact that a title certified by the legal department of the Interior Department or of the War Department in the smaller transactions will be a final certification, and it will not require a certification by the Justice Department; in other words, we will continue in the certification of titles just as we have in the past.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman it is my understanding, and I think it is the understanding of the Committee on the Judiciary, that the purpose of the Senate amendment is to leave the matter as it is now with reference to the matters concerning which the gentleman inquires.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, with that explanation I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Pearl S. Buck entitled "The Future of the White Man in the Far East." This article appears in Foreign Affairs and the American Quarterly Review, and Mrs. Buck is the author of Good Earth, the winner of the Pulitzer Prize and the Nobel Prize.

I have an estimate from the Public Printer, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by him on September 19.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE DROUGHT SITUATION IN NEBRASKA

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from the hearings conducted by the Tolan committee on the interstate migration of destitute persons. Within recent days I have passed through Nebraska twice. The drought situation there is most tragic.

About one-half of the State, including almost all of my district, is experiencing the seventh year of consecutive crop failures. Fine, industrious farmers, who have never asked for relief, are in desperate circumstances. There is no feed for the livestock. Feed must be sent in there, or a great percentage of the farmers will have to dispose of their last milk cows and flocks of chickens.

In 1934, when the first real severe drought hit, a mistake was made in compelling farmers to get rid of their foundation livestock herds instead of furnishing them with feed. If that mistake is made again this year, it will take the working tools away from these farmers, cause them to be unemployed, and force them to go on relief.

Loans of money are not enough. Due to the prolonged drought, many of these people are now loaded with great burdens of debt. The Department of Agriculture must take some steps to get feed into the territory so that the farmers can either borrow the feed and return bushel for bushel, or so that they can buy it on the same basis that surplus grains are sold to Canada and England and other foreign countries.

I am not insisting upon any particular proposal to relieve the situation, but I do urge that something be done and that it be done soon. Nebraska has been a generous State. Her people have responded to the cries for help when disaster struck in other parts of the Nation and throughout the entire world. Nebraska needs help now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a great speech that was made on this floor in about 1871 by a man named Proctor Knott on Duluth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Hon. Chester Meyers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a resolution which I have this day introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, some of that which was predicted on the floor of this House during debate of the National Guard and the peacetime military conscription bills has come to pass. Men of the One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Infantry of the National Guard unit from Buffalo and the Niagara Frontier in New York State, as well as other units, are now quartered at Fort Dix, N. J. Are they quartered in barracks? They are not. They are occupying tents, sleeping in their uniforms, attempting to keep off the effects of the 45-degree temperature accompanying the cold weather now prevalent at this camp.

A news item by a staff reporter of the Buffalo Evening News of September 26 tells of the conditions faced by these boys who have been ordered into active training by our Chief Executive to occupy a camp unprepared to accept them. Many of us are not surprised at this continued evidence of lack of preparation for preparedness. We are reminded of the "whipping up" process emanating from the executive department during legislative consideration of these bills by Congress. At the same time the conditions of these camps—hazards of occupation, inadequate housing, heating, lack of roads, and probably many other facilities necessary for the protection of the health of the boys taken by their Government to build up its defense must, or should have been, known to those of our Government charged with the responsibility. Here is what the news item says:

FORT DIX, N. J., September 26.—Glum over word that the new wooden barracks will not be finished for 2 months, men of the One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Infantry Wednesday night slept with their uniforms over their pajamas to ward off the damp, 45-degree cold which has settled over central New Jersey. They emerged at 5:45 o'clock this morning from drafty, unheated tents and trudged through puddles of soft mud. The rain and windstorm lashed at the reservation late Wednesday afternoon, halting settlement activities and threatened to level many of the tents. Sides of many of the tents collapsed during the storm, and the temperature fell to the low fifties. Efforts to anchor the canvas were hampered by the sandy nature of the soil. The unsettled weather added to the irritation prompted by the failure of three or four train carloads of equipment to arrive at the camp.

Another newspaper of Buffalo, the Buffalo Courier-Express, carried a picture of boys at Fort Dix hovering around a small stove with the statement that that stove is the only one at the fort for heating purposes.

Where does the blame lie? It is about time that this Congress looked into some of these conditions. If the executive department lacks interest in protecting these soldiers, it is about time this Congress sees to it that livable camps are provided before Uncle Sam's now healthy young men are thrown in with the probable effect of undermining their health. How long must we bear with these mounting inefficiencies in government?

I have just offered a resolution to investigate these conditions in the various camps, which is as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take testimony, investigate, and report to the House concerning the conditions of the various forts and military camps to which different National Guard units have been ordered or are to be ordered, as well as the conditions of such forts or military camps to which those persons enlisted, or to be hereafter enlisted or inducted into the military forces of the United States, are ordered, which conditions might tend to affect the housing and health of such personnel so ordered to such forts or camps.

The committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act anywhere within or without the District of Columbia, whether the House is in session or has adjourned or is in recess; to acquire by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take testimony; to have printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable within the amount appropriated therefor. A subpena shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned under authority of this resolution.

I sincerely hope that the majority leadership will see that this resolution is reported so that we can do something tangible to protect the soldiers' health.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, we just had a roll call to which 252 Members have answered to their names.

We have heard on several occasions how we should remain in session. To this I agree. The Nation ought to take cognizance of those who do remain in Congress. The leadership ought to take cognizance of the faithful on both sides of the aisle, and declare 3-day recesses, to permit Members to return to their districts at least for a short time to attend to the business preceding a national election. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial from A. M. Piper of the Nonpareil, Council Bluffs, Iowa, relative to unemployment insurance.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. PATRICK, Mr. BENDER, and Mr. LEA were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT COLONEL HARRINGTON

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I share the dismay and regret I am certain every Member of the House felt when he opened the newspaper this morning and read of the unexpected and untimely death of Col. F. C. Harrington. I do not know when the death of a man whom I knew only through official contacts across the conference table of the committee room has affected me so profoundly. He was a stranger to me, as he was to most Members of the Congress, when he was appointed Works Progress Administrator in 1938, but in the brief time intervening between his appointment and his death had become one of the most widely and favorably known men in the Nation.

As head of the Works Progress Administration he occupied one of the most difficult assignments in the Federal Government, not only because of its far-reaching ramifications, extending geographically into every community, and economically, to every industry and activity of continental and insular United States, but also because during his entire incumbency it has been the object of bitter attack. An extensive investigation was made of the W. P. A. and its administration and approximately $100,000 was expended in an exhaustive inquiry that subjected it to the searching scrutiny of professional investigators, assisted by employees requisitioned from the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. Through the ordeal he sustained his position with such ability and equanimity as to disarm even his severest critics and win from all admiration of his capacity and integrity and a deep regard for him as an officer and a gentleman.

The tempestuous character of the investigation and the wide publicity accorded it, served, unfortunately, to obscure the value of his services rendered in other and more important capacities. After attendance at Virginia Military Institute and graduation from West Point, he returned to the Academy as a member of the faculty. Later he served as engineer assisting Gen. George W. Goethals in the construction of the Panama Canal. During the World War he served with distinction and was promoted from the grade of captain to the grade of colonel. Following the close of the war he helped organize the Army Engineer School at Fort Belvoir, was district engineer at Baltimore, returned to the Panama Canal in the capacity of assistant engineer of maintenance, attended and was graduated from the General Staff School of the Army at Fort Leavenworth, attended and graduated from the Army War College at Washington, served 4 years on the War Department General Staff, attended and was graduated from Ecole de Guerre, the French school for the training of officers for high command, and served successively as Assistant Administrator, Chief Engineer, and Administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

His death is a loss to the service which he represented with such credit and distinction, and to the Nation at large which can ill afford to lose at this critical time a man of such invaluable qualities of heart and mind. May he rest in peace in that fairest vale of Valhallah reserved for the noblest, the truest, the most valiant, and the best beloved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday—tomorrow—may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what the program for tomorrow is?

Mr. McCORMACK. House bills with Senate amendments. Then there is the so-called Ellender bill which passed the Senate, relating to sugar. It is a bill which passed the Senate a few days ago and is on the Speaker's desk. Those are the only bills that I know of now that will be brought up tomorrow.

Mr. MICHENER. Is the Ellender bill a House bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; it is a Senate bill.

Mr. MICHENER. It has never been before a House committee?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. I understand there has been some meeting with reference to it. It will have to be taken up by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAGNUSON, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. SHANLEY, for today, on account of official business.

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art from everlasting, from whose presence there is no removal or withdrawing: We bless Thee for this lovely world of sight and sound and for the world of the unseen and eternal. Two worlds are ours; let us not neglect the one as we cultivate the other; as we walk by sight let us also walk by faith, the faith that causeth light to shine in darkness, and maketh e'en the dullest, barest place to glow with mystic beauty. May the challenge to the higher life of the spirit find quick and full response in the heart of everyone assembled here today. Let purest thought be quickened into action; and do Thou make each life more serviceable to Thee, the Nation, and the world. Let every citizen of our own America be solemnly aware of this great truth, that in a universe so vast and ageless the life of one man can be justified only by the measure of his sacrifice.

We ask it in the name of Him who gave Himself an eternal sacrifice for us—Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Tuesday, October 1, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had considered and failed to pass the bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

H. R. 6687. An act to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction;

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT (S. DOC. NO. 302)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, Senate, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $15,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Senate of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

A memorial relating to the payment of old-age benefits to persons engaged in or in sympathy with subversive activities

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

In the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1941, enacted by the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, aliens, Communists, members of Nazi bund organizations, and persons advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States are prohibited from employment on any work project under the Work Projects Administration.

The people of Arizona and, it is believed, the overwhelming majority of the people of the entire Nation, are wholeheartedly in accord with the spirit of that provision.

No similar provision is included in title I of the Social Security Act relating to the payment of old-age assistance. On the other hand, sections 302 and 304 thereof provide that the Social Security Board shall withhold payments to any State which imposes "any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States."

Of late the insidious work of the so-called "fifth column" has been unpleasantly brought to the attention of the people of America through the activities of said "fifth column" in other countries and through incidents and exposures in this country. Members of subversive groups are active in many parts of this country and many of such members are citizens of the United States, receiving various forms of governmental relief, including old-age assistance. It is believed that the considerations which led to the elimination of such persons from the W. P. A. rolls apply with equal force to the payment of old-age benefits and other forms of relief.

The States, believing that the national-defense program will be expedited thereby, desire to eliminate all persons engaging in any form of subversive activities from relief rolls, but are unable to do so in the case of old-age assistance because of the danger of losing Federal aid under the provisions of the Social Security Act above referred to.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Senate of the State of Arizona, urgently requests—

That title I of the Social Security Act be immediately amended to prohibit the payment of old-age assistance to any Communist, alien, member of any Nazi bund organization, or other person advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States, or to permit the States to prohibit payment of such assistance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BROWN from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4249) for the relief of the widows of the late George A. Meffan and John Glenn, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2193) thereon.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 10194. A bill for the relief of the late John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department (Rept. No. 2194); and

H. R. 10345. A bill for the relief of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2195).

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 10539. A bill making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2196); and

H. R. 10572. A bill making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2197).

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"THE JUDICIARY

"Court of Claims: The act of June 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 799, ch. 573), entitled 'An act to amend section 2 and to repeal section 3 of the act approved February 24, 1925 (43 Stat. 964, ch. 301), entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioners by the Court of Claims and to prescribe their powers and compensation," and for other purposes,' is hereby reenacted: Provided, however, That the amount payable to commissioners of the court for their actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed $7 a day, and the maximum amount payable to stenographers for their actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed $5 a day: And provided further, That retired judges recalled to active duty in Washington or elsewhere shall be entitled to the travel and subsistence expenses provided for in said act."

Mr. McKELLAR also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10539, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH IN FABRICS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] expressed a desire to continue his remarks. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yesterday was October 1. Today is October 2. Yesterday a motion was made to agree to the conference report. I obtained the floor and made some remarks in opposition to the report. Later in the day I yielded so that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] might address the Senate, as he had asked me to yield on the previous day in the event I should obtain the floor. A point of order was made against my yielding the floor to let him speak without my losing the floor. Knowing that I could make two addresses yesterday—thinking that I could, and I did—I yielded in obedience to the objection made by the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and by the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the two proponents of this bill.

My parliamentary inquiry is, Is today yesterday, or is today today under the rules of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that in view of the precedents of the Senate he will vacate the chair when a ruling on that question becomes necessary, and let the President pro tempore decide that question, as he has done heretofore.

So far as the Chair is concerned, today is not yesterday, and one day is 24 hours. That is what the Chair will rule if compelled to do so while he is Vice President. As stated to the Senator from Oklahoma, however, when that question comes up the present occupant of the chair desires to vacate it so that the Senate may have the ruling of the President pro tempore, whom the Senate itself selected, and who has followed the precedent of having 24 hours mean 24 days or any other number of days.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, accepting the ruling—and I think the Chair is correct—I assure the Senate that I shall not take a moment's time more than is necessary to have the RECORD show my views in opposition to this bill. I shall be glad to yield the floor for the transaction of any necessary business, and in any event I shall not occupy the floor very long; but until I shall have concluded my remarks I shall be glad to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may yield by unanimous consent. The ruling has been made that when a Senator yields by unanimous consent he does not thereby lose the floor; so if the Senator yields to other Senators by unanimous consent of the Senate he still has the right to continue his remarks.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if any Senator asks me to yield, and I grant my consent, and no Senator objects, then I presume I yield by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Chair will put it that way if the Senator desires.

TRAVEL ALLOWANCE TO JUDGES OF UNITED STATES CUSTOM COURT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma, by unanimous consent of the Senate, yield to the Senator from Maryland?

The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question first, if I may.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will ask for unanimous consent to yield to me, or I shall ask it, for the reason that there is on the desk a resolution transmitting the amendments of the House to a Senate bill which has passed the two Houses. There is no dispute about the amendments. They have been on the desk for several days. There will be no discussion on them; and I should like to have them agreed to, because I am afraid the legislative situation may become such that the bill will automatically die for want of consideration.

I therefore ask, for 1 minute only, unanimous consent that the amendment of the House to Senate bill 3990 be laid before the Senate without taking the Senator from Oklahoma from the floor at the conclusion of the consideration of the amendments; and if their consideration requires more than a minute I shall withdraw my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3990) to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court, Government counsel, and stenographic clerks as set forth therein for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes, which were, on page 3, line 25, to strike out "stenographic clerks, and Government counsel"; on page 4, line 2, to strike out all after "day" down to and including "clerks", in line 4; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes."

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS; TRUTH IN FABRIC—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILEY. I desire to do more than ask a question. A week ago today a speech was made by the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] which involved certain matters, and I had expected and have been patiently waiting to address the Senate in reply to those matters; and I desire to make my reply at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. An important conference report is now pending before the Senate. The Senator from Oklahoma has not concluded his remarks on the conference report, and if Senators are to pursue the course of trying to obtain unanimous consent in order that other speeches may be made while the conference report is before the Senate and while the Senator from Oklahoma has the floor, I merely wish to say that such unanimous consent cannot be obtained. I think the conference report is sufficiently important to be passed upon, and the Senator from Oklahoma should be permitted to conclude his remarks. Certainly he should not be interrupted in order that another Senator may make a political speech, and I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not yield for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield if by yielding I do not thereby lose the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if under these conditions unanimous consent is required in order that the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator may inject a political speech into the midst of the address of the Senator from Oklahoma on this conference report, I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILEY. I will state to the distinguished leader of the majority——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not want to take the Senator from Oklahoma off his feet, but he cannot yield for explanations and speeches unless he desires to. He may yield if he sees fit, but if he yields, he yields the floor for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, inasmuch as the present Presiding Officer advised me within the last few moments that I was now speaking by unanimous consent, I have a very decided opinion that if I yielded I would not again be recognized by the present Presiding Officer, and for that reason I shall be forced to proceed.

We have before the Senate a bill for the special benefit of one group of our citizens at the expense of all the other groups of our citizens, a bill to raise the price of wool, when the price of wool is now higher than it has been for years, and is going up 2 or 3 cents a pound a day. Yet in the United States Senate a bill is pending seeking still further to increase the price of wool at the expense of the taxpayers and at the expense of the consumers of the country.

Last night after I had concluded my remarks for the day I was accosted by a stranger, who asked me why I was opposing the bill. I asked him where he lived. He gave me his name, and told me he lived in the Northwest. I asked him what his business was, and he said he was engaged, among other things, in ranching. I asked him if he raised sheep. He said "Yes." Then I asked, "You must produce wool." He said "Yes." I said, "Mr. So and So, if I had a bill pending in the Senate seeking to glorify cotton at the expense of wool, and you were in the Senate, would you not oppose my cotton bill?" That ended our conference. The answer is obvious.

Mr. President, the bill seeks to legislate upon an impossible subject, and the bill itself is wholly ineffective. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some of its provisions. The bill defines wool as follows:

> The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat (and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, and vicuna) which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product.

Mr. President, that means that any of the hair of the sheep or lamb, or the wool of the sheep or the lamb; or the hair of the goat, or the wool of the goat, as the case may be; or the hair of the camel or the wool of the camel; or the hair of the alpaca, the llama, the vicuna, or the wool of those animals which has never been used, is virgin wool.

This definition of wool, in my judgment, is an impossible one. It makes no distinction between the best wool that is grown and the worst wool that is grown. A sheep, for example, has at least 14 different kinds of wool on its body. The sorter who takes the fleece of wool and makes the division of the wool before it is even scoured, divides the fleece of the wool into 14 parts. I have had placed on the wall a chart which shows the 14 divisions.

There is the wool grown on the sheep's back, which is called tops, and which is presumed to be the best wool grown on the sheep.

Then there is stained wool. Senators who have lived upon a farm know what stained wool is, and I will not describe it.

Then there is gray wool, and Senators likewise know what that is.

Then there is paint wool. It is virgin wool, because it is wool of the fleece, but it is painted slightly to denote the name of the owner of the wool.

Then there is britch wool. Of course, Senators know what part of the animal britch wool comes from.

Then there is seedy wool, and that designation indicates exactly what it is, namely, wool that is full of seeds of some kind.

Then there is dead wool. A sheep dies out on the ranch, the rancher finds it, he pulls the fleece from the dead sheep, and that is known as dead wool.

Then we have shearlings. In the springtime ranchers shear their sheep. Later on they want to sell the sheep for mutton, or for some other purpose, before the wool has grown to any extent, and sheared wool, a quarter of an inch long, an eighth of an inch long, half an inch long, remains on the body after the sheep is sheared, and that is called shearlings, and that is virgin wool, under the terms of the bill.

Then we have burry wool, and the name indicates exactly what it is—fleece of wool full of cockleburs or some other kind of burs.

Then there is vat wool. Wool is placed in a vat for scouring purposes, and when the wool scouring period is over, the vat is emptied, and what wool is left in the vat—and sometimes there is some—is called vat wool.

Then there is tanner's wool. The definition indicates what it is. Tanners take the wool and dye it, and what is left in the vat is tanner's wool.

I am asked by a Senator beside me where this information comes from. It comes from wool authorities. Some of it has been sent to me, some of it I obtain from dictionaries, some of it from other books.

There is shank wool. Senators know the part of the sheep from which that comes.

Then we have tags. Tags come from the lower part of the sheep's legs.

Now I should like to try to personalize this matter. The best wool is tops. That comes from the top of the sheep. Then we have a second class of wool called breech wool. Then we have a third class, which might be called shank wool.

Then we have a fourth class, which might be called tags. They come from different parts of the body of the sheep, but they are all virgin wool, under the terms of the bill. Wool which has never been used, which comes from the sheep's body, and has never been scoured, is all virgin wool.

I shall give the four principal kinds names. I will take tops, britch, shank, and tags. Tops lives on top of the hill. That is the best member of the family, "Miss Tops." The finest wool on the sheep lives on top of the hill.

Then there is Britch. Britch is not a very good-looking creature. He is a full brother of Miss Tops, however; comes from the same mother and the same father, and, so far as they are concerned, they are twins. But Britch is disheveled, and he is painted somewhat, and cannot live on top of the hill, so he lives back of the hill, around the hill.

Then we have Shank. Shank lives down at the forks of the road. He does not live in a very good community, and naturally he cannot associate with Miss Tops, who is better than Britch, but he will not associate with Britch. However, they are all brothers and sisters.

Then we have poor Tags. Tags lives just above the hoof of the sheep. Here we have these quadruplets—Tops, Britch, Shank, and Tags; four quadruplets from the same mother and the same father, born at the same time, but they cannot live together. Yet this bill provides that they must live together, on a parity, one as good as the other, because they are all virgin wool.

Mr. President, I call attention to the second section of the bill, where it is provided:

> (e) The term "wool product" means any product or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

What does that mean? It says that "wool product" means any product that contains any wool, or a product any part of which contains wool, or is advertised to contain wool. The Presiding Officer sitting at a mahogany desk. On that desk is felt, and the felt is made of wool. Under the terms of this bill, the Presiding Officer is presiding before a wool product.

Our efficient secretaries are sitting at a desk which must be defined as a wool product, because a part of that desk is felt, its whole top is felt, and this definition says that any product any part of which contains wool, or even is represented to be wool, is a wool product.

Mr. President, a traveling bag which contains a little woolen thread is a wool product. An automobile containing upholstery, if the upholstery is made in any part of wool, or is advertised to be of wool, is a wool product.

Let us take a straw hat. It may have around it a felt band, or a band containing wool. Under the definition in the bill a wool product is a product which contains wool, or any part of which contains wool, or is advertised to contain in any part wool. Then a straw hat with a band containing a little wool is a wool product, under the terms of the bill.

I am not blaming the Senator from Wyoming. We cannot define a wool product unless we go into great detail. It cannot be done in three or four lines. Yet in this bill the author seeks to define a wool product by stating—

> The term "wool product" means any product or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

So anything that has a shred of wool in it is, under the terms of the bill, a wool product. Anything that is advertised as containing wool is, under the terms of the bill, a wool product.

Mr. President, if glass contains some wool—and glass might contain some wool, so far as I know—then glass, under the terms of the bill, would be a wool product.

Mr. President, the bill would apply to all felt hats. Every felt hat, so far as I know, is made of wool or is in part wool. They are called wool hats. Under the terms of the bill every hat must be labeled, and the label must show the percentage of wool the hat contains.

Some concerns in this country make felt washers, for example. Felt is the kind of product that is on the top of the desk of the presiding officer. There are concerns which make felt and make washers out of the felt, and the washers are used for many purposes. Under the terms of the bill they are wool products. They must bear a tag and a label. Imagine the inconvenience and the expense and the trouble the bill will cause the manufacturing concerns of the United States. It is no wonder they are opposed to the bill. Last night I placed in the RECORD the names of about 500 American manufacturing concerns that are against the bill. They are against it for some of the reasons I have just enumerated, and before I conclude I shall place in the RECORD some of the telegrams and letters they have sent on the subject.

Mr. President, in the first place, the term "wool" is not defined properly, and it cannot be defined properly. There are many classes of wool, hundreds of them. There are 120 official standard brands of cotton, and there must be more standard brands of wool than there are of cotton.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it the contention of the Senator that the bill, if enacted into law, would be so impracticable that it could not be enforced?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; 100 percent, would be my answer. I have been trying during the past few days to put that fact into the RECORD. The bill cannot be explained in a minute, for it affects too many people and too many interests and is too broad in its implications. A bill cannot be written to cover the subject matter in a few lines, and the bill cannot be explained in a short time upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Further, it does not assist in any way the consumer in knowing the value of the product which he purchases, which may contain some wool, or in knowing the character, the firmness, the substantial usefulness of the material which he may buy under the labeling in this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct; and I will come to that in a few moments in my discussion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it the contention of the Senator that, for instance, a machine in which felt washers are used—I think they are commonly known as gadgets—itself under the definition in the bill would be a wool product?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will read the definition of wool, and the Senator can interpret it.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator read it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is my interpretation that a machine which is fabricated and put together, which is in part of wool, is, under the terms of the bill, a wool product. The bill reads:

The term "wool product" means any product or any portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool—

That is the virgin wool—

reprocessed wool—

That is the wool that has been woven but never used, and torn apart, which is just as good as virgin wool—reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

Which means shoddy. The question answers itself. If a machine, such as an automobile, contains any wool cloth or any wool substance, it is, under the terms of the bill, a wool product, or could be so defined. I doubt if anyone would want to define it as such. I would not. But I say the definition is faulty, because under the terms of the bill such a machine is a wool product.

Mr. President, there are, as I said a while ago, many kinds of sheep. Each sheep has about 14 different kinds of wool, depending on the place from which the wool is taken and the kind of wool that is taken. A fleece of wool is taken to the scouring room; it is torn apart, and if it has any "tops" that goes into one pile. Then the sides, which may be short and worn, are removed, and that wool goes into another pile. Then the grey wool is taken out and put in another pile, if there be any grey wool. The stained wool goes into another pile. Wool which has burs in it goes into still another pile. Then the shank wool goes into another pile. The tags, from the lower legs, go into another pile. So every sheep has about 14 different kinds of wool. The full-blood sheep has 14 different kinds of wool. The half-blood Merino, that is the fine sheep, has 14 different kinds of wool. The three-eighths-blood sheep also has 14 different kinds of wool. Then the sheep which have no pedigree also have 14 different kinds of wool. I have no information as to how many different kinds of wool there are, but there must be hundreds of different kinds.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state what, under the provisions of the bill, the label must contain?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will come to that in a minute. I shall go through the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The point I make is that the label would not indicate the fineness, or the value, or the quality, or whether it was the cheapest kind of wool, or the most expensive kind of wool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the bill the label will be required to state whether or not the wool is virgin wool. It may be "tags." That is virgin wool. It may be from the shank, but that is virgin wool. It may come from the tanner's vat, but that is virgin wool. It may be wool which contains burs, but that is virgin wool. The "shearlings" are virgin wool. Dead wool is virgin wool. Seedy wool is virgin wool. Britch wool is virgin wool. Paint wool is virgin wool. Grey wool is virgin wool. Stained wool is virgin wool. "Tops" is virgin wool.

I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming which he would rather have, a suit of clothes made from britch virgin wool or from reprocessed "tops" wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I should like to accommodate the Senator——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator does not wish to answer——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Oh, yes, I will answer the question, but as I said yesterday I do not desire to interfere with the Senator. In the first place, while he has repeated 10 or 15 times the words "virgin wool," that designation is not in the bill, but its equivalent is, which is just the word "wool." Of course, I have never stated, I have never indicated, and no one who has ever been for this bill has ever indicated that some grades of shoddy are not more valuable than some grades of virgin wool, but I wish to say to the Senator, as I said the other day, that if he should take the short, heavy, thick, hairy, soft, short wool from under the belly of ewes, or if he should take the wool from the back end of the sheep and try to make it into a garment, he might be able to fabricate cloth and keep it together until he made a suit of clothes, but nobody, not even a blind man touching it with his hand, would want it.

Naturally I would not want it, nor would anyone else want it, and no one is making it. If a manufacturer made it, and if he could say it was virgin wool, the shoddy sharks who are imposing upon the people, would now be making clothes from that material, and sending them out on the market, and saying they are of virgin wool, just as the Senator and others say it is virgin wool. Of course, the stuff the Senator is talking about is not made into cloth. It goes into carpet stuff, it goes into filling and great massive overcoats, which have a strong fiber to hold the garment together, and into which can be woven this short stuff so as to give a man weight when he thinks he is getting warmth.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the author of the bill has just admitted that the bill will legalize a deception upon the public of the United States.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I have not admitted any such thing.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator just admitted that a better garment might be made of reprocessed or reused wool than could be made of some brands of virgin wool. If that is not an admission that the manufacturers can take a low-grade virgin wool and make it into a garment and advertise it as wool, which is the highest type under this bill, then I cannot understand the English language.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. So long as the Senator keeps referring to me I shall take the liberty of referring to the 374 names of wool manufacturers who he says are opposed to the bill, and say that by some strange circumstances, of that entire 374 there were only 4 who ever appeared as witnesses either before the House or the Senate committees when the bill was under consideration, and one of the four was in favor of the bill.

A number of others who appeared advertise their products, both on the label and in their advertising literature, as virgin wool. Possibly they prefer to be able to advertise their products as virgin wool without the sanction of a law which would make them tell the truth.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it can be easily understood why many persons did not appear before the committee. The bill is in behalf of the wool raisers. I doubt whether very many ranchers or farmers who raise wool appeared before the committee and testified. They have an organization. The organization was represented, and properly so; but the farmers did not come in and testify that they wanted the bill passed. The ranchers who produce wool did not come in and testify that they wanted the bill passed. They do, but they could not come here. They have an organization, and their organization was ably represented.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Representatives of every farm organization in the United States appeared before the committee in favor of the bill. Representatives of the great consumer organizations, and of the women of the United States, who buy 95 percent of all the textiles sold, appeared in favor of the bill. Representatives of the American Federation of Labor appeared in favor of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am wondering what those ladies will say when they go to the stores after the bill is passed and see advertised dresses and coats labeled "virgin wool" or "wool"—which means virgin wool—and then find out that the wool comes from tags, from the shank, from vats, from dead wool, from shearlings, from the britch, or from some other undesirable part of the sheep. That would be the result under the terms of the bill. Factories may take the cheap wool, such as tags, selling for 5 cents a pound, put it into a garment, and advertise it as the finest wool grown. Why? Because the bill says that wool is virgin wool, wool which has never been used. It comes from the sheep; and, under the terms of the bill, fleece from the sheep or lamb is wool. So a man or a woman looking at the label would not know from what part of the sheep the wool came.

In my judgment, the enactment of the bill would be of no benefit except to legalize dishonest practices on the part of factories. It would be possible for factories to obtain cheap virgin wool, process it, weave it, make it into garments, and sell it as the finest wool grown. Hence, I say that the bill legalizes deception of the people of the United States and is not for their protection. In my judgment, anyone who understands wool would rather have a suit of clothes or an overcoat made from fine reprocessed wool than to have the same garment made from tags, shanks, dead wool, britch wool, or stained wool. There is no question about it. That is a statement which cannot be controverted. The suit might be made from the finest wool imaginable.

Let me exhibit to the Senate some samples of cloth. This cloth was secured from the office of the Quartermaster General's Department, which has to order, inspect, and purchase cloth for uniforms for soldiers. Attached to each piece of cloth which I exhibit to the Senate are the specifications under which the cloth is made. For example, I exhibit to the Senate a piece of cloth which I secured yesterday from the Quartermaster General's Department. It is overcoating cloth. It is called melton. It is a 32-ounce piece of cloth, which cost the Government $2.45 a yard. This is what the cloth is made of:

Material: Woolen yarn composed of 55 percent grade 44s or finer; 10 percent wool grade 58s or finer; 35 percent reworked wool or noils.

That piece of cloth was made under specifications of the United States Government, and contains the various percentages I have just stated. It contains 35 percent of reworked or reprocessed wool, or noils. Noils are virgin wool. When wool is scoured it goes to the carding room and is carded with little wire brushes. The longer fibers are retained in the tops, and the short fibers are worked out. The short fibers of virgin wool are called noils. So this piece of woolen cloth, used for making soldiers' uniforms, may contain, and I suppose does contain, 35 percent of reworked wool.

I show the Senate another piece of cloth which I secured from the same source yesterday. This is called serge. It is an 18-ounce piece of cloth, and is made for soldiers' trousers. The Government paid $2.04 a yard for this cloth. The cloth is made from all virgin wool, all new wool. If any reworked wool is permitted, the specifications do not so state. The cloth is pure virgin wool, which has not been used. If it were taken back to the mill and torn apart, the threads containing wool fibers being separated, it would then appear as a mass of wool. It has never been used. It has never been worn. It has been spun and woven. Under the terms of the bill, it would be reprocessed wool. That wool, so reprocessed, could be respun into yarn and rewoven into cloth, and the cloth could not be distinguished from the sample before us. Under the terms of the bill, the cloth must be labeled as reprocessed wool. In that event it would be an inferior cloth in the public estimation. It comes under the term "reprocessed wool." It is not reused wool. It has not been used, but it is reprocessed wool. It takes a second grade.

Is there any person alive who would not rather have a dress, suit, or overcoat made out of this sort of reprocessed wool than to have a suit made out of virgin tags, virgin shanks, virgin vats, virgin dead wool, virgin britch wool, or stained wool? There is only one answer. This is the finest cloth made, yet it is secondary. It is discredited and condemned. The purpose of the bill is to condemn and destroy, if possible, the use of wool which has been reworked.

I should like to ask this question of the proponents of the bill: Is it true that wool is such an inferior article that the moment it is washed, dyed, spun, and woven into cloth it is of no further account? The bill would discredit and discountenance the use of such wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator did not give all the process. He simply stated that the wool had been woven, dyed, and so forth. Why did he not go on and say that before it can be used again it must be given a bath in sulfuric acid and must be put through a garnetting machine, which tears it up, or into a machine which the Scotch call the "devil," which tears the cloth apart with steel spikes? It must then be cut up into small pieces and run through another acid in order to decolorize it, reducing it to a dead grey. Finally, after all that has been done, the chips of wool must be rubbed and softened so that the wool can be used. It is then put into a machine, recarded, and worked back into fiber. Of course, it is possible that the oftener the wool is torn up and the shorter it becomes, the more valuable it is; but I do not think the Senator could convince anyone of that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In making soldiers' uniforms a great number of odds and ends called cuttings are swept into a basket. When the basket is full, the pieces of odds and ends, such as those which I exhibited to the Senate, are baled and returned to the mill. When the mill receives them, they are taken apart. They are unraveled or unwoven, as the case may be, the thread is separated, and the wool is reduced to a fluffy mass. It is then recarded. There are bound to be short ends, because the wool has been cut. There is short wool, because the fibers have been cut. The short fibers are taken out, and only the long fibers are left. The short fibers are called noils. They are used for some other purpose.

As a result of this process, there is a great mass of wool from cuttings from soldiers' uniforms. Millions of soldiers' uniforms will be made. Bale after bale of this kind of material will accumulate, and that is the way it will be used. Under the terms of the bill, it would be reprocessed wool. My point is that, even though it is reprocessed wool, it is from the finest wool grown. The finest yarn may be made from reprocessed wool, and the finest cloth may be made from reprocessed yarn. The finest suits and coats may be made from such cloth. Yet under the terms of the bill it is discredited. It must be labeled "reprocessed wool." Under the terms of the bill it would be legal to advertise as "virgin wool" tags, shanks, and the other kinds of wool which I have already mentioned.

The Senator cannot do any better, because it is impossible to write a definition unless we should write a bill as long as the specifications for the erection of a Federal building.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I think the other day there was something said to the effect that if this bill should become a law it would operate to the betterment of the manufacturer outside the confines of this country and to the detriment of the local manufacturer. Will the Senator explain how that would happen?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is exactly true. I had expected to come to it later, but I will explain it now.

This bill applies only to American manufacturers. We cannot legislate for Canadians; we cannot legislate for Mexicans; we cannot legislate for Europeans or Asiatics or Africans or any other peoples. This bill is limited in its application to the mills in the United States. It provides for a system of labeling. A manufacturer can make cloth out of tags and vats and burry and dead wool and britch wool and stained wool and label it wool, which means virgin wool. He can make other kinds of cloth of a better class of wool, and that is also labeled wool. There is no test that has been devised—the Senator from Wyoming to the contrary, and I will place in the RECORD my authority—that can determine whether or not the wool in this piece of cloth [exhibiting] has ever before been processed. There is no test that science knows that can take either piece of cloth I have here and tell whether or not the cloth has ever before been woven. If the cloth is so worn that the fuzzy part is worn off—and the fuzzy part of the cloth is caused by scales on the fiber of the wool—if it is so worn that the scales are worn off, so worn that the place where the scale fits onto the fiber is worn off, and if it is so worn that the fiber itself becomes polished, then one can see himself in the back of the coat of the man who is wearing it, because he is looking at a polished wool fiber; and it would not take a scientist to tell that wool of that class had been used. But take the average grade of wool, take the suits that Senators are wearing, and one cannot see himself in the cloth of that suit, so far as I know. Take that class of wool and send it to a factory and have it torn up and restored to the fluffy stage, take out the short ends—and there would be some of those—then reweave that wool, redye it and respin it, make it into cloth, and no scientific test can tell whether or not it has been used.

So a factory in Canada, a factory in Mexico, a factory in Asia, Europe, or Africa, or any other place outside the United States can make wool from reprocessed cloth, can label it wool, sell it in the United States, and there is no test known that can tell whether or not that cloth has been made of used or reprocessed wool.

In America, if this bill becomes effective, we must have inspectors—and I will come to that later—otherwise the measure would not be worth the paper on which it is written. Chemical tests will not tell. The only way to tell is to have inspection of the wool from the time it reaches the factory in the fleece stage until it comes out as a finished garment. We cannot send inspectors to foreign factories; we cannot even have access to their books. So they can make any garment they see fit, label it a wool garment, send it to the United States, sell it in competition with garments made in the United States, and it is impossible to tell whether or not it has been made out of reused wool or reworked wool.

Thus the foreign mills have an advantage. There is no trouble about the records; there is no trouble about inspections; no expense for records and for labels, and so forth. They can take cheap wools, such as are grown in foreign countries; they can take the cheap labor which can be employed in foreign countries; they can take the cheap machinery which they may use to make the cloth, manufacture it cheaper than American mills can make it, out of reprocessed wool, reused wool, send it off to the United States, and sell it in competition with wool made by American factories, which have to keep records; which have to make and attach labels; which have to be subjected to inspection, as I shall come to later.

So that is one of the objections to this bill. I do not represent any woolen mill. So far as I know, there is no woolen mill in my State. There are cotton mills in my State. If this bill affecting wool shall be passed, the next bill will be applied to cotton. We will have a bill to affect cotton, no doubt. Then, if it is good for wool and good for cotton, it might be good for shoes. If we are going to regimentize—if that is the proper word—the woolen industry, why not regiment the cotton industry of the country; why not regiment the silk industry; why not regiment the nylon industry; why not regiment the rayon industry? So, I am of opinion that if this bill shall be enacted, there will be a bill here next year, or very soon, to apply the principles of the measure to cotton; then to apply them to the other textiles, and we will have then a complete regimentation of the textile industry of the United States.

Is that going to cost anybody anything? We cannot depend upon the records, for the manufacturer may be dishonest, or he may not keep records. If he keeps records, he could easily juggle them. So, the Government does not depend upon records.

When the Government erects a building, this Capitol Building, for instance, or the Supreme Court Building yonder, for example, or the Congressional Library, for example, the Government makes out very lengthy, detailed plans and specifications for the construction of such a building. Then it lets a contract, and the contractor agrees to construct the building according to the plans and specifications. But the Government does not depend upon the contractor doing the job according to the plans and specifications on his own accord or his own volition; not at all. The first thing the Government does is to require the contractor to give a bond, I think, to the value of the building, or approximately so. It will not, however, stand on the bond; the Government puts inspectors on the job. As the excavation is dug, inspectors are there to see that the excavation is dug according to the plans and specifications; that it goes down to bedrock, or to the shale or the piling, or whatever it may be. Inspectors are there to see that the work is done according to the terms of the plans and specifications. Then, after the excavation is dug, the Government will not permit that building to proceed until the gravel that goes into the concrete is inspected as to its size and character. Then the cement must be inspected. They do not take the contractor's word for it; they have men there experienced in testing gravel, experienced in testing concrete by scientific processes. The cement must be up to plans and specifications. The gravel and sand, the grout contents, must be inspected to make sure that they are properly mixed. The inspectors are there to see exactly that it is done according to plans and specifications. That applies to cement.

Steel is inspected; the brick are inspected; and rock or stone, if such material is used in the building, are likewise inspected. That is the method the Government follows in the construction of public buildings.

In the case of cloth the same plan is followed exactly. Since I am on that question I had just as well discuss it. The making of cloth for an overcoat or uniform for a single soldier takes 22 inspectors from beginning to end to see to it that the plans and specifications for the making of the uniform are complied with. I will now proceed to place those processes in the RECORD.

When wool comes into the factory or the mill it is in the grease. The first thing done is to sort the wool fleece. The sorter pulls the "tops," which is the best grade of wool, taken from the back of the sheep, out of its place and puts it in a pile. Then the sorter takes the other grades of wool. He takes the britch wool and puts it in another pile, probably a little farther away. Then he takes the tag wool and puts that in another pile, and so on. When he gets through he has 14 different piles from the one fleece that must be inspected by the representatives of the War Department. The Department has an inspector there to see to it that no tags, no shanks, no britch wool, no stained wool, no grey wool, no burry wool gets into the tops, for the uniforms are made out of tops. That is inspection No. 1.

Inspection No. 2 comes in connection with the scouring. Of course, if the inspector's back is turned, if the mill owner is dishonest, he could substitute in making the cloth other wool, fine wool, perhaps, which had never been used, but reprocessed and cheaper. If the inspector's back was turned, the mill owner, if dishonest, could run in a lot of wool that had been used, woven, or reprocessed. So the Government has an inspector at the mill to keep that from being done. The Government wants virgin wool, wool that has never been dyed, never been spun, never been woven, and never been made into a uniform. So the inspection covers the scouring. The inspector sees to it that the wool in the grease goes to the room where the wool is scoured. It takes more than 2 pounds of wool in the grease to make 1 pound of scoured wool. In other words, the wool is full of matter that the sheep accumulates as he lives on the farm, or the ranch, or wherever he may be.

So the inspector follows the wool to the scouring room. After the wool is scoured it then goes to the dyeing room. There are specifications about the dyeing. It must be of a uniform color; so an inspector follows the wool to the dyeing room.

In other words, there is one inspector at the sorting. A man is necessary to watch that process. There is another inspector at the scouring, to see that the mill is honest, just as there is an inspector in the construction of a building. The owners of the building do not suspect that the contractor is dishonest, but they want their inspector there to see that the building is constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications, because they are paying for it.

So an inspector inspects the dyeing of the wool. From there is goes to the blending and mixing room, and an inspector must follow it to that point. In a small mill perhaps one or two inspectors might do the job, because they might start a batch of wool from the sorting room, follow it into the scouring room, then into the dyeing room, then into the blending and mixing room, the carding room, and the spinning room. One or two inspectors could do the inspecting in a small mill; but suppose it is a large mill—and there are some large mills in the United States—with wool being sorted every day. An inspector would be necessary at the sorting every day. Then there would have to be an inspector at the scouring every day. So the first inspector is on the sorting, the second on the scouring, the third on the dyeing, the fourth on the blending and mixing.

The next inspector is on the carding. When the wool is cleaned and dyed and properly blended and mixed, it is then carded. That is when it runs through the little series of wires which look something like a currycomb. Some of the Senators may not understand what a currycomb is; but a carder is something like a currycomb, with the wires a little bit longer, and they are limber, so that the short fibers are taken out of the wool; but an inspector must be there to see that that is properly done.

Then the wool goes to the spinning room. There must be an inspector there.

It goes from there to the twisting, winding, and spooling room. It must be inspected there.

Then it goes to the warping, beaming, drawing-in, and reeding room. An inspector must be there to see that the work is done according to the specifications.

Then the wool goes to the weaver. It must be inspected at that point to see that the weaving of the cloth is properly done.

Then the woolen cloth goes to the burling and mending room. After woolen cloth is made it goes to a machine, and the machine runs over it and clips off all of the little uneven pieces of wool that stick out. Sometimes a piece of cloth is fuzzy. It is run through a machine, and all of the fuzz comes off, and the cloth then appears to be solid or to be clear of protrusions of any kind; so it is necessary to have a man to inspect it at that stage.

Then the cloth goes to the finishing room. An inspector is likewise necessary at that point.

Then the cloth goes to the scouring room. There must be an inspector there. This is not the scouring of the wool itself; this is the scouring of the cloth after it is woven.

Then the cloth goes to the fulling room. I am not an expert on mill operations, but I understand that after a piece of woolen cloth is taken from the loom it is first scoured. That means it is placed in some kind of a liquid, probably water and soap. I do not know the temperature of the water; but, anyway, it is scoured. Then it goes to the fulling room. At that point the cloth is a little bit uneven. It is not closely woven; and in the fulling room the strands are all pushed together, so that when the cloth comes out it appears to be closely woven. It is a tighter woven piece of cloth. That is called fulling.

Then we have the washing. After that is done, the cloth is all properly washed. An inspector is necessary at each one of these points.

Then the cloth goes to the carbonizing room, and from there to the dusting room. From there it goes to the neutralizer. It goes from there to the napping, and it goes from there to the tentering, and from there to the shearing, and from there to the pressing, and then it is finally inspected.

So, Mr. President, all these processes must be inspected in a large mill to protect the public, and to see to it that they do not get tags for virgin wool. Under the terms of this bill the public cannot be kept from getting tags for virgin wool, because the bill legalizes that. Under the terms of this bill, wool may be vat wool or britch wool, and it may go through all these processes and come out labeled as wool, and the bill legalizes it. The War Department does not stand for that, however. They want only tops, and they want those tops put through all the various processes, so that the garment, when it comes out, shall be exactly in accordance with the plans and specifications. They do not depend upon records. They do not depend upon a bond. They have their trusted and experienced men to stand at each point, over every machine, to see to it that when the wool is finally perfected and the garment is finally made it is exactly in accordance with the plans and specifications.

Mr. President, I now desire to place in the RECORD a little more detail about this matter. I appreciate the packed Senate floor today.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think that might be a good idea. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAHER in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Stewart
Andrews	Davis	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Austin	Ellender	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bankhead	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Barkley	George	Murray	Townsend
Bridges	Green	Norris	Tydings
Brown	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Bulow	Gurney	Pittman	Walsh
Burke	Harrison	Radcliffe	White
Caraway	Hayden	Reed	Wiley
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Schwartz
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further calling of the roll be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is requested that the calling of the names of the absent Senators be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, in the light of the statement made by the distinguished Senator, I should like to ask that the RECORD show that I am in my seat at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that it is a serious question whether the Senate may proceed, in view of the fact that a quorum was announced as not being present. The Chair therefore directs the clerk to call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Chair is correct in his interpretation of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. BYRD, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. GERRY, Mr. GIBSON, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HALE, Mr. HERRING, Mr. HOLT, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. KING, Mr. MEAD, Mr. NYE, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. SMATHERS, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. WAGNER, and Mr. WHEELER answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before the absence of a quorum was suggested I was attempting to place in the RECORD the reason for having so many inspectors. It is to make sure that the best woolen cloth is made from the best wool, in the first place, and then that it has the best workmanship, in the second place.

I desire at this point to make for the RECORD a statement relative to a cloth called mackinaw. It is a very heavy cloth. It is heavier than ordinary blanket cloth and as heavy as a light rug. It is a cloth which is used for making a topcoat or a short overcoat, and it is used in the North in the lumber camps and by the public generally. It is used in the United States, especially by the War Department, for the use of the boys in the C. C. C. camps. The War Department procures a great number of such mackinaw coats. The cloth costs $1.32 per yard. That is a rather cheap price for a heavy cloth of first-class quality.

For the making of this particular cloth the wool, or the fiber content, is of first-class quality. However, the wool used in making mackinaws is all reworked wool. They might be made, of course, of so-called virgin wool, but reworked wool, if not worn, not used, if processed into some kind of a garment, is just as good as the virgin wool, so this cloth called mackinaw cloth, or cloth used in making mackinaws, is made of all reworked wool. However, in the making of this cloth the specifications of the War Department provide that as much as 5 percent of the total content of the cloth may be silk or it may be noils. It may be, of course, virgin wool, or it may be reprocessed wool. Anything that is first class may be used under this 5-percent classification, but it must be of one of the classes just enumerated, silk or noils, or it may be of so-called virgin wool or so-called reprocessed wool.

Mr. President, I think the RECORD should show that even the War Department recognizes that for certain purposes reworked wool, reprocessed wool, is all that can be desired, and for the uses intended it is preferable to what might be termed the best virgin wool, and certainly the War Department would not permit "tags" to be used in making mackinaw cloth.

It would not permit grey wool to be used for that purpose; it would not permit paint wool, britch wool, seedy wool, dead wool, shearlings, burry wool, vat wool, tanner's wool, or shank wool to be used for such purposes. Of the 14 different kinds of wool the War Department would not permit the use of at least 10 or 12 of them, although those 10 or 12 kinds of wool would come within the terms of the bill as virgin wool. The War Department holds that better cloth for the making of mackinaws can be made from reprocessed than from virgin wool if the virgin wool falls into at least 10 of the categories or classes just mentioned.

Mr. President, either in the present session of Congress or in the next session of Congress the matter of inspection will have to be considered. The bill does not provide for inspection. It does not provide for testing. It does not provide money for the hiring of inspectors. The bill is an impossible one for the very obvious reason that it tries to solve an impossible problem. I do not criticize the Senator from Wyoming for that. I compliment him for bringing the bill before the Senate, and later on we may make some progress with it. As it is now, the bill, if passed, would be wholly ineffective. It provides for no test to discover whether or not the wool has been used. It provides for no inspectors. It provides no money to hire inspectors. So if the bill is passed now, in the next Congress we shall either have to repeal the law or amendments must be made to the law to provide inspectors and money to pay the inspectors.

The War Department advises me that it takes at least two inspectors to inspect the work done in a small mill. A larger mill may require as many as 22 inspectors. But even a small mill requires two or more inspectors. There are in the United States 500 mills which make woolen cloth. They are not all making wool for the Government; but there are at least 500 mills in this country manufacturing woolen cloth. There are scouring mills which do not even dye the wool; there are dying mills which do not scour or sort the wool; there are spinning mills which spin the yarn and sell it; there are dozens and hundreds of mills which do not completely process the wool. So I think it is safe to say that there are in the United States perhaps a thousand mills and industrial concerns which deal in some manner with the processing of wool from the time it leaves the ranch until it comes out as a finished product. If a thousand mills are dealing in wool, and if we should provide the inspection the War Department requires, at least two inspectors to each mill, and many more for some mills, it would take at least 2,000 inspectors to see that the provisions of the bill were enforced. There is no test provided in the bill to discover whether or not the wool is used wool. The only way it can be done is by inspection. We must provide inspectors, and it would take at least 1,000 inspectors to inspect the woolen mills. There are a thousand washing mills, scouring mills, weaving mills, carding mills, and so forth. It would take at least a minimum of 2,000 inspectors to inspect them all. Of course, that is regimentation of the woolen industry.

A moment ago I placed in the RECORD the different stages of inspection. The data were taken from the War Department Technical Manual entitled "Inspection of Textiles." The particular document is labeled "TM 10–225." The list just referred to is found on pages 51 and 52.

I shall proceed to read into the RECORD the nature of this inspection, because the bill will come back here next year and the matter of inspection will be most important, and I think the RECORD made now may be helpful in the consideration of amendments to the bill which will be necessary to be made if the bill in its present form shall pass in the present session of Congress. I read from section 42, on page 52.

General: It is not possible to confine to this manual all the technical information required by an inspector. However, the following are some of the most important operations in the manufacture of woolen textiles, and the inspector should carefully check the result of each, as it is only by each operation's being performed in a satisfactory manner that a suitable piece of cloth can be made.

Section 43. Wool sorting:

That is the first process. When the wool comes in from the ranch to the mill, it comes rolled in fleeces, and the fleeces contain dirt and grease. The fleece is spread out on the table, and the sorter, who must be an expert, takes the fleece, and this is what the inspector must see that he does to it:

Wool sorting: This is the first operation with which an inspector assigned to factory inspection will come in contact, and like all other operations, unless it is being performed in an efficient manner, cannot be expected to produce a good fabric. If fleece wool is being used, the inspector must see that the fleece is properly skirted off and loam and soil removed, and then that the balance is sorted in such a manner as to give the grade and character desired in the main sort.

Section 44. Wool scouring—

After the fleece has all been torn apart and separated into at least 14 different piles, then the different piles or bunches of wool go into a larger pile of the same class and character, and after enough of it is obtained for scouring purposes, each bunch in the particular class is sent to the scouring room. This is what the inspector must see is done in the scouring room:

Section 44. Wool scouring: After sorting, the next process in the manufacture of woolen textiles is the scouring of the grease wool. Wool, as it comes from the sheep's back, contains from 25 to 80 percent of greasy suint, dirt, and other foreign matter that must be removed before the wool can be used. Scouring must be carefully observed by the inspector to insure that the wool is not damaged in the process. The most common damage during the scouring process is from the use of caustic soap (which will leave a harsh wool), excessive heat (which weakens the fiber), and excessive agitation of the wool during the scouring (which causes felting and subsequent damage to the wool in carding). Grease wool is cleansed by soap and alkaline solutions and by the solvent process; partial degreasing is accomplished by defrosting.

That is process No. 2.

Process No. 3 is wool dyeing. This is what the inspector must see is accomplished when the wool is being dyed:

45. Wool dyeing: A great number of variables must be exactly duplicated in order for a dyer to secure uniform results on succeeding batches. An inspector should be familiar with the problems of the dyer and see that he does everything possible to obtain uniform results. He must see that the specification type of dyes is being used and that the wool is not being damaged in the dye house.

That is process No. 3.

Process No. 4 comes under the head of "Blending and mixing."

46. Blending and mixing: An inspector should make a record of the various dye lots and amounts of each used in producing the contractor's approved sample, see that subsequent lots are blended in the same proportion, and that the mixing is true. Laying down a mix, the feeding of this mix to the picker, and the number of times it is run through the picker must be uniform for all lots, of the yarn produced therefrom will not be uniform.

The next process is called carding. This is what the inspector must see is done with the wool under the process of carding:

47. Carding: The strength of a fabric depends greatly upon the strength of the yarn from which it is made, and the strength of the yarn is affected very much by the efficiency of the carding operation. An inspector must watch the feeding of the cards to see that it is uniform and the condition of the cards to see that they are operating properly. Another very important point is to see that card strippings and such other waste prohibited by the specifications are not being made. The inspector should check the weight of roving coming off the cards.

In looking around I observe the presence of my distinguished colleague from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the author of the bill. Looking across the way, in the distance I see my distinguished friend from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I appreciate the remark. It is good to have at least three musketeers here. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We now have the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] in our group, and to my left we have the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I shall not expect them to remain in the Chamber, because I am merely making a record.

I cannot refrain from noting that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is being punished by presiding over the massed Senate on this important afternoon.

I proceed to read, Mr. President. I have read that inspectors must see that the wool is properly sorted; they must see that the wool is properly scoured; they must see that the wool is properly dyed; they must see that the wool is properly blended and mixed; and they must see that the wool is properly carded.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] has entered the Chamber. I note also the presence of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

I am now reading from page 53 of the War Department manual. The next process, after carding, is spinning. This is what the War Department requires the inspector to see in the operation of spinning:

48. Spinning: The spinning operations require very little observation by the inspector. The main points to be watched are the evenness, cleanliness, strength, and size of the finished yarn.

The next process is listed as "twisting, winding, and spooling." The inspector must see that the following is accomplished:

49. Twisting, winding, and spooling: These operations are of little interest to the inspector and require little or none of his time.

The next operation is warping, beaming, drawing-in, and reeding. This is what the inspector is required to see is done.

50. Warping, beaming, drawing-in, and reeding: These operations should be observed by the inspector, and he should check the number of ends in the warp to be sure that there will be the proper number in the finished cloth. If the drawing-in and reeding are not correct, it will show up as soon as the weaving is started.

The next operation comes under "Weaving." We now have the wool sorted, scoured, dyed, properly blended and mixed, carded, spun, properly twisted, and ready for weaving. This is what the inspector must see is accomplished in the mill in the weaving operation:

51. Weaving: The inspector should observe the tension and make sure that it is even. He should observe what stop motions are being used, and whether or not they are working properly. He should check the weave to see that it is correct, and the number of picks per inch to see that they are running uniform. Another very important point that the inspector must watch is the filling yarn being used. He must see that different shades are not being mixed in such manner as to cause shade bars in the cloth.

The next process after the cloth is woven is burling and mending. I shall now read from the same publication what the inspector must see is accomplished under the operation known as burling and mending:

52. Burling and mending: Mending of defects in the cloth as it comes from the loom is always necessary, and, if properly done, the result will be as good as if the cloth had been perfect when taken from the loom. Knots should be pulled through to the back of the fabric, all missing threads should be replaced, and the cloth made as perfect as possible before proceeding with other finishing operations.

Under "Finishing," the inspector must see that the following is accomplished:

53. Finishing: Seventy-five percent of an inspector's time should be spent in the finishing room, as there is no other place in a woolen mill where so much trouble occurs. The finishing operations on a woolen fabric may consist of any or all of the following operations, and each one is a potential source of trouble: Burling (see par. 52), mending (see par. 52), scouring, fulling, washing, carbonizing, dusting, neutralizing, napping, tentering, shearing, pressing, inspecting.

After those things have all been accomplished in the finishing room, the next process is scouring. This is what the inspector must see is accomplished in this process which the cloth has to go through before it is ready for the manufacture of woolen items:

54. Scouring: The cloth as it comes from the loom contains a certain amount of oil and dirt which must be washed out before fulling. This operation requires very little of the inspector's attention. The main point is to see that the type of soap used is not injurious to the fabric.

I pause to announce that the distinguished junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has just entered the chamber.

The next step is called fulling. This is what the inspector must see is accomplished in that process:

55. Fulling: There is probably no more important operation in the finishing of a piece of wool cloth. Here the cloth is changed from a loosely woven fabric, resembling a piece of burlap, into a more or less compact fabric with the desired texture. This is accomplished by subjecting the fabric to the kneading action of the fulling mill in the presence of soap. The starter must see that each piece is treated as uniformly as possible, as it must be remembered that the longer a piece is in the mill the more color will be lost, and shade trouble will result. It is important to know what fulling compound is being used, and it is well for the inspector to submit a sample to the laboratory for test, unless he is sure what is being used. The heat generated by the friction of the cloth in the mill must be controlled. This is usually done by opening or closing the doors of the fulling mill. The proper fulling temperature should be between 90° and 110° F.

The next operation is washing. There are these different steps and processes. I am reading from the War Department Technical Manual, which gives the plans and specifications for the inspection of the various processes through which wool has to go before it reaches the uniform stage, ready for delivery or issue to the soldiers.

56. Washing: After fulling, the cloth must be washed free of the soap used in that operation, and the inspector must see that this operation is performed in a satisfactory manner and that the concentration of such chemicals as are used is controlled.

The next operation is carbonizing. The inspector must see that the following is performed and accomplished:

57. Carbonizing: Carbonizing consists of treating the fabric with sulfuric acid or aluminum chloride, then passing the cloth through a dryer in order to bake such vegetable matter as there may be present in the cloth.

The next operation is dusting:

58. Dusting: After the cloth is removed from the dryer, it is put into a fulling mill and run through. This process will dust out all the carbonized vegetable matter.

The next process is neutralizing, and this is what the inspector must see is accomplished in the neutralizing process:

59. Neutralizing: After being dusted, the piece is then neutralized. The dyes used in dyeing olive drab fabric are made from a mixture of a number of different colors of dyes. Each one of these different colors is likely to change when subjected to the action of acids or alkalies. Therefore, when the piece has been treated with acid it changes color, but when this acid is neutralized, the color changes back to the original shade. From this it is easy to see that unless all of the carbonizing operations are positively controlled the cloth will be of different shades. An inspector assigned to a mill must familiarize himself with this process and watch the operation very carefully.

Mr. President, I may suggest that the inspectors assigned to the task by the War Department must be experts in every particular line of the several processes of making cloth. If this bill becomes a law and is made effective within a year or two, the Federal Trade Commission will have occasion for at least a thousand inspectors. So if anyone desires to secure a job of inspecting in the woolen mills of the country, if he will begin now to familiarize himself with the duties of an inspector in the various branches and degrees of processing wool for cloth, when the time comes for filling these places there will be an opening for at least a thousand and perhaps for 10,000 inspectors.

The next process is napping. Under this operation the inspector must see that the following is accomplished:

60. Napping: Napping should be held to the minimum necessary to give the desired finish and should never be done in such a strenuous manner as to injure the fabric. The inspector should observe this operation and see that the napping is uniform throughout the fabric.

The next process is tentering:

61. Tentering: The principal point to watch in this operation is to see that the cloth is so placed on the tenter pins that it will not be damaged, and that no cloth is allowed to remain in the dryer long enough to injure it.

The next process is shearing. The inspector must see that the following is accomplished under the process of shearing:

62. Shearing: The inspector must watch the shearing to see that the pieces are being evenly sheared and that the shear flocks are being properly removed. A great many mills have installed sewing machines that will seam the cloth in such a manner that it is not necessary to lift the shear blades in order to pass over a seam. In those mills that do not have this equipment the shear blades must be lifted in order to keep from cutting the cloth when a seam passes under the blade. This results in the improper shearing of a few inches of cloth on the end of each piece. This end will be cut off before the piece is shipped.

The next stage is pressing:

63. Pressing: In the operation of pressing, as well as in a great many other operations, the inspector's principal care is to see that the cloth is not unduly stretched.

The next operation is inspecting:

64. Inspecting: The final mill inspection of woolen cloth is always done by running the cloth over a finish perch where the mill inspector removes surface specks, such as burrs, and observes the piece for defects. If defects are found, a string is tied into the selvage and proper allowance is made for the defect. The cloth is usually measured at this time and put up in its final shipping form.

The next operation is shading pieces before shipment:

65. Shading pieces before shipment: An inspector should always compare a sample swatch from each piece of finished cloth with the standard sample and advise the contractor to ship only those pieces that appear to be satisfactory for shade and finish.

I read one more paragraph from this manual issued by the War Department under the head of "Technical manual—Inspection of textiles."

The "Other operations" are as follows:

66. Other operations: While the foregoing covers the principal operations in the finishing of woolen cloth, there are numerous other operations, all of which must be carefully controlled by the contractor and checked by the inspector in order to turn out a satisfactory piece of cloth.

So, Mr. President, the War Department requires a thorough inspection of the wool when it comes from the ranch or the farm, through the sorting process, then through the scouring process, then through the dyeing process, through the spinning process, the weaving process, and then again through the processes of coloring, fulling, and so forth. It requires a number of inspectors to see that the manufacturer or the mill owner complies with the plans and specifications, because, if the War Department does not have inspectors on hand during the various processes, when the cloth comes out of the mill, there is no test that can determine whether or not the cloth contains virgin wool or reprocessed wool or reused wool.

Mr. President, awhile ago I was undertaking to describe or to analyze the bill, but I was asked a question about inspection relating to foreign factories. I read into the RECORD a little while ago a definition of wool under the terms of the bill. I then read the definition under the terms of the bill of wool product. A wool product according to this measure, if enacted into law, will be:

Any product or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

Under that definition an overcoat made of used wool or the worst shoddy that was ever put through a mill is a wool product, an all-wool product under the terms of this bill. A coat or a suit made of reprocessed wool, good or bad, is likewise a wool product under the terms of the bill. A garment made of "tags" is a wool product or one made of any of the other 13 classifications of wool is a wool product; they are all wool products. This definition is wholly inadequate; it is misleading. If the bill is enacted into law, it will legalize and license dishonest manufacturers to impose upon the consuming public of the United States.

Further analyzing the bill, Mr. President, I find in section 3 language which relates to misbranding. I desire to read that into the RECORD, for this bill will come up again in some other form because it is ineffective as it is, and so will have to be amended.

Section 3 provides that all wool products must be branded or labeled. Every product that has any wool in it of any kind or character or is alleged to have any wool in it must be labeled.

Of course the bill provides that the product shall be honestly labeled. Honest factories, no doubt, would honestly label their products, but, unfortunately, there may be at some future time, factories that might not be consistently honest and that might not label the products exactly according to their contents; they might vary a little from the truth. Yet, Mr. President, under the terms of this bill, a factory can make a product out of tags or shanks or britch wool and sell it as the best grade of wool, because, under the terms of the bill, it is wool, and there is no distinction made between different grades of virgin wool or grades of wool itself. An article that contains wool in any part is a wool product. Therefore it has to be labeled. So, I can imagine, after this bill becomes the law, that our automobiles will be labeled a wool product if they contain any wool, and our straw hats, if they have a band that contains any wool product, will be labeled a wool product.

When the desk at which the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is now presiding is replaced, if the new desk has a felt top, and the felt is made out of wool—and it will be—then we shall have a wool-product desk for the future Presiding Officer. If the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is so fortunate or unfortunate, as the case may be, as to be elected Vice President in November, he will preside at a wool product after his inauguration on about the 20th of next January.

Mr. President, all products containing wool must be labeled. If they are not labeled, of course that is a violation of the law. If the product which is labeled is deceptively labeled, not properly labeled, that is a violation of the law; but there is no test which can determine whether or not a product is mislabeled. If it is made out of virgin wool, it will not be examined. If it is reprocessed wool and not shoddy, there is no test which can determine that fact.

I hold that the bill is defectively drawn. That is no criticism of the author of the bill, because no author could draw a perfect bill. I do not think any author could draw a bill to cover this question without using much time and many, many pages in which to place the various provisions which would be necessary to draw and prepare an effective bill.

The penalty for failing to label an automobile if it contains wool, the penalty for failing to label a straw hat if it has a woolen band, the failure to label a pair of shoes if they have a felt insole or any part of wool about them, is a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for 5 years, or both. That is rather a serious penalty. The bill gives the Federal Trade Commission power to make inspections, but it provides for no inspectors. Under section 6 of the bill the Federal Trade Commission is authorized to cause inspections, analyses, tests, and examinations to be made of any wool products subject to the bill, and to cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, with any State, Territory, or possession, or with the District of Columbia, or with any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

So, under the terms of the bill, if it should become a law, the Federal Trade Commission is authorized to inspect and investigate any wool product, any product which contains wool, any product which is advertised to contain wool, submitted by any Federal agency, any State agency, any Territorial agency, the District of Columbia, or any department, agency, or political subdivision of any of our States or Territories, or submitted by any person.

If the bill becomes a law, I imagine that thousands upon thousands of requests will be made upon the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and inspect and advise whether or not certain pieces of cloth contain reused wool or reprocessed wool. If that shall be done, it will cause the Federal Trade Commission to perform a great deal of labor which it does not now perform. To perform that labor a great number of additional officials will be required. Those officials must be paid. So, to make the bill effective, the governmental agency known as the Federal Trade Commission must not only be provided with thousands of inspectors to go to the various mills of the country and remain in the mills to see to it that the law is complied with, but the Federal Trade Commission must have a great number of experts in every office here in Washington, or in regional offices which they may set up, to make tests and examinations of pieces of cloth which may be submitted by any of these agencies, or by any citizen.

So the bill will entail upon the Government a vast expense. It will entirely regiment the woolen industry. It will entirely regiment all industries which deal in wool. If the bill shall become a law, in my judgment, it will be followed by other bills which will seek to regiment the other textile industries, such as cotton mills, silk mills, rayon mills, nylon mills, and mills which may use other forms of textiles.

That is not all the bill does, Mr. President. If the bill should become a law, and the Federal Trade Commission should receive many thousands of samples for testing and inspection, and if the Federal Trade Commission should find that some of the mills and some of the factories were illegally labeling their products, then it would be the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to certify to the Attorney General the facts as they might be discovered, and the Attorney General is authorized under the bill—it might be said that he is commanded under the bill—to bring action. That direction comes under section 10 of the bill, which I shall read:

> Whenever the Commission—

That means the Federal Trade Commission—> has reason to believe any person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this section—

That means mislabeling or misbranding or failing to brand—> it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this section against such person.

So, if this bill should become a law, and it should operate as I think it would operate, not only would the Federal Trade Commission be forced to employ thousands of inspectors and other hundreds, at least, of scientists to make inspections and investigations, but it would probably require the Department of Justice to employ a great number of new attorneys to take care of the cases which would be certified to the Attorney General by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. President, I have many times made on the floor of the Senate the statement that there is no test which can determine whether or not a piece of cloth contains reused or reprocessed wool. I wish to place in the RECORD at this point my authority and my reasons for having made that statement.

In 1937 the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], I think, had pending in the Senate a bill on this subject; or, if he did not have it pending then, he had introduced the bill in some former session in conjunction with Representative French, of Idaho. I am advised that the bill in question was the first bill of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. At any rate, the RECORD shows that the Senator from Kansas made this statement: He himself had theretofore been the author of bills on this subject. He had made a study of the woolen industry, he had held hearings, he had made an investigation; and after all this study and investigation this is his conclusion. I read:

> Physical and microscopic analyses are helpful; but, as before stated, our scientists cannot yet determine even by these means, with sufficient accuracy for law enforcement, the extent to which such adulterants have been used in the manufacture of wool fabrics.

Mr. President, if the senior Senator from Kansas was correct in the statement that it is impossible to detect the presence of reused wool or reclaimed wool or reprocessed wool in a fabric, I should like to know how the Federal Trade Commission can tell whether or not a fabric submitted to them for test contains reused or reprocessed wool. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] is correct when he makes the statement, or at least indicates that he believes the statement that the Federal Trade Commission will not rely upon microscopic tests or scientific tests, but if the bill is to be enforced it must be enforced through inspection. If that is true, then of course inspectors must be provided in order to see that the cloth is made in accordance with the specifications, or else the law will be wholly ineffective.

When this bill was pending before the House only recently, Representative RICH had the following to say about the bill:

> As I said before, I tried to work out a bill of this nature, and spent at least 3 months, working day and night, trying to find a way to determine so that the public would know, when a piece of fabric was manufactured, just exactly what was in that piece of cloth. That was my object. My object was to try to let the American people know what was the best kind of fabric for them to buy, so that when they bought an article they would get one that would give them the greatest warmth, because it contained wool, and, because of its long-wearing qualities, and its heat-containing properties, a fabric that would have real quality and merit for the consumer. This was the thought I had in mind in trying to write such a bill. But what did I find?

Representative RICH had made this study and investigation, had tried to prepare a bill, and he is now testifying to the House as to his difficulties in that undertaking. He asks the question:

> But what did I find? I found the complications in drawing such a bill so perplexing, and the bill so difficult of administration, that I had to give it up in despair.

I do not blame the Representative for giving up in despair. I have wondered oftentimes why the author of this bill has not given up in despair. But he persists.

I quote further:

> It was not practical nor feasible.

To prepare a bill on this impossible subject.

I quote further:

> I went back over the records of bills that had been introduced in years gone by in Congress and reports that had been filed here 20, 30, and 40 years back on similar legislation that was proposed to the Congress. They gave up in despair.

Mr. President, I submit the testimony of Representative RICH in support of my statement that this has been an impossible subject and that it is impossible to draft a bill which will solve the problem, unless perchance we go into great detail, and then provide a flood of inspectors to haunt each mill in the country dealing in wool in its many and various processes.

If the Congress desires to regiment the woolen industry, the cotton industry, the silk industry, and all other textile industries, we are now starting on such a program. If this bill is desirable for wool, it would be well for the housewife, when she goes to the store to buy cotton goods, to know whether or not she is getting cloth made from reused cotton, or perhaps from rags. If the bill is good for the wool interests a similar bill would be good for the cotton interests. If it is good for wool and good for cotton, it would be good for silk. If it is good for them, it would be good for rayon and Nylon, or any other textile which we have or may yet devise.

Regarding testing, I submit a statement from Hatch Textile Research. The statement was released on May 4, 1938, and was made by Herbert Harriman Hatch, the president of that highly scientific institution. This is what Mr. Hatch says:

In regard to your letter of April 29, asking us to give you the various percentages of different types of wool contained in the 24 samples sent in to be tested, we regret to advise that this test, in our opinion, cannot be made accurately enough to be of any value in establishing the true percentages which went into the cloth originally.

So the Hatch Institute says they have no test under which they can discover whether or not these fibers have been used before.

I now desire to call the attention of the Senate to a statement made by the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau, Inc. Mr. Frank Stutz, the president of that scientific bureau, on May 4, 1938, made the following statement:

Under date of May 2 an order was issued by your association to this bureau to analyze 24 pieces of fabric for fiber identification under the classification of virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

This bureau does not have anyone on its staff qualified to classify microscopically wool fibers for commercial grading as virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

So another scientific institution advised that they were unable to make the test.

On May 6, 2 days thereafter, the same president of the same institution, in reply to an inquiry as to who might be able to make this test, the institute having advised that they had no one who could do it, made this reply:

In reply to your letter of the 5th, asking for the name of any person qualified to classify virgin wool and reclaimed wool in finished merchandise, I am sorry to state that we know of no person in the industry or testing business who has qualified to perform this service. I would like to employ anyone having this unusual ability, as we have more difficulty in identifying the origin of animal fibers than all other problems in the testing business. It is our policy to insert the paragraph below in every report of fiber identification of mixed fibers in a fabric and composed of several animal fibers.

This is the clause which they insert:

Due to the controversial nature of technical reportings on fiber contents of fabrics, this bureau does not assume legal responsibility for any use of the information reported herein.

Not only does Mr. Stutz say that his institute, a highly scientific one, is unable to make the test, but that they know of no one who can make the test, and in order to protect themselves against liability, they insert a clause in their report to the effect that they cannot make the test, and are not responsible for even what they do say about the matter.

As further evidence that no test is possible with present scientific knowledge, I quote from the United States Testing Co. The quotation is taken from the testimony of C. J. Huber, a director of this likewise efficient scientific institution. This statement is of date May 26, 1938, and reads as follows:

With reference to the 24 samples submitted to us for the determination of the percentage of virgin and reworked wool, we have submitted them to various types of chemical and physical tests.

We have carefully measured the staple length of the fibers, both in the warp and filling yarns used in the fabric, and have compiled these results so as to give the distribution of the percentage of the fiber falling into each category of length.

Chemical tests have been made to determine the percentage of other than wool fibers present in the fabric and the residue has been carefully studied under the microscope to determine the possibilities of incomplete carbonization. Microscopical examinations of the ends of the wool fibers have been carefully made to see if they have been frayed out which might be indicative of reworked wool.

From all of the tests we have made showing the varying length of fibers, the amount and kind of foreign fibers along with the microscopic determination of frayed fiber ends; we are unable to state definitely whether the wool is virgin or reworked. Not being able to definitely distinguish between the fibers, we, of course, can give no figures as to the amount of virgin or reworked wool present in the various samples.

It occurs to me that that is positive evidence that there is no test known, that no test can be applied. Foreign factories can take reused wool, reprocessed wool, make it into a garment, label it "pure wool," "all wool," or "virgin wool," and sell it to America as such, and there is no one in the United States who can take the garment and tell whether or not it has in it virgin wool, or whether or not it has reworked wool or used wool in it.

If there be no test we can apply at home, we cannot, of course, apply the tests to imported cloth. Inasmuch as we cannot inspect the factories in foreign countries, inasmuch as we cannot force them to comply with our rules and regulations, we have no control over the imports of woolen products. So this is a bill to discredit and injure and harm domestic mills, and, conversely, it is a bill to help foreign mills.

Mr. President, I shall be anxious to see the vote on the conference report. The bill inaugurates the regimentation of industry. For 7 years we have heard speech after speech made on this floor complaining against the policy of this administration in the regimentation of agriculture. But if agriculture has been regimented, it has been regimented to the end that the farmers themselves might be tided through. In this case we are asked to regiment industry, woolen mills, not for their benefit, but for the benefit of only one group, that is, the sheep raisers of America.

If the sheep raisers needed help, I would be the last one to stand on this floor and deny help. But they do not need help now. The parity price on wool today is, of course, 100, and the sheep growers are receiving a price of 120 percent of parity, which means they are receiving the 100 percent of parity, and 20 percent additional. So the sheep growers cannot complain.

Mr. President, on the 15th of August the parity price on wool was 118 percent. Since that time wool has gone up perceptibly. It went up 3 cents a pound, 5 cents a yard, on Monday, so I am safe in saying that the parity price on wool is above 120 percent, which means that the wool growers are today receiving not only parity—and that is what all agricultural interests are striving for—but are receiving more than 20 percent above parity. So they do not need an increased price today. The price of wool is higher than it has been for years.

We are now arranging for an army of a million men, and we will probably have 1,400,000 shortly. Next year we may want 1,000,000 more. It takes about 3 uniforms a year to serve each soldier; it takes an overcoat, and it takes other wool items to serve the Army. So that not only will the present demand for wool continue, but it will be intensified as the years go by, at least so long as the emergency lasts, and, as I see the picture, we will not be rid of the emergency for a long time to come.

Mr. President, we will never go back to an army of 117,000 men, as we had 2 or 3 years ago, so long as the other nations of the world maintain armies like that of Germany, with an army of from four to seven million men, trained and in camp, equipped and uniformed. England, the little isle of England, has today in camps over 1,000,000 men, perhaps a million and a half—no one knows. Italy has five or six million men in army camps, equipped, and fighting. So long as Great Britain and Germany, Italy and Spain, Japan and Russia—the latter now having perhaps 10,000,000 men in army camps—have these vast armies, we cannot afford even to think about an army of less than a million men. We may need to have an army of 2,000,000 men, or 3,000,000 men, or 5,000,000 men. If that should happen, I wonder what the price of wool would be very shortly. Today we must receive or obtain our wool from North America. There is no wool in great quantities grown in the southern portion of the Western Hemisphere. We are, however, limited in our woolen supplies to the Western Hemisphere. The finest wool comes from New Zealand and Australia. We cannot get their wool now. Great Britain is getting all the wool she can from Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. We can get no wool whatever from any place except the Western Hemisphere.

If the bill should become law, the Army would be forced to make practically all its uniforms, overcoats, shirts, and woolen supplies from virgin wool, because if the Army should not make its uniforms out of first-class wool—and under the terms of the bill it must be unused wool to be first class—then we would have a scandal, and it would be said that the United States was clothing its soldiers and its sailors in shoddy, for under the terms of the bill any wool which has been used is shoddy.

Mr. President, a moment ago I tried to show that no one knows of any test which can detect the presence of reused wool or reprocessed wool. I have read from several authorities. Now, I will give one I think no one will question, and that is the United State Bureau of Standards. It is now called the National Bureau of Standards. It is maintained by the Government. If it does not have the best scientists in the world, then the head of that institution is remiss in his duty, because he should have in his employ in the Bureau of Standards the best scientists in the world. Not only should he have the best scientists, but he should have the best machines in the world; he should have the latest and the most improved machines in the world for testing purposes. This is what a member of that Bureau says about the matter of testing. I quote first from Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, who is a director of the National Bureau of Standards. On May 7, 1938, Dr. Briggs wrote:

In reply to your letter of May 4, methods for the analysis of wool fabrics for the percentage content of "virgin wool" and of "reclaimed wool," as defined, are not available here, and so far as we are aware accepted methods have not been developed elsewhere. Therefore, we are unable to refer you to another laboratory for this test.

Not only did Dr. Briggs say they could not make tests and he knew of no place where tests could be made but at a later date Mr. Emley, Chief of the Division of Organic and Fibrous Materials of the Bureau of Standards, made this statement:

When the Bureau of Standards is called upon to forward a report as to whether or not we can determine the content of reclaimed wool, we just cannot give any report, because we cannot tell.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me the date of that second letter? The Senator said it was of a later date.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is found in the speech of a Member of the Congress when the bill was considered by the House a few days ago. I can place it in the RECORD and will certainly do so later, but I do not have it at my fingertips at the moment. It is taken from a speech made by a Member of the House when the bill was under consideration in the House.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not at all dispute the fact that the statement was made by the chemist, or whatever he was, in the Bureau of Standards, or that the Representative was not correctly quoting him. I was interested in the date of the letter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a few days ago I occupied some time in the Senate in opposing the bill. I began at that time to give my reason, but before I had completed a statement of my reasons an agreement was reached whereby the bill was sent to conference. My hope was that the bill in conference would be perfected in such a way that it would be acceptable, or would be at least more acceptable. The bill went to conference, but the conferees saw fit to accept the House bill in toto. They even accepted the imperfections and misspelling in the House bill, and they are in the report today. But because I made that speech, Mr. President, and because some people read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I was honored by a letter from a gentleman who lives in Utica, N. Y.; at least, he represents himself to live in Utica, N. Y. His address is 908 Champlain Avenue in that city. He writes on very cheap paper, which, of course, is no reflection upon the writer, and his name, which I will give for the RECORD, is Leo M. Hourigan, or at least, that is the way it appears to me to be spelled. He had read what I had to say about the impossibility of testing woolen cloth for reused wool or reworked wool, and this is what he wrote to me.

Hon. Senator THOMAS.

DEAR SENATOR: Your articles in the RECORD on wool, page 11984, of September 12, 1940, who can tell? The manufacturers can tell. The superintendent can tell. The boss picker and the boss carder can tell, but after that no one can tell.

Mr. President, this writer works in a woolen mill. I never saw him, never heard from him before, but I know that he knows what he states, that only persons working in a mill can tell the content of cloth, and he catalogs those workers, first as the superintendent who places the order to his mill for a certain kind of cloth, and he tells the mill employees of what kind of wool to make the cloth. Of course the superintendent knows. Then the boss picker, who is the employee who picks the wool under the orders of the superintendent, of course, knows what kind of wool goes into the cloth. Then the boss carder, who superintends the removing of the short fibers from the mass of fluffy wool, of course, knows what goes into the cloth. Then the writer states that, aside from those mentioned, no one else knows of what the cloth is made.

I continue to read:

The boss picker is given an order to mix a batch, and he knows if it is to be 50 percent wool and 50 percent shoddy or reprocessed or reworked wool. Then it goes to the carding room, and the boss carder knows what percent he is running. My father-in-law is a retired carder, and I work in a factory at present. He just showed me an overcoat which is 90 percent English noils, reworked combings of wool, and 10 percent wool. He knows because he mixed the batch, but you or I would not know, or any person who is going to buy a coat. When a batch has been worked into a finished product they do know what percent is in the goods. Enclosed is sample of coat 90 percent English noils, reworked combings of wool, and 10 percent virgin wool, but after it leaves the plant it would go for first-class virgin wool.

He submits with his letter a sample of the cloth which he says is English noils, which means the short strands combed from top wool. So far as I can tell, this piece of cloth is first class in every particular, but under the terms of the bill it would be strictly secondary.

Mr. President, I stated on a former occasion that it is impossible to draft legislation on this subject which would be satisfactory unless much time were taken and much space used in preparing the plans and specifications covering the proposed legislation. The bill is not long. It embraces only a comparatively few pages. It is my contention the bill is imperfectly drawn for the very obvious reason that it is impossible to draft a bill without much time being given to it, as I said, and then after the bill is drafted that a system of inspection is provided exactly as the War Department provides a system of inspection for the cloth it must have in the making of uniforms.

At this point I wish to read into the RECORD some further testimony to support the position I take. When the bill was before the House, a number of Members of that body made speeches for and against the bill. I now desire to place in the RECORD a portion of a speech made by Representative RICH. I read from Mr. RICH's statement:

Mr. Chairman, in speaking of the value of reworked wool in comparison with virgin wool, let me call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that there are seven or eight hundred different kinds of wool in the country—not in the United States, but in all the world. We have the China ball wool; we have the Iceland coarse wool; we have innumerable grades of wool right within our own country. Then there are the South American wools, Mexican, and the Australian wools. In trying to get a bill that will be for the ultimate good of the consumer, this bill is evidently going to be misleading on the terms "wool" and "reworked wool," or "reprocessed wool," "reused wool," and "wool products."

The bill uses the terms "wool," "reworked wool," "reprocessed wool," "reused wool," and "wool products." Mr. RICH states that if the bill becomes a law the public will become confused and will not know what these terms mean. The public will not know, when it sees a label stating that a garment is a reworked-wool garment, whether or not it is a virgin-wool garment; and if it is marked "reprocessed wool" the public will not know whether or not it is a virgin-wool garment.

Mr. RICH further says:

Who are those who are interested more in the virgin-wool proposal? It is the people who are interested in sheep raising in this country. What do we do for the sheep raisers? We give them a 34-percent duty on all wools that come into this country.

So said Representative RICH, in a speech made in the House of Representatives when the bill was before that body only recently.

I next call attention to a further statement made by Representative RICH in the same address:

As a manufacturer—

Mr. RICH is a wool manufacturer, or has been a wool manufacturer, so he is testifying before the House of Representatives.

As a manufacturer I can take virgin wools and I can make a fabric. Then I can take reworked wools under the classification of this act, and call it "reworked merchandise." * * * I can make twice as good a piece of goods out of good reworked wool as I can out of the poor grade of virgin wool.

That is exactly what I have been trying to say. A manufacturer or woolen mill may rework or reprocess wool and make a perfect garment, which compares 100 percent with the finest grade of unused wool; yet under the terms of the bill that class of goods is discredited. I am astonished that the proponents of the bill are willing to admit in legislative form that wool which is raised in their States, after it has been carded and woven, is of no further account. It is not worth reprocessing. It is not worth reweaving. It is not worth remaking into garments; and under the terms of the bill the finest wool in the world, which has never been used anywhere, but which is reprocessed and replaced in a garment, becomes worthless. Under the terms of the bill it is shoddy.

The only purpose of the bill is to increase the demand for unused wool and decrease the demand for used wool. The purpose is perfectly clear. Anyone who studies the bill for a moment can come to no other conclusion. It is a bill for the purpose of increasing the demand for unused wool, and depreciating, discrediting, and condemning all wool which has ever been once woven or spun, even though it has never been worn. I am astonished that a Senator from a great wool State like Wyoming should introduce a bill stating that the chief product of his State—wool—which has once been woven into cloth, although never worn, is of no further benefit, but should be discarded; that all garments should be made from unused wool; and that no garment should be made from used wool or processed wool, although that wool might be the best wool in the world.

Mr. President, the wool taken from the backs of the best fleeces is called tops. It sells for about 90 cents a pound. One might select from the tops the choice part of the best wool, which would be the best part of the tops, and work that choice wool into yarn and spin the yarn into cloth. If the workmanship were satisfactory, that would produce the finest cloth possible to be made out of wool. That cloth might never be worn. It might be torn apart. Then it would be known as reused or reprocessed wool. As the chart on my right shows, the average run of tops wool sells for 90 cents—or it sold at that price when the chart was made—but the choice part of the tops, after it has been made into fine cloth and then torn apart and made ready for reprocessing, respinning, and reweaving, sells for $1 a pound.

The trade feels that such reprocessed wool may be better, because it pays more for it than for the ordinary run of tops; and yet the bill discredits even that class of wool and that class of cloth.

I am trying to show that the bill is for the benefit of one group of our people. I do not begrudge them a high price for wool. I am delighted that they have a high price for wool. Now that they have a high price for wool, the price of wool is going still higher. The price of wool will be high this year. It will be high next year. It will be high during the years to come if the demand for wool continues as we have it today. So, Mr. President, I cannot understand why the Senate would be justified in solemnly enacting legislation still further to increase the price of wool when wool is now selling for more than 120 percent of parity.

I read further from a speech made by Representative RICH. He is now speaking about what may happen under the terms of the bill. He says:

An unscrupulous manufacturer can put reworked wool into a fabric, and no one on God's earth can tell from the cloth whether it is virgin wool or reworked wool or shoddy. So a dishonest manufacturer can ruin honest manufacturers unless the Government maintains plant inspectors, because you cannot detect after manufacturing has taken place.

That is exactly what I have been trying to say for some time. If the bill is to be enforced in New York State, for example—and I see the distinguished senior Senator from New York in the Chamber—New York State has more than 100 woolen mills, and it would be necessary to place at least 2 inspectors in each of those mills, or perhaps more, depending upon their size, to see to it that the law is complied with.

I next read from a speech in the House of Representatives by Representatives HOLMES. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I come from a section that manufactures woolens and worsteds. In this section we have many high-grade manufacturing industries. They have made this product for years and years. They are alarmed over this legislation. They realize that this is another avenue by which the Federal Government is going to interfere with the conduct of their business.

I quote from a speech made by Representative HINSHAW, of California. This is what he said:

There are several hundred grades of wool. The following grades of wool are rated according to this bill as new wool. They are seedy wool, burry wool, dead wool, vat wool, shank wool, tags, etc. These classifications are graded as new wool under this bill. They vary in price from about 3 cents to 15 cents a pound. You can imagine the value of a piece of wool that comes from the rear end of a dead sheep that has been picked up on the range some place, or from the breech of a dead sheep that has been killed in a slaughterhouse and the wool pulled from the hide. The value of the wool from the fabric standpoint is low, and yet under this bill it is classified as new wool and, consequently, a premium is placed upon the fabric made from it.

I said a while ago, Mr. President, that the pending bill provides that every product containing any percentage of wool whatever must be labeled. I referred to the manufacturers of felt. Felt is a kind of cloth, the kind of cloth that we see on the top of the Presiding Officer's desk and on the top of the Secretary's desk. Felt is also used for washers in the assembling of many kinds of machines. If this bill becomes a law, a felt washer, no matter how small it may be, must have attached to it a tag. Every little washer, the size of a dime with a hole in the center, must have a tag attached to it, and the tag must state what percentage of wool or reused wool or reprocessed wool is in the washer. The tag must not only state the percentage of each kind of wool in a little washer made of felt but it must give the name of the manufacturing concern. So the felt manufacturers are very much opposed to this bill.

I read from a telegram received recently from the Booth Felt Co., Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y. It is addressed to me. They evidently noticed that I had made a speech in the Senate against this bill, and, being against the bill themselves, they sent me this message:

Strongly oppose S. 162. Utterly impossible to label millions of small wool felt washers, which is our principal product. This could only be done to goods sold by the yard or retail items.

E. W. BOOTH,
President, Booth Felt Co., Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y.

There is no exception made in the case of goods of this character. So, if this concern makes a million washers the size of a dime, with a little hole about the size of a lead pencil in the center, the washers to be used in connection with the fabrication or assembling of machinery such as typewriters or other machines of that character, each little felt washer must contain a label. Mr. President, do you blame the Booth Manufacturing Co. for opposing the terms of this bill and its enactment?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has read paragraph (d) on page 7, which provides that—

This section shall not be construed as requiring designation * * * of fiber content of products which have an insignificant or inconsequential textile content.

And further it is provided:

The Commission, after giving due notice and opportunity to be heard to interested persons, may determine and publicly announce the classes of such articles concerning which express or implied representations of fiber content are customarily made, and those products which have an insignificant or inconsequential textile content.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator always fails to read the definition of wool product. I will now read it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I was wondering if the Senator would answer my question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The definition is:

The term "wool product" means any product or any portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Then, Mr. President, following that there is an exception stated that there shall not be required designation if the amount of fiber is of "an insignificant or inconsequential textile content."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Felt is made of 100-percent wool; it may not be virgin wool; it may be reprocessed wool or it may be reused wool, but it is a wool product, and there is no exemption from labeling in the case of products that contain 100-percent wool.

I now read from a letter addressed to me by the Standard Felt Corporation, under date of September 24, after I had made my speech in the Senate in opposition to the pending bill. The Standard Felt Corporation has a place of business at Alhambra, Calif., and the particular point I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is as follows:

Complying with this law—

The reference is to Senate bill 162—will place a heavy burden on industry. It will fail to protect the market for our wool growers and fail to protect the public as to the quality of merchandise they buy.

The second objection is:

The labeling as required under the bill will, in all probability, start an anticotton feeling among the public.

Mr. President, when the public notes in the stores that all woolen articles and all articles that contain wool are labeled wool, it is suggested that that requirement may tend, unconsciously or otherwise, to bring about a feeling in the mind of the public that anything that does not contain wool or is not a wool product is an inferior product. To that extent, if that should happen, the bill would react adversely to cotton, psychologically, if not otherwise, and to the extent it would so react, it would be an anticotton bill.

As I have said many times on the floor, that is the particular reason I am opposing this bill. My State produces a million bales of cotton. The price of cotton is low; the parity price of cotton now is very low, indeed; so that if this bill should become a law, and if it should increase the demand for wool and thereby decrease the demand for cotton, it would injure cotton, and the price of cotton would go still lower than it is at the present time.

The third reason given by this felt corporation is as follows:

The cost of woolen or semiwoolen goods will, in all probability, be increased due to a demand for more wool in the goods, and thereby increase the cost of Government purchases on such articles, and this will increase the taxpayers' burden.

The fourth reason is as follows:

The bill as passed, we presume, will apply to all processors of wool, wool and cotton, and other lines using wool or wool by-products, and we, as felt manufacturers, do not see the need of this bill, as practically all departments of the Government have their own definite specifications. The felt manufacturers have their own specifications, and also most of the felt manufacturers' customers have their specifications.

This corporation gives those reasons for being against this bill.

Mr. President, I have a further communication from this company giving additional reasons for opposition to this bill, but I think the reasons already given are ample. A number of votes will be confronted with the record now being made, and some of those who do not pay attention to this class of legislation which affects all their constituents may be confronted some time with the record, and if they do not know what the record is, they will have not much of an alibi for not being thus advised.

Mr. President, I now place in the RECORD the reasons the National Association of Wool Manufacturers have against the passage of this bill. The letter is of date September 10, this year, and reads as follows:

1. This bill will affect adversely the wool textile industry and the entire apparel trade, as well as related business throughout the country, in that it will impose a fruitless burden of detailed recording and additional expense for labels that will benefit no one as guides to quality. This will render more difficult the merchandising of all products containing wool. Cotton interests likewise feel that the bill will have a damaging effect upon their industry.

2. The bill will perpetrate a fraud on the consuming public which thereby will be induced to pay higher prices for products alleged to be of virgin wool, even though such products may be made of the lowest grade or most unsuitable types of wool, or, in some cases, of wool which has been materially damaged. The fiber content is not the principal element of value in a fabric. To suggest that it is is to mislead the public badly.

The third reason given as to why this bill should not be passed is as follows, and I repeat, this communication is from the president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers:

The measure cannot be properly enforced, since no method exists whereby the particular type of wool used in a fabric can be identified after it is once fabricated.

The fourth reason is as follows:

There could be no check whatever on imported fabrics, as no factory inspection to determine what materials are used can be established by United States agents in foreign countries. This circumstance would seriously discriminate against American manufacturers to the benefit of foreign interests.

The fifth reason for being against the bill is as follows:

The bill has been high-pressured through Congress, not by anyone who honestly seeks to protect the consumer, but by wool growers, whose sole object is to enhance the price of domestic wool, which is already protected by a tariff of 34 cents a pound. The bill has also been supported by a manufacturing concern which serves the luxury market and which has tied its publicity program to this bill.

The sixth reason assigned by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers against the bill is as follows:

Should this bill become law, not only would civilians be required to pay higher prices for what might be lesser values, but the cost of the Government's present defense program, insofar as wool materials are concerned, would be increased. This extra burden on the taxpayers cannot be justified by the benefits which might accrue to the wool growers and to a few high-style, nationally advertised manufacturers. It is important to note that of 26 foreign products only 5 are selling above parity. Two of these five are "wool" and "lamb." Wool is the highest on the list, being given as 118 percent, against 54 percent for wheat and 59 percent for cotton.

So, Mr. President, the United States Congress has devoted much time, and the United States Senate is now devoting time, to the consideration of a bill which seeks to increase or will have the effect of increasing the price of wool above 118 percent of parity. This letter was written sometime ago. Since the letter was written, the price of wool has increased several cents a pound. If the parity price was 118 percent when this letter was written, the parity price now is above 120 percent; and here we are in the United States Senate seeking to pass a bill to tax the people millions of dollars in the first instance to pay more for Army uniforms, and in the second instance to pay more for woolen products, when wool itself now is worth the highest price it has been in years. Instead of trying to legislate to raise the price of wool still higher, it may not be amiss to try to do something for the wheat growers, whose price today is only 54 percent of parity. We might be spending some of our time in trying to do something for the cotton planters. The price of cotton today is only 59 percent of parity. I am wondering how Members of this body can justify their action in voting still further to increase the price of wool when the price now is 118 percent of parity and above, and at the same time do nothing to increase the price of wheat, if they live in a wheat State—and I live in a wheat State—or to increase the price of cotton if they live in a cotton State—and I live in a cotton State—when the parity price for wheat is only 54 percent, and the parity price for cotton is only 59 percent.

The seventh reason given by this association against the bill is as follows:

> The bill is misnamed in order to mislead. An honestly conceived bill should draw a distinction between the different fibers—wool, silk, cotton, rayon, and so forth—in order to protect the public, but not do what this bill does, namely, attempt to differentiate between different kinds of wools for the benefit of the wool growers alone.

Mr. President, I submit those as the reasons assigned by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. Yesterday I placed in the RECORD the names of some 500 of these manufacturers. Through their organization they are against the bill. They are not only organizedly against the bill but they are individually against the bill. I have just read the reasons why they are against the bill.

I now desire to read a telegram received on September 6 from Mr. Frank P. Zurn, executive director, Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the United States of America. This is what Mr. Zurn says:

> The Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the United States of America, representing 90 percent of the men's and boys' clothing industry, vehemently protests against the enactment of bill H. R. 944.

Mr. President, that is the same bill, in substance, as this bill. They are different in detail, but they are on the same subject—that is, seeking to protect the consumer against the use of shoddy, reused wool, and reprocessed wool.

Continuing:

> The enactment of this bill will not give the consumer the real protection intended, namely, satisfactory service in wearing apparel. On the contrary, it will put a false premium on a particular type of fabric, disregarding entirely the other important essentials, namely, weaving and finishing of the material and tailoring that go into the making of satisfactory clothing. It will create an artificial demand for virgin wool which is bound to react in higher prices to consumers for clothing. Increased prices of clothing will result in decreased sales, which will reflect itself in less employment for the 138,000 workers in our industry. Increased prices for wool and woolen cloth will react to the distinct detriment of our Government in carrying out its present defense program. We will gratefully appreciate your presentation of our industry's viewpoint to Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, this message to the Senate gives an additional argument against the bill. If Mr. Zurn is correct—and he is the executive director of the Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the United States of America—when he says that the bill will adversely affect the jobs of 138,000 workers in that industry, that is an additional reason why the bill should not be passed.

A moment ago the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was in the Chamber, but he did not stay. In his State he has over 100 woolen mills and many clothing factories and manufacturing concerns. These mills and factories in the State of New York employ thousands upon thousands of employees. If this bill adversely affects the interests of thousands upon thousands of employees in the State of New York, it would occur to me that not only the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] but likewise the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] would have some interest in this legislation. I am not criticizing anyone. No doubt other matters are of much more concern to some persons than is the study of a bill which adversely affects every taxpayer and every consumer and favorably affects only the wool growers of the United States.

I read a telegram just received from George E. Brigham, manager, Felters Co. Mill, Johnson City, N. Y. The message is as follows:

> Respectfully call your attention to conference between House and Senate having to do with H. R. 944 and S. 162. Both of these bills pernicious and unnecessary. Will cause increased cost of clothing to poor and middle class, who will derive no benefit therefrom. It is to the interest of your constituents to defeat this unnecessary legislation.

Mr. President, that gives another argument against the bill. If Mr. Brigham is correct, and the bill becomes a law, it will cause an increased cost to the poor and the middle class for the clothing they must buy. I submit that telegram for the RECORD.

I next read a telegram addressed to myself, signed by the Felt Association, Inc., from New York City. It reads as follows:

> Our association, comprising over 80 percent woven felt production, definitely opposed to proposed Wool Products Labeling Act, S. 160, or H. R. 944. This legislation not in public interest, as would tend to fraud by unscrupulous manufacturers and deception of consumer. We strongly urge your continued opposition to these measures.

I next call attention to a telegram addressed to Congressman PEHR G. HOLMES. The telegram is of date June 13, which is some time ago; but it is upon this subject, because at that time this bill was being considered by the House of Representatives. The message is signed by the National Coat and Suit Industry Recovery Board, from New York City, and is as follows:

> This organization, representing 1,400 employers who employ 50,000 workers throughout the Nation, opposes so-called truth-in-fabric bill, H. R. 944. This bill will mislead the consumer, increase costs, impair business, and impose insuperable hardships on this depressed industry. We respectfully urge that you vote against this prejudicial and onerous legislation.

I might suggest to those responsible for the conduct of administrative affairs that it is a rather poor time to be enacting legislation affecting tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, of workers in the mills and factories of the United States.

I now read from a telegram signed by the American Felt Co., John T. Lawless, president. The message comes from New York City, and reads as follows:

> American Felt Co., with plants in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and Michigan are opposed to the so-called truth-in-fabrics bill in its present form because of being impractical and because proper enforcement is impossible, and we are greatly disturbed that operation under this bill will favor importations greatly.

I have already explained why that might be. If the bill shall be enacted, every wool product must bear a label. If the bill should be enacted, imports, likewise, would have to bear labels. Under this bill manufacturers of goods in this country must maintain records. We can inspect the manufacturing processes in this country. We cannot require foreign factories to maintain records; we cannot inspect the various operations in foreign countries. For that reason the bill would force domestic mills to keep records and comply with the law, even to the extent of our having to place in their factories a horde or flock of inspectors. Not so with foreign mills; we cannot require them to keep records; we cannot inspect their various processes. They can make their cloth, and we have no test by which we can determine whether or not the cloth contains reworked wool. They can send the cloth in, and we cannot tell what it is. They can place a label on their goods to meet the best label we can prepare, and we cannot help ourselves, except by placing an embargo against importations of foreign goods. So this bill, as portrayed in the telegram, is a bill favoring foreign manufacturers, and injuring, if not destroying, domestic manufacturers.

I now read from a letter addressed to me by the Continental Mills, Inc., of Philadelphia. The letter is signed by Millard D. Brown. I read one paragraph:

> There is no necessity for such a law as this, as the Federal Trade Commission has the power to cite before it any manufacturer who in any way misrepresents his merchandise, if they desire to do so.

Mr. President, that is true. Under existing law the Federal Trade Commission has full power to call before it any manufacturing concern which mislabels or misbrands its merchandise. Manufacturers can put out the woolen cloth, and label it, if they must, but there is no test by which it can be determined whether or not the label is an honest and correct one. The Federal Trade Commission knows that it cannot give this service. In order to do so, the Commission would have to be equipped, first, with expensive laboratory and research facilities, employ scientists, and employ machinery of the latest design for the research test, in a laboratory here in Washington, no doubt. But that would not suffice. Then the Federal Trade Commission would have to have hundreds, if not thousands, of inspectors, so that they could place two or more inspectors in every mill, in every plant, which deals in wool in any of its various stages of manufacture.

The Federal Trade Commission is for the bill; and I presume if I were the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, or if I were a member of the Commission, and if I were always wanting more legislation, more power, more money, more buildings, and more facilities, I likewise perhaps would be in favor of the proposed legislation, because, just so surely as the bill shall be enacted, not later than at the next session of Congress, will we have bills before us proposing to appropriate money to erect buildings and establish research laboratories for the testing of woolen cloth. That is on the one side. On the other side, we would have before us at that time, if the bill should be enacted, a request for money with which to pay the salaries and expenses not only of hundreds but perhaps thousands of inspectors to be placed in the various mills in the United States.

I cannot control the votes of Senators, but I can control my own vote, and my own vote will be cast against the bill. I have sought to justify the vote I shall cast. When I shall have concluded—and it is not yet—there will be a record made to go along with the votes cast upon the bill, and no Senator can have as an alibi the statement that he did not have information about the bill, because the RECORD will contain the information. The bill itself is ample to justify anyone who will read it voting against it.

Mr. President, I have already alluded to the fact that the Army is very particular about the cloth it buys. The Quartermaster General is charged with the responsibility of purchasing cloth, and seeing to it that the cloth which is made for the Army is the best cloth the genius of man can design and produce. The Department requires the best wool, the best processes, the best weaving, the best manufacture, so that a uniform for a soldier in the Army or for a sailor in the Navy, when delivered, is made not only from the best material in the world, but likewise is made by the best workmen in the world. If the two Departments could find better cloth they certainly would have it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I understand from the Senator's statement that it is felt that if the bill were to become law it would benefit the manufacturers outside our national boundaries, and be to the detriment of manufacturers within. I think the Senator so stated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct; that is my position.

Mr. WILEY. I am interested in knowing how it would affect the consumer, the purchaser of cloth. I understood the Senator to say this morning that it would mean increased prices to the purchaser of woolen cloth; in other words, the purchaser of suits or suiting material. Am I correct in that conclusion? If so, what element besides the additional cost of inspection would enter into it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the bill shall become the law, and if it shall have the force and effect its proponents think it will have, it will mean an increase in the price of wool. That is the only reason there is for the bill. Its proponents assert they favor it for other reasons. I do not criticize anyone for stating that he is for the bill because he wants to protect the housewife and the poor fellow who wishes to buy a suit made from virgin wool. The man who can buy virgin-wool clothing is not concerned about the bill. He will buy the kind of cloth he wants, regardless of what it is called. He will buy the color he wants, and have it made as he wants it made, and if he does not like it then, he will throw it away; and many of them do that. They care nothing about the bill.

If a suit of clothes costs $50, $75, $125, $175, or $300—what difference does that make to some people? It makes no difference.

This bill if enacted will raise the price of wool. That will mean that the manufacturer of woolen cloth must pay more per pound for his wool in the grease; that is, for the wool as it comes off the sheep's back. The big mills buy wool in the grease, and process it from that stage until the cloth is ready for sale to the consumer, or to the manufacturer. The estimate is that the bill will raise the price of wool 5 cents a pound, at least; and I am coming to that later. So the manufacturer of the woolen product would have to pay 5 cents a pound more for his wool in the grease, and it takes 2 pounds or more of wool in the grease to make 1 pound of scoured wool. When wool is scoured, in order to make it ready for processing, only a relatively small part of the fleece is serviceable for fine cloth. If all the wool were good, if it were all tops, it would take more than 2 pounds of wool in the grease to make 1 pound of scoured wool. So for a pound of scoured wool the price would be increased 10 cents. As the price of wool goes up to the manufacturer, he cannot absorb the increased price, and he adds that to the price of the finished product. If he is making yarn only, spinning yarn, he adds the increase to the price of the yarn. If he weaves the yarn into cloth, he adds the increased price he has to pay for the raw wool to the price of the finished product. So as wool in the grease goes up, wool yarn goes up, scoured wool goes up, cloth goes up, and all the products of wool go up. As the raw product the manufacturers process increases in price, the finished product always increases in price. The rule is, I think, that when the manufacturers have to pay a higher price for the raw product, they have to increase the wages of their workmen, and that costs them more money, and adds to the price of the finished product. If that rule holds good in this case, and if this bill increases the price of the wool in the grease 5 cents, and 10 cents for scoured wool, then a suit of clothes will have to be sufficiently increased in price to pay, first, for the increased cost of the raw wool, and the increased wages of all the men who work on the wool, from its inception stage to the finished stage, including the workmen in the tailor shop.

So, Mr. President, this bill is a bill to raise the price of wool for the benefit of wool growers; but it does not stop there. It will raise the price of wool products to every person who uses such products throughout the length and breadth of the land. The bill indirectly would tax all the people for the benefit of the sheep growers, and there are not many of them, and at a time when they are receiving more than 100 percent of parity price—the highest price at which wool has been selling for many years.

Mr. President, I have had much to say about the War Department. On my own motion I referred the bill to the War Department. I was satisfied that the bill was bad. I was satisfied in my own mind the bill should not pass. I was satisfied that if it should pass, it would increase the cost of wool. I was satisfied it would not be to the interest of the Government, and certainly not to the interest of the War Department, which is a part of the Government, to have the bill passed. I referred the bill to the Quartermaster General. I asked him to study the bill and send me a report, and I now read for the RECORD the conclusions of the Quartermaster General of the United States Army. His letter is dated July 27, 1940. This is what Major General Gregory said, and after Senators hear what he said, I wonder how they can vote for the bill. I quote:

> From the standpoint of national defense, it would seem undesirable especially at this time to take any action to limit the use of either reworked wool or substitutes for wool as such substitution may become necessary.

I submit this statement in justification of my charge that the bill is an anti-national-defense bill. I would not say it was a "fifth columnist" bill, but it has that effect. Anything that prevents the United States getting what it needs, anything that imposes an unnecessary tax upon the people—and that, as I understand, is what the bill does 100 percent——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator whether another letter was not written by General Gregory under date of August 12, 1940——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Wait until I get through. I will ask the Senator the question. I want to get the question in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this letter came to me——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. At that time I received a letter——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator yielded to me, and I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. After this letter came to me some complaints were made——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. This later letter says——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Quartermaster General——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield as the Chair understands.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator did yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yielded for a question and not for a statement.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I was going to ask the Senator whether he received a certain letter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am going to make a statement. I know what the Senator is about to say. I knew it a long time before he began.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Certainly the Senator did, but he does not seem to want to say anything about it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, after this letter came to me alleging that the bill was against the national defense, complaint was made to the Quartermaster General that he was interfering with legislation on Capitol Hill. The General had been asked for his opinion, and he had given it to me, and by so doing had not intended to interfere with legislation. We ask agents of the Government every day for information as to how this bill or that bill would affect various interests. When a bill is introduced in this body it goes to a committee, and the committee frequently sends the bill to the department of the Government having jurisdiction of the subject matter, and asks for a report on the bill.

Mr. President, I had no bill pending. I was not a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and could not send the bill to the Quartermaster General and ask his opinion about it. It had already been introduced. My attention had not been called to it when it was introduced, but when my attention was called to it I took advantage of my right to find out from the highest authority how the bill would affect the national defense, and I got the answer.

General Gregory stated later in reply to someone else who complained that he was interfering with legislation, that he had no intent to interfere with legislation, and he had no intent to be for or against the bill, but, as I understood his answer to me, he was telling the truth when he said the bill was against the national defense, and the Senator from Wyoming can make the most out of his answer.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator will have plenty of time after a while. I have been speaking for 3 or 4 hours, and I desire to conclude. I do not wish to be delayed in my presentation. I am very anxious to reach a vote on this measure.

Mr. President, I wish to take some time to show why this bill is before us. The bill is not for the protection of the housewife; it is not for the protection of the consumer. In the first place, it legalizes deception against the housewife. She does not know anything about the texture of woolen cloth. She goes down to buy a dress for herself, or a suit for little Johnnie, or a hat for her husband, and she would not know anything about reprocessed wool, or reused wool, or virgin wool, or what not. She sees a label, "100-percent virgin wool." That looks all right, but, Mr. President, the 100-percent virgin wool may be made out of tags growing on the hoof of the poorest desert sheep in the Senator's State of Wyoming. Does that protect the housewife? She may want to buy a suit. She looks at a suit. The suit is marked, "100-percent virgin wool," but the bill permits the manufacturer of cloth for little Johnnie's suit to make that cloth out of shank wool selling for 7 cents a pound, and she will not know the difference. So I charge that the bill legalizes deception. There is no truth in this bill. It would be an accident if there was.

Why is the bill before us? I will place in the RECORD a statement as to why it is before us. It may take some time to do it, but I will get through. Agitation for legislation of this kind was begun 38 years ago. That was before I came to Congress, away back yonder in the early days. A bill of this character came before the Senate, and this is what was said in those days about the matter. I shall read from a report of a bill entitled, "Truth in Fabric."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I am receiving a great number of communications from my constituents in which they say that there has been some test made with respect to the content of wool. Does the Senator know of any test that has been made to determine whether or not wool is all virgin wool? One writer says:

> The fact that a garment may be labeled "All virgin wool" is absolutely no sign of the quality of the cloth, and many garments can be made from woolen and worsted waste that would be far more serviceable than garments made from all-wool cloth.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That statement is correct. Let me show the Senator why that is so, by referring to the chart hanging on the wall. On the left side of the chart are set forth the various kinds of wool that may be called virgin wool. We find what is called "top sort.". That is the best wool from the backs of the best sheep. That grade of wool was selling recently for 90 cents a pound.

We then come to stained wool. That is a cheaper grade of wool, but it is virgin wool.

Then we have grey wool. That is wool which is colored. It was selling for 75 cents a pound at the time the chart was made. It is all virgin wool, however.

Then we have paint wool, which is virgin wool, which sold for 70 cents a pound when the chart was made.

Then we have britch wool, which comes from the south end of a sheep going north or the north end of a sheep going south, as may be preferred. Britch wool sold for 60 cents a pound at the time the chart was made. If it is processed and sterilized and made ready for use it is a very good wool.

Seedy wool is wool full of seeds which the sheep gather in their wool in going through the weeds. Such wool sold for 50 cents a pound.

Dead wool is wool taken from dead sheep. If sheep die out on the prairie and the owner finds the dead sheep, if he gets there in time he can take the wool from the dead sheep, or if he stays away long enough, the wool will be there anyway, and it can be picked up, as is done. That is dead wool. That is not a bad grade of wool, but it is worth only about one-half as much as the best wool.

Then come shearings. In the spring the ranchers shear their sheep. Later on the sheep may die, or it may be desired to sell some of them for mutton, or it may be desired to kill the sheep on the ranch. Before a sheep has had time to have its wool grow out again the short wool which is left on the sheep after it was sheared is taken from the sheep.

Then, there is wool which is full of cockleburs and other kind of burs, which is called burry wool, which sold for 35 cents a pound.

Then, we have vat wool. The wool is put in the vat and dyed, and after it has gone through the dyeing process the vat is raked out, cleaned out, and the wool that was left and raked out is called vat wool. That grade sells for 30 cents a pound or less. Next we have tanner's wool. The tanners find odds and ends of wool left over. That is called tanner's wool, and it sells for 15 cents a pound.

Mr. DAVIS. Is tanner's wool virgin wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is all virgin wool. All the various grades to which I am referring are virgin wool. The bill makes no distinction between the different classes of virgin wool. That is my complaint. It offers no protection to the housewife, or to the poor fellow who cannot understand the various classes of wool. The Senator cannot write a bill—or has not written one—which would be of any benefit whatever to the farmers of the Nation.

Next we have shank wool, which is taken from the lower limbs of the sheep, and which sells for 7 cents a pound. Tags, taken from around the ankles of the sheep, above his hoofs, sell for as little as 5 cents a pound. Those classes are all wool, and under the terms of the bill they are all classed as virgin wool. So when a man goes to buy a suit or an overcoat he has no idea whether the wool in his suit or overcoat is tags, shank, or any other grade. It is labeled "virgin wool."

Mr. DAVIS. The Lewisburg mill points out to me that there is no way to make a test.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have tried to show that no scientific test can be applied to wool to show whether or not it has been used or whether it is virgin wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not this statement, coming from a responsible manufacturer, is correct? He writes me, as follows:

> We have seen some of the tests proposed for determining the contents, and we do not believe it is humanly possible to determine by any tests whether the wool fiber is virgin or a processed stock. As an example, we have in mind a piece of cloth made from a fine all-wool worsted waste, as these fibers retain the same nature as the virgin wool, even though they are previously processed; and under such conditions we would like to know who was to determine how the law should be interpreted in such cases.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The War Department has had much experience in dealing with woolen cloths; and I am told by the representative of the Quartermaster's department who furnished me the samples that the department knows of no test by which it can be determined whether or not a woolen fabric is a virgin fabric, a reprocessed fabric, or a reused fabric.

Mr. DAVIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am about to place in the RECORD the reasons why this bill is now occupying the attention of the United States Senate, even at the expense of national defense; even at the expense of the taxpayers of America to the extent of millions of dollars each year; even at the expense of the consumers of America, those who buy woolen products, because they must hereafter pay more for them.

Many years ago, when the French-Capper bill was before the Senate, it was introduced for the following reasons, as was stated in the hearings:

> To help the wool-growing industry by creating an additional demand for wool, thereby increasing its price for their benefit.

Whose benefit, Mr. President? The wool growers' benefit. That is the reason they were sponsoring the bill. It was to help the wool growers. During the hearings on the French-Capper bill, which was before the Congress some years ago, there appeared a Mr. Frank W. Mish, a farmer from Hagerstown, Md. He based his request for the enactment of the bill on the condition of the farmers, saying that:

> The wool growers are in bad financial condition.

No doubt they were. No doubt Mr. Mish told the truth. I do not blame him for coming to Congress and favoring a wool bill at that time to try to improve the financial condition of the wool growers. But that condition is not true today, Mr. President. There is not a wool grower in America today who needs this bill to improve his financial condition, because he is now receiving higher prices for wool than he has received for a long time.

In the hearings to which I refer, many years ago, Mr. Dwight Lincoln, secretary of some sheep breeders' association, testified that:

> The conditions in the sheep industry in the West are very bad.

No doubt they were. Conditions being very bad in the sheep industry in the West, he wanted the Congress to pass a bill which would increase the demand for wool, and thereby increase the price of wool.

In the same hearings Dr. W. J. Spillman, associate editor of the Farm Journal of Philadelphia, appeared before the committee. He admitted, so the statement says, that the reason why he was taking the trouble to come to Washington was because—

> I want to see the price of wool increased to the farmer.

I read from the hearings on the bill some years ago:

> In an editorial printed on page 17 of the September 1921 number of the Sheep and Goat Raisers' magazine, published in San Angelo, Tex., the real purpose is so bluntly stated that it cannot be misunderstood or denied. It is there said:
> "The elimination of 'shoddy' in the manufacture of clothing and the use of virgin wool in its place will strengthen the market and increase the sale of wool to an enormous extent, thus opening up large avenues for the sale of virgin wool, thereby causing an ever-increasing demand for this commodity, and basing our estimate on the rule pertaining to supply and demand, causing prices of wool to advance in an ever-increasing active market."
> The same purpose appears in another editorial entitled "Truth in Fabrics," on page 36 of the August 1922 number of the same journal.

This hearing was held some 22 years ago. At that time the proponents of the bill were for the bill in the hope, at least, that it would raise the price of wool. I continue to read:

> It puts the case just as boldly as the former, and should sweep away all doubts, if any still exist, of the real and moving purpose of this effort. The extract from the editorial is as follows:
> "In our judgment there is not today a matter of more importance for the sheep and goat raiser than the question of truth in fabrics. We have the word of our able and distinguished Congressman, C. B. Hudspeth—

By way of interjection, let me say that I served with Mr. Hudspeth in the House of Representatives. No finer man ever served in that body than Representative Hudspeth, of Texas.

> "We have the word of our able and distinguished Congressman, C. B. Hudspeth, for it that the possibility of the passage of the French-Capper truth-in-fabric bill is getting brighter every day, and that its adoption into a law will certainly advance the price of wool and mohair at least 5 cents per pound."

So much for the testimony introduced in behalf of this legislation 18 years ago.

Mr. President, my contention is that this is a sheep grower's bill, without reference to anybody else. It is immaterial how much it costs the Government additionally. It is immaterial how much it costs the consumer additionally. It is immaterial whether or not, when the public thinks it is buying the best wool, it gets tags, shanks, and britch wool. The wool growers want a higher price for wool.

I now give some recent evidence. When the bill was before the House a few days ago, the gentleman from Ohio, Representative LEWIS, made a speech. I wish to show what Mr. LEWIS said. I quote from the speech he made:

> The sheep farmers of my district and of the United States have for years been raising and selling their wool on a greatly depressed market, largely due to the fact that modern weaving practices in the weaving of cloth have not been honest. Vast quantities of nonwool material have been woven into our garments so skillfully that the human eye is unable to detect the adulterating materials in the fabric, and as a result garments are sold to the buying public as pure wool, virgin wool, or all-wool, whereas in truth and in fact they are not.

Continuing, Mr. LEWIS said:

> Mr. Chairman, I represent a district in one of the finest wool-producing sections of the Nation—eastern Ohio. My district consists of five counties, and I wish to give you the information on sheep and wool production in those counties, in the entire State of Ohio, and in the United States, for the last available period, as reported by the Department of Agriculture.

He then proceeded to place in the RECORD a chart showing, first, the number of sheep produced in each county in his district; second, the number of pounds of wool produced in each county in his district; and, third, the value of the wool clip in each county in his district.

In Belmont County he says there as 30,000 sheep plus, producing 264,000 pounds plus of wool, and that the value of that wool is $66,000 plus. He gives some figures for Carroll County, Columbiana County, Harrison County, and Jefferson County. Then he gives the number of sheep in the State of Ohio as 2,584,000, the number of pounds of wool clipped in 1934 as 18,200,000, and the value of the wool from the Ohio clip in that year as $4,335,000.

Mr. LEWIS gives the number of sheep in the United States in that year according to the latest record available. He gives the number of sheep as of that time at 54,472,000, the number of pounds of wool taken from those sheep in 1934 as 388,692,000, and the value of the clip of that year as $84,324,000.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield on the condition that I do not thereby lose the floor.

Mr. WILEY. I simply desire to ask that an article be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Oklahoma yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin for that purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not object, but it strikes me that articles which it is desired to print in the RECORD might be put in at the end of the session instead of injecting them within a speech that is in the process of delivery. I know that the habit has grown up here, but I think really that there is never an article presented for publication in the RECORD that is so urgent that it cannot wait until the Senator having the floor has finished his speech. However, I shall not object.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I realize how sincerely the Senator from Oklahoma is endeavoring to enlighten the Senate and to conclude his remarks, and, however much I regret to do so, I must object to any interference with his address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the Senator from Oklahoma yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to thank the Senator from Wyoming for his solicitude for my welfare at this particular time.

I now conclude by reading further from the speech made by Representative LEWIS of Ohio. He had just stated that this bill is favored by the sheep growers, and he prided himself on representing one of the finest sheep-growing districts in the United States. Here is the important part of his speech:

> Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill because I believe it is justly due to the wool-producing farmers of America that we protect their markets and make it impossible for any other fiber or fabric to masquerade under the good name of wool that is not in fact wool. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, and I sincerely hope and believe it will result in a greatly increased consumption of virgin wool and consequently in a better price per pound to the wool farmers of the Nation.

I submit that statement in justification and in corroboration of my charge that this bill is promoted by the wool growers of the United States not for the benefit of the Nation, not for the benefit of the consumers, but solely and alone for the benefit of the wool growers.

I now desire to read from another speech made in the House of Representatives when this bill was before that body for consideration. I refer to a speech delivered by Mr. SECREST, a Representative from a district in Ohio. I read from his address as follows:

> This will save the consumer much money in helping him to tell a good product from a bad one merely by looking at the label.

Mr. President, I feel sorry for the predicament in which Representative SECREST will be if he shall depend upon the label in future years for the quality of the merchandise he will be required to buy. No doubt he was honest in the statement made, but how wrong he was.

Reading further:

> It will also be extremely helpful to the producer of wool by increasing his market and raising the price of virgin wool.

There is the crux of the matter. Another gentleman from the wool-growing section of Ohio is for this bill because he thinks it will raise the price of wool. I do not criticize him. If he can have this bill passed by the Congress of the United States, which is here to protect all the people and not to help a few when they do not need help, for at the present time wool is selling for 120 percent of parity or better—if he can have the bill passed by the Senate and House of Representatives, that is all right, but, Mr. President, he will not be able to do that until I have had my say. I can do more than that. Mr. SECREST continues:

> Last year Ohio had within its borders 2,584,000 sheep. These produced 18,200,000 pounds of wool. If this bill increases the price of wool 5 cents per pound, it will mean nearly $1,000,000 to Ohio farmers.

Mr. President, that could not be more plain. Representative SECREST was not trying to deceive the House. He was for this bill, not because it would enable the honest housewife who goes to a store to buy a suit for Johnnie to know what she was buying, or if she was buying a dress for herself help her to know what she was getting, but the Representative from Ohio was for this bill because, if it would raise the price of wool only 5 cents a pound, it would mean another million dollars for the Ohio sheep raisers.

Later on Representative SECREST spoke, as follows:

> If this bill eventually results in an increase in the price of wool 5 cents per pound, the farmers of my district will receive an added income of approximately $120,000 each year.

He could not have been more frank. The Representative from Ohio tells the Congress and tells the world that if this bill shall be passed it will raise the income of the sheep growers of his district in Ohio $120,000 a year. Who will pay the $120,000, Mr. President, which the sheep growers in that congressional district will receive? Someone must pay it.

That amount will be paid not by the residents of the Representative's district; it will be paid by the consumers of wool products wherever they may reside. If the Representative from Ohio can have this proposed legislation enacted, he and his district are welcome to the money, but they will not have the bill passed by the Congress by my vote.

Mr. President, if the sheep growers of that congressional district were starving, I would gladly vote for an appropriation to tide them through; but when the sheep growers of that congressional district are receiving 20 percent above parity—and parity is 100 percent—then, when they ask me, even though I come from a sheep-growing State, to vote from the taxpayers' pockets money to pay them $120,000 a year in the future for all time, I cannot agree to it.

Mr. President, let me place some other facts in the RECORD. I am not filibustering on this bill. I regret that I have to take the time of the Senate. I am not reiterating more than I have to, but I am trying to place in the RECORD the reasons which actuate those who will vote against the bill, or, at least, some of the reasons; and to me the reasons are sound.

Mr. President, since the military expansion program has been inaugurated, the Government has placed orders for goods making necessary the securing of a hundred million pounds of wool in the grease to provide uniforms for the Army, for the Navy, for the Air Corps, and for the C. C. C. It has been found necessary that the Government, acting through the War Department, place orders, indirectly though it may be, for a hundred million pounds of wool. When a hundred million pounds of wool are processed and the dirt and grease removed, there remain only 50,000,000 pounds. It takes approximately 20 yards of cloth to make the necessary uniforms for a soldier for a year. A soldier requires three suits a year, and he has to have an overcoat and two or three blouses, and wool is required for other purposes. So it takes 20 yards of wool cloth for each soldier a year. As I have said, a hundred million pounds of wool in the grease provide only 50,000,000 pounds of scoured wool; and if it takes 20 yards for each soldier, it is my estimate that, if this bill shall be passed, it will force the Government hereafter, at least, to pay millions of dollars additional for uniforms which it must provide in order properly to clothe the soldiers, sailors, fliers, and the C. C. C. enrollees of the United States. Who will pay that bill? The money must come from the taxpayers, because it will have to be appropriated. If the uniforms cost more, the Congress will make larger appropriations. If we make larger appropriations, we must either borrow more money or raise more taxes, for, in the end, whatever may be the amount of money necessary to pay for the uniforms, it must come from the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Would the uniforms have to be labeled? Is that required under the law?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If they conformed to the law they would have to be labeled.

Mr. WALSH. What label would be put upon them?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The manufacturer would have to label them as containing whatever their content might be. The label, if it is honestly placed, will have to be on the garment. The garment must have a label. The label must state the weight of the garment. The label must state the amount of virgin wool contained in the garment. The label must state the amount of reused wool or reprocessed wool, if there be any, in the garment. If the garment contains silk or rayon or nylon or linen or cotton, the label must state that fact, if the garment is honestly labeled. In addition to stating all these facts, the label must state the name of the manufacturer, and the soldier must go through the Army tagged with all this information.

Mr. WALSH. Would a label to the effect that the particular garment does not contain all virgin wool be sufficient?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; under the law the label must give the full facts. It must state the percentage of virgin wool. My complaint is that if the label states that the garment is 100-percent virgin wool, the virgin wool may be tags, it may be britch wool, it may be shank wool.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has made that very clear.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So I contend that the label is no protection to anybody. The War Department would not accept the label submitted by a manufacturing concern.

Mr. WALSH. And a garment of all virgin wool may be very much less in price than a garment which contains other things than virgin wool, and may be less durable?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the chart on the wall, if it is accurate—and I say it is—shows that the general run of top sort wool—that is, the best wool from the mine run of sheep, taken from the back—was selling, say, 30 days ago for 90 cents a pound, scoured wool. At the same time a certain quality of slubbing was selling for $1 a pound. Slubbing is the choice selected tops. Let me explain that a little in detail.

The finest wool from the finest fleece can be processed into yarn and the yarn woven into cloth and the cloth may never be used. It is the finest cloth that can be made from the finest wool that is grown. Then that cloth, perhaps made into uniforms or into a suit or coat, and never used, can be sent back to the factory and torn apart and made again into wool, and that wool sells for more than virgin wool. That wool is called waste wool. It is second-hand wool; it is reused wool or reprocessed wool; yet the trade will give more for that wool than it will give for the mine run of tops. So, Mr. President, the bill contains no element of protection to the public.

I have made the statement that the bill is an anticotton bill. I desire to quote from the remarks of one of the proponents of this bill in the House of Representatives; and I do not speak disparagingly of him. He is well within his rights. He comes from a sheep district. He is back of the bill. He is one of the most active men in its support. I do not blame him for that. If he can induce a Congress of the United States, representing every State and every section, to discredit cotton and glorify wool, more power to him. I will not vote for it; I will not approve of it; but he will get the results.

Representative SOUTH, when he spoke upon this bill in the House, made this statement:

> Cotton will not be hurt by this bill, because cotton comes more nearly competing with shoddy than either one of them does with wool.

The author of this bill in the House, the proponent of the bill in the House, makes the statement that cotton competes with shoddy. Mr. President, under this bill shoddy is all wool; so my interpretation is that if this bill shall become a law the merchants of the country will be able to manufacture goods out of shoddy and advertise them as an all-wool product. If they contain the least bit of cotton, the cotton must be disclosed, if they are honest; and the consumer being taught to believe that wool is fine and cotton is inferior the public will be inclined to turn aside from cloth that contains cotton, even though it is a better cloth than if it is an all-wool product. So, under the bill as I construe it, cloth containing cotton is construed, either intentionally or otherwise, as inferior to cloth made from the lowest grade of shoddy. I come from a cotton State. Over on this side are dozens of cotton Senators. Not one of them is in his seat.

Mr. President, the bill defines wool as fiber from the fleece of a sheep or a lamb, or the hair of an Angora or Cashmere goat, and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, the alpaca, llama, vicuña, which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product. So, when we vote for this bill we vote that goat hair is virgin wool; we vote that camel's hair is virgin wool; we vote that alpaca hair is virgin wool; we vote that llama hair is virgin wool; we vote that vicuña hair is likewise virgin wool; and the proponents of the bill obviously have the audacity to expect the President of the United States to sign a bill solemnly declaring, under the great seal of the United States, that goat hair is virgin wool and camel's hair is virgin wool. He may do it, Mr. President, but I do not think he will. I know in my mind that he should not, and I cannot believe that he will.

It is obvious that the intent of the bill is to magnify the value of so-called virgin wool, or wool, and to discredit reprocessed and reused wool; and all cloth made from a combination of wool and cotton yarns is to be discredited. The clear inference is that cloth made from reprocessed and reused wool is shoddy. At present, vast amounts of cloth are made from the joint use of wool, cotton, and other yarns. Hence, it is further obvious that the intent of the bill is to discredit the joint use of wool and cotton in making cloth. If the bill should become a law, the use of cotton in conjunction with wool in making cloth will be discredited, if not discontinued, because cotton will be placed in the same class with shoddy, or even in a lower class, for the reason that if cloth were made of either virgin wool, reprocessed or reused wool, it could be truthfully labeled as all wool; but if made from wool and cotton, the percentage of cotton would have to be shown on the label, and the public would be led to believe that woolen cloth containing any percentage of cotton would be an inferior product. To the extent that the bill helps wool, to a like extent it will injure cotton. Hence, the bill must be classified as an anticotton bill.

Mr. President, I desire still further to read from the record made in the House of Representatives when this bill was before that body. I read from the remarks made by Representative BALL. Mr. BALL said:

> We have been told many times that there is absolutely no laboratory test by which the presence of reworked wool can be determined by examining the finished surface. Therefore the only way the proposed law can be enforced is by a complicated inspection system and an elaborate check of the records of each mill, which means more Federal employees to attempt to police the industry. I think most of you will agree that we have enough inspectors running around now, and that it is about time we called a halt on Government jobs and expenditures.

Mr. President, I should like to have this statement read by the conferees on this bill, as represented by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. If this bill passes, a great industry will be regimented. Federal officials will swarm through the woolen plants, wearing the uniform of the Federal Trade Commission. The junior Senator from Kansas signed the conference report. He may not agree with me; no doubt he does not; but my contention is that when he signed the conference committee report he placed his stamp of approval upon a program providing for the regimentation of the textile industry of America, and most certainly of the woolen industry of America.

Mr. President, when the bill was before the Senate committee a subcommittee was appointed and hearings were held. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was a member of the subcommittee. After hearing all the testimony and giving full consideration to the testimony and the terms of the bill, he prepared a minority report on the bill.

I desire at this point to read his report into the RECORD. He states his reasons for being against the bill, and his reasons are substantially the same as those I have tried to set forth, and because the statement sustains my position in opposition to the measure, I will read the minority report:

MINORITY VIEWS ON S. 162, THE SO-CALLED WOOL PRODUCTS LABELING ACT OF 1939

The minority does not concur with the other members of the committee making the above report and recommendation on S. 162, the so-called Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939.

It is the opinion of the minority that this bill, as a control of business, is not necessary. Our judgment is that no injury to the commerce of the United States in the distribution of wool products warrants such drastic control. We are not convinced that the consuming public is misled to its injury in the purchase of wool products as the industry is now conducted.

As a special privilege to a small class, we believe that the monopoly established by such a brand as "virgin wool" would not be in the public interest. Moreover, we doubt that it would, ultimately, benefit the intended beneficiaries.

The minority believes that the additional burden of labor and cost involved in administering the act and conforming to its terms would either increase the cost to the ultimate consumer to such an extent that substitutes would be availed of and volume of production, therefore, reduced; or the margin of profit would be so small as to materially impair the industry.

From the consumer's point of view, it does not seem to us that he would gain enough from the knowledge given him by the labeling to justify the additional price he would have to pay for the same textiles and garments which he now buys, and with which he is entirely satisfied, without such labels as are required by the bill.

We believe that competition would be materially reduced under this control, and that employees would lose their employment and owners lose their investments because of the closing of plants which are now struggling through the depression in a precarious financial condition.

We believe that the raiser of sheep would ultimately find his market diminishing by reason of the substitution of other textiles for wool products not burdened by such Government control.

Therefore the minority recommends that the Senate do not agree to S. 162.

WARREN R. AUSTIN,
For the minority.

Mr. President, I have stated heretofore that the bill would obviously raise the price of wool. There is not a doubt about it in my mind. Even the prospect of the bill's enactment has increased the price of wool, in my opinion. It is not alone the demand for wool made by the Army and the Navy and the public generally that is increasing the price of wool, but it is the prospect that the bill will be enacted.

Woolen dealers are not dumbbells. They are speculating on the enactment of the bill. They are buying wool believing that the bill will be enacted. They are buying it, and if the bill shall be enacted, wool will go up in price, and they will sell it and make money. We cannot blame them. Everything is speculation in this life. The farmer goes out in the springtime and plows the soil, harrows the land, plants his crop, and tends his crop, speculating on the elements, on the rainfall, on the chinch bug, on the boll weevil, on the drought. The farmer is the greatest gambler in the world. He is a speculator. He has to be a speculator. If drought comes, he loses his bet. He works hard in the summer, and if the rains come in profusion and he gets a fine crop, he speculates on the price. If the price is fair, the speculation is a success. But even if he produces the finest crop in the world, as the farmers are doing this year in some sections, the price may be so low that he can get hardly enough to pay for producing the crop. So I do not blame the speculator. But I am against the bill, not that I am against putting labels on goods telling the truth. No one would be against that. But under the bill one could scarcely label a garment and tell the truth about it, and the bill is so wide open that an unscrupulous manufacturer, a dishonest manufacturer, would be licensed to deceive the ignorant people of America.

I am not in favor of the enactment of legislation inviting the woolen mills of the United States and other manufacturing institutions of the United States, honest or dishonest, as they may be, to take the law as a license to deceive the unsuspecting people of the country. I would not say the ignorant people, because they are not ignorant, since no one can become advised as to this matter. There is no plan, no system, no scientific test by which people can tell about what is in the cloth, except the man who makes the cloth. This bill would license woolen manufacturers to deceive, rob, and defraud the public. In addition to regimenting the industry, it would give them this license, not only in the United States, but in every mill on the face of the globe. I cannot vote for such legislation.

The classification is all wrong. Here is the list on the chart on the wall. If a bill could be so devised as to advise the consumer what is in cloth, so that he would know he was buying a garment made of top wool, which had never been used, that would be fine. But this bill is not so drawn. All the bill requires is that the manufacturer label his cloth "wool," and wool under the terms of the bill is the fleece of a sheep, or lamb, or a goat, or a camel, a llama, an alpaca, a vicuña, which has never been processed into cloth.

If the label could be so drawn that when the housewife goes to buy Johnny a suit of clothes, or when a Senator goes to buy himself an overcoat, an examination of the label would tell from what part of the sheep the wool in the cloth came, that would be of some help, but the bill does not so provide. Even those who will vote for the bill, eminent Senators, men of age and experience, when they have to go to the mill to buy a piece of cloth to be made into a coat or a suit, will see that the cloth is all wool, virgin wool, and would they not be surprised to know from which end of the sheep the wool came? They might get the finest coat they had ever worn made from wool from the south end of a sheep going north.

I suppose that if they did not know the difference it would be all right; and they would not know the difference, because they could not tell. There is no test that has been devised to date. The only test comes in the mill, and, as the mill hand who wrote me the letter stated, the superintendent who runs the mill knows, the scouring boss knows, the carding boss knows, the picking boss knows; but aside from them no one knows.

If some plan could be devised not to make the carder, or the picker, who will not be responsible, because they do not run the mill, but to make the superintendent, or the man who runs the mill, disclose accurately what is in the cloth, that would be fine; but the bill does not do that. That would require inspection, and no inspector is provided for in the bill. Not a single inspector for a thousand mills in the United States, not a single inspector for the 500 mills whose names I placed in the RECORD last night, is provided for in the bill; not a dollar of money is authorized or appropriated by the bill for inspection. When I see that experienced, practical legislators, men who have been in the Congress for 25 or 30 years, not only have voted for the bill but are going to vote for the conference report, I cannot understand it.

Mr. President, if the bill shall be enacted, it is my considered judgment that the men who vote for it will sentence the wool industry to death; and I make that statement because there are now being devised substitutes for wool. Wool is now being made from milk—synthetic wool, of course. It is possible to take skim milk and from it make casein, and from casein can be made a fiber, as fine as is desired. From that fiber is made a product called lanital, which is a substitute for wool. A person who does not know much about wool could not tell whether he had real wool or a substitute for wool. Such a product is now being made here in the United States. In the State of Rhode Island, for example, there is a plant at Bristol which is now manufacturing lanital from casein. Casein is made from milk, and lanital is a substitute for wool.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of garment is it used for?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot give very much information about that, I am sorry to say, but I am advised that it is of sufficient firmness that men of means have constructed a plant at Bristol, R. I., which is making lanital as indicated. I am sorry I cannot give more information, but I would not dare to make a misstatement, and I do not have the information.

Mr. President, if wool can be made from milk, and if the bill sentences wool to death, the bill might be construed to be a measure to increase the demand for and the production of cattle. If the bill is passed, and if what I say materializes, we might after a while find the sheep producers changing their business from the production of sheep to the production of cattle.

We now have for other kinds of cloth a substitute called rayon. Rayon is made from wood. By processing wood, a long fiber can be made and long, single strands. Lanital can be made into fibers of any length and of the same size and strength. I do not say it is as good, for I do not know. From wood can be made a fiber of great length. From wood rayon is now being made.

Mr. President, consider the plants from which rubber is produced. We do not have many such plants in this country, but we are experimenting with plants which produce rubber milk. Mr. Ford is experimenting in the United States with different kinds of plants which produce a substance which looks something like milk. The rubber plant produces a substance which looks like milk, which is called rubber milk. From rubber milk a long fiber can be spun, a fiber of any size, and the fiber can be used to make cloth; and I imagine at this moment Senators listening to me on the floor, and most certainly persons who are listening to me in the galleries, have on their persons either garments or parts of garments made from lastex, which is made from the milk of rubber. Hose now have a webbing around the top which makes it unnecessary to wear hose supporters. The webbing is made from lastex.

Mr. President, ladies used to wear garments for certain purposes which were made of rubber. I am advised, not officially, that they now wear similar garments made from lastex. They may not know the name of the cloth from which the garment they wear is made. Certainly, most of them do not know that the garment was made from milk of rubber.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator familiar with the substitute for cotton or silk hosiery which the Du Pont Co. has recently put on the market, and which has been patented?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was coming to that. Mr. President, there is now a cloth made of glass. It is possible to take glass and so process it as to make a cloth which renders a service.

Not very long ago one of the three greatest industrial concerns of America, according to this morning's newspaper, developed a new cloth, which is called nylon. I should say, perhaps, that this product is a fiber; it is a thread. The Du Pont Co. has developed nylon. From nylon hosiery is now made and other similar products to compete with wool, and, while I do not know what the future may hold in store, from knowledge I have, if the prophecies which are made are correct, nylon will supplant the use of silk.

Mr. President, from what is nylon made? It is made from coal and air and water. That is all it takes to make nylon. The finest hosiery that can be manufactured today—at least the ladies say it is—and the finest garments of the silky order can be and are being made of nylon, and nylon, as I said, is made from coal, air, and water. I am advised that nylon is considered to be better than either silk or rayon. The fibers are of indefinite length.

The silkworm works 8 hours a day. I have now worked only 5 hours, and the Senate has not yet taken its recess. The silkworm has a little pouch or sac under his chin. He carries a little soupy substance in the sac and when he gets ready to work he proceeds to go from place to place and spins the soupy substance from his little sac under his chin out through his teeth, if I may call what he has teeth, and makes a long, thin, fine strand. As soon as the air strikes this little strand of soupy substance it hardens, and that strand is silk. The Du Pont Co. now is in competition with the silkworm. The Du Pont Co. makes nylon from coal and air and water. The silkworm has to gather his food, and to process it into the raw material. Then the poor little silkworm has to work hour upon hour to spin his strands which finally find themselves in certain kinds of garments.

Mr. President, it is my judgment that when the Congress undertakes to give preference to different classes of textiles, it at that time begins to destroy the wool industry, because to the extent that the price of wool is increased by legislation, to the same extent will efforts be made to find substitutes for the woolen article.

As I said on a former occasion, the conferees on this bill had a meeting, but no conference. The report says they had a full and free conference, but it was not a conference, it was a meeting. I am not criticizing them. They did what was within their rights. It is admitted they could not have done otherwise. When the House passes one bill and the Senate passes another bill and both bills are before the conferees, that throws the whole subject matter open to the conferees. Every line and every word in the House bill was before the conferees. Every line and every word in the Senate bill was likewise before the conferees. They could have taken up the two bills and used the information they obtained from their consideration of this measure, and, in my judgment, have brought out a better bill. They did not do it, because they did not have time, or for some other reason.

The Senate conferees were carefully selected. They were selected from among Senators who were known to be advocates of the bill. I do not complain of that. In the other House they tried to select the conferees from among advocates of the bill, but three Members were placed on the conference committee for some reason or other who were not for the bill. Those three House conferees did not sign the report. I do not blame them. There was a meeting, but there was no conference. When the House conferees met with the Senate conferees the Senate conferees said, "Mr. House Conferees, we accept your bill. We are ready to sign on the dotted line." They did not talk about the bill, so far as I know. I was not a member, but I have talked with three members of the conference committee. I believe what they said. There was no conference but merely a meeting. It was simply a little signing party. The Senate conferees accepted the House bill with its imperfections, even in one place where the word "wood" appeared, and it should have been "wool." The Senate conferees did not have time even to disagree to amendment 17 which contains the word "wood." They accepted the bill with the word "wood" in it.

Mr. President, what business has wood in this bill? The bill does not refer to wood, it refers to wool. Amendment 17 refers to wood, when it should have referred to wool.

When the Senate votes on the conference report this afternoon or tomorrow, Senators will vote for the word "wood" in this bill as if the Senate were legislating about wood. The Senate conferees obviously did not have time to correct that error. The Senate conferees did not say they would not agree to the bill with the word "wood" in it. The Senate conferees did not have time to recede. They should have receded. They should have insisted upon the use of the word "wool" instead of "wood." The Senate conferees did not have time, and the House conferees did not have time to do that. So there has been no conference on this bill. There was only a meeting.

I stood here 3 hours the other day trying to get that matter into conference. I hope I shall succeed in having the definition of wool made a little better. The House said, "Wool means the fleece of a sheep or a lamb." The Senate conferees did not insist upon that amendment. The Senate conferees said, "That is the wrong definition of wool. The right definition of wool is that it is the fleece of a sheep or a lamb, or the hair of a goat, a camel, a llama, an alpaca, or a vicuña."

Mr. President, I have never seen a vicuña. I will ask any member of the conference committee if he has ever seen a vicuña. How do the conferees know that the hair of a vicuña is virgin wool? I pause for a reply. I receive none. Yet if we vote tonight, we cast a solemn vote in the historic Senate of the United States, where Webster, Clay, and Calhoun used to stand, that camel's hair is virgin wool, that goat's hair is virgin wool, and that llama hair is virgin wool. I never saw a llama, to my knowledge. I never saw a vicuña. If I did, I do not remember it. The vicuña may have the finest fleece in the world. I do not know. No member of the conference committee knows. Does any Senator know? Did any Senator ever see a vicuña? I ask the author of the bill, Is a vicuña an animal, a fish, or a bird? I doubt if he knows. I do not. It may be a flower.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I presume the Senator is asking me the question. He is directing the question to the author of the bill. He assumes that I am the author of the bill. He asks whether or not I can tell him what a vicuña is. I am afraid I am unable to tell him. I should be unable to tell the Senator anything so that he would understand it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the record will be my witness as to whether or not I understand the bill. I stand on that record.

I might give a little further evidence with respect to the vicuña. I never saw one. It may be a fish, so far as I know. So far as I know, it may be a snake. So far as I know, it may be a fowl. It may be the fuzz of a fowl after the feathers are picked off. It must be of fine texture. One time I happened to go into a tailoring establishment to see about an overcoat. The tailor showed me some fabrics, but did not tell me what they were. I saw one fabric which was about the color I wanted and about the weight I wanted. I asked the price of it. He said, "That fabric is worth $90 a yard wholesale." I asked him what it was. He said, "That is vicuña, the finest cloth made."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So I did not buy the vicuña overcoat. If I had, it would probably have cost me $500 or $600. To date I have not worn such an expensive garment.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will yield for a question.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator just asked me a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will yield for a statement, provided I do not lose the floor. I depend upon the Chair to protect my rights.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator asked what a vicuña was, and I wish to advise him——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am very nearly through. The Senator from Wyoming will have as many days as he cares to consume to answer my remarks. He will require several days. So I think I had better proceed, because I have occupied the floor for 4 hours.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I assume that the Senator withdraws his request for me to tell him what a vicuña is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as this bill was being considered by the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offered an amendment to protect the manufacturers of hats in the United States. If the bill passes in its present form—and it must either pass or fail, because it may not be amended—it will provide that all wool products must be labeled with their correct content. Whatever that content may be, the label must show what is in the hat. The Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment, as follows:

Provided, That in the case of hats or hat bodies made or purported to be made of virgin wool, reclaimed wool, wool felt, or wool products, the fibers contained therein other than virgin wool and reclaimed wool need not be specified if the aggregate percentage of such fibers is disclosed.

The author of the bill would not accept the amendment. I understand that hats are made from reprocessed wool. Perhaps they are also made from virgin wool. I think tags would make very good hats, and perhaps shank wool or britch wool would make good hats. No doubt grey wool would make a very good Stetson hat of that color. Hats are made of wool. They are made of virgin wool, reprocessed wool, short-fiber wool, and also of rabbit fur, and perhaps other sorts of hair. I understand that some of the hat manufacturers, of which there are none in my part of the country, have secret processes for the mixture of the materials from which they make the cloth, so-called, which goes into a hat. I do not know what it is. I do not buy a hat because it is a wool hat, or a rabbit-fur hat, or a camel's-hair hat, or what not. If a hat fits me, I buy it. I do not care from what it is made. I might care, but I do not think about it. No one wears a hat very long. If one finds the kind of hat he wants, if it fits him, he buys it. If it must be labeled "virgin wool," "reprocessed wool," or "reused wool" that amounts to nothing. If the manufacturers of hats must disclose their secret processes in making hats, they will be materially affected. The bill may be the means of forcing some hat manufacturers to disclose their secret formulas, to their disadvantage and to the advantage of their competitors; but the author of the bill would not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. It might lessen to some degree the demand for wool.

Mr. President, those who favor the bill want everybody to use wool. They want everybody to use not only wool but virigin wool. If it is virgin wool, the wool growers do not care whether it be tags, shanks, vats, britch wool, or paint wool. They do not care what it is so long as it is wool.

I do not think that that is the right basis on which to legislate. The bill is written on an entirely erroneous theory. If the bill would force the manufacturer to label his product honestly, giving the proper values to top wool, and to reprocessed wool which has never been used, but which is just as good as virgin wool, just as good as top wool, and sometimes better, then the customer would know that he was getting the best wool grown. Under the terms of the bill he will not know that. If we could find some subdivision into which to put britch wool, seedy wool, dead wool, and shearlings, so that the man who bought a suit made of wool would know that he was getting wool from a particular part of the sheep, he would be receiving some valuable information. He would know whether or not he was getting the best wool. Not many consumers would know anything about a sheep. Thousands of consumers would not know a sheep if they should meet one on the road. If they should see a fleece of wool they would not know what it was. What Member of the Senate, unless he be a wool expert, is competent to tell the different classifications of wool which come from a fleece? I have raised sheep and I have sheared sheep. I know a little about sheep—not much. I know only what one can learn from raising sheep, shearing them, and selling the wool and the sheep. That is all I know about sheep.

Mr. President, it does not require a Webster, a Clay, or a Calhoun to interpret the meaning of the bill. It would do more than the proponents of the bill think it would do. It would not only raise the price of wool for the benefit of the wool growers and to the detriment of the consuming public and the United States of America. It would not stop there, Mr. President. If enacted into law, the bill would regiment every mill in the great State of New York. There are more than 100 woolen mills in that great State, employing tens of thousands of laborers and workers. The bill is important to the State of New York. It is important to the State of Massachusetts. There are 50 or 75 woolen mills in the great State of Massachusetts. The bill would affect every one of those mills. It would affect every laborer in every woolen mill in the State of Massachusetts. It would affect everyone who has stock in a corporation owning a woolen mill in the State of Massachusetts. The same statement is true of Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, and any other State in which woolen mills are located.

Here we are in the Senate of the United States, in the closing days of a 9-month session, trying to pass a bill adversely affecting hundreds of thousands of mill owners and laborers—and, let me say, just before an election. That is intended for the Members on my side of the aisle.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In addition to manufacturers, would not the bill affect all those who make garments of every kind, description, and character, in that it would require the garments to be labeled?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill does not stop at favorably affecting the wool grower. The bill does not stop at adversely affecting the mill owner and the factory owner. The bill affects the retailers of America. It affects, either directly or indirectly, the cotton mills of America, the silk mills, the nylon mills, and the rayon mills. It affects 250,000 retail stores throughout the United States, wherever they may be. If the bill should become a law, every retailer at every crossroads in Kansas, Nebraska, or Oklahoma would have to see that a tag was attached to every product containing wool or advertised to contain wool. If such a tag were not affixed, he would be in danger. He would be a law violator.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to say to the Senator that almost everyone affected in one way or the other by the bill who has written to me from Connecticut has submitted in one form or another the very argument which has been so ably presented by the Senator from Oklahoma. I rise to emphasize the points he has made in the light of the comments which have been submitted to me. Let me say, however, that no one has so thoroughly digested and abstracted the bill, and put the emphasis upon the proper points to be raised for the consideration of the Senate, as has the Senator from Oklahoma. I should like to compliment him on the splendid job he has done.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Connecticut. His is the first word of encouragement I have had, and I appreciate it. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has been almost the only one from whom I have received help, and the statement of the Senator from Connecticut is the only word of encouragement I have had. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has been most sympathetic. I took occasion to read the minority report. I was glad to do it. I endorse every word the Senator said; and every word he said is the truth.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] a few days ago—yesterday, I think it was—read a letter which he had received from one of his constituents. The letter told the truth as I understand the truth, and I think I know the truth.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has been most sympathetic. He has spent more time upon the floor than has any other Senator listening to my harangue, if it may be called that. To me, it is not a harangue. It is called that by some, however. Next to the author of the bill, the Senator from Nebraska has done me the honor to listen to what I have had to say longer than has any other Senator.

Mr. President, I have not filibustered on this bill. I know what filibustering means. I do not know much about how it is done, but I know what it means. If this session were to terminate at 12 o'clock tonight, this bill would not pass. This session will not terminate tonight, however. No time is fixed at which the session shall terminate. No one can filibuster against the bill under such conditions. Unless he wanted to speak indefinitely—no one could do that.

I am not filibustering. I have not taken a moment of the time of the Senate that I did not think was necessary. I cannot control the votes of this body. I would not if I could. I do not represent Kansas directly. I do not represent Nebraska directly. I do not represent Kentucky or Alabama or New York, except indirectly. I cannot speak directly for the citizens of those great States. I do represent, as best I can, the State of Oklahoma. I think I speak for a great number of citizens in Oklahoma. If they understood this bill as I understand it, they would vote exactly as I am about to vote.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Irrespective of who represents any interests, if it be so stated; irrespective of who grows wool, or what persons manufacture wool into textiles, and thereafter into garments, if you choose, the fact remains that, looking at this matter from the standpoint of the public interest, the public is the group which will have to pay the cost that will be entailed by the passage of the bill. From that standpoint all of us should, and it seems to me will, look at the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree to that statement in its entirety, and I have tried to indicate, though not as well as the Senator from Connecticut has done, that sentiment.

Mr. President, I have concluded. This afternoon I received a telegram from the president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers suggesting an amendment. This conference report cannot be amended, but I shall submit this telegram and read it to show what might be done if this report should be defeated and the bill should go back to the committee for further study and consideration. Under no conditions should the bill pass now. This telegram indicates that at the present time we have no testing laboratories to find out, or try to find out, whether or not a garment contains reprocessed wool or reused wool.

The telegram is as follows. It is addressed to me. It is dated October 2, and is signed by Arthur Besse. As I understand, he is the president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

Suggest following amendment to House version of wool-products labeling act, section 12, effective date: Delete present section. Substitute the following.

The last section of the bill says that it shall not become effective for 9 months after its approval; so Mr. Besse suggests a substitute section. Of course, the amendment cannot be offered. It cannot be adopted. It is impossible to amend a conference report, or at least it is so hard to do it that it is rarely done, but if the bill should go back to a further conference this amendment might be considered. I am not urging it, but I am suggesting it.

Mr. Besse suggests this amendment in lieu of the section of the bill which says that it shall not take effect for 9 months:

This act shall take effect 9 months after the date of its passage, provided that on or prior to 4 months after its passage not less than one Government and not less than two recognized commercial testing laboratories have analyzed fabrics of undisclosed fiber composition and determined within the tolerances specified herein the percentage of "wool," "reprocessed wool," "reused wool," and "other fibers" of such fabrics. For the purpose of this test not fewer than 10 fabrics produced by not less than 5 woolen fabric mills shall be required.

Mr. President, if that provision should be incorporated in the bill, it would mean that it should not go into effect until we have these laboratories and until they have made the tests described in the telegram. The gentleman who sends the telegram suggests that the bill should not go into effect until we have some means of determining whether or not products alleged to be wool contain reused wool or reprocessed wool. If we have no testing laboratories and cannot develop testing laboratories, then we cannot use the test; and the only other plan is the inspection plan.

The War Department knows that it cannot use scientific tests, because there are none. It cannot use chemical tests, because there are none. The War Department uses the inspector plan; and the War Department now has hundreds of inspectors in the mills making the cloth which hereafter will clothe the American Army and the American Navy. The smallest mills require two inspectors. The larger mills require more. I do not know the number of inspectors the War Department have, but they have them in the mills to see to it that the army cloth is made at every stage according to the plans and specifications for that cloth. The War Department officials do not depend upon an analysis. They do not depend upon microscopic tests. They do not depend upon any scientific tests. They have their experts in the mills to see to it that the wool is properly sorted, and that they get the best part, that the wool is properly scoured, that the wool is properly dyed, that the wool is properly spun, that the wool is properly woven, that the woolen cloth is properly fulled, and that the woolen cloth is properly, we might say, mowed, because that is what it is. When the wool comes from the loom it is all rough on the outside. When it goes through this little process and is mowed, all of the roughness is taken off, and the cloth is smooth, almost as smooth as the top of this desk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I call the Senator's attention to section 5:

> Any person manufacturing for introduction or first introducing into commerce a wool product shall affix thereto the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification required by this act, and the same or substitute therefor containing identical information with respect to the content of the wool product. * * *

All over the country there are housewives who are making various kinds of garments which they sell on the highways, especially during the summer season, to tourists and others, carpets, garments of various kinds, hats, sometimes hosiery, and tablecloths. Does the Senator understand that the provision I have read would require all such persons to place these tags and this information upon those garments or articles?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. WALSH. And if they should not do so, they would be subject to prosecution?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They could be brought before the Federal Trade Commission, and, if convicted of unfair competition, or of deception, or failure to label or of having labeled falsely, as I understand, they could be fined as much as $5,000, or put in jail for a year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and the Attorney General would have the enforcement of the act in hand. If the Senate wants to pass such a bill as this, so far as I am concerned it will now have the opportunity.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I can relieve all my colleagues by the announcement that I do not intend to discuss the conference report fully. I intend to inform the Senate that my flag flies as it did at the outset, upon the report submitted by me for the minority against Senate bill 162. I am most grateful to the Senator from Oklahoma for the vast amount of research he must have made relating to this subject, and for the untiring energy and the great effort he has made to transmit the results of his research to the Senate so that it may have all this valuable information to consider in passing upon the conference report. I think his debate was a fine discussion of the principles involved and of the practical effect of the proposed law.

I wish to emphasize one of his main points, that is, the lack of necessity for this drastic control over business. Let us take ourselves as a test of the question. Do we wear a label to show the quality and character of the suit of clothes we wear tonight? In all our lives have we ever been required by our Government to wear such a label? Yet what man is there within the sound of my voice who has been injured in any way because he has not heretofore been required by the great Government at Washington to wear a label?

Let me ask, is there any man within the sound of my voice who has found that commerce in the garments he wears has been burdened in the least degree during his lifetime because those garments did not bear labels such as those which would be required if this conference report should be agreed to? The answer is "No." So far as the consumer is concerned, there is no reliable proof at all that there is a sound reason for imposing the heavy burden upon the commerce in wool products which the bill would impose.

Every garment a Senator wears which contains wool would have to bear such a label. Everyone would have to lug such a label around in his service to his country, regardless of whether he was interested in it or not. And for what purpose? To enable him in the future to enjoy a privilege he has not heretofore enjoyed? Not at all. When he bought his suit of clothes he relied upon the good faith and the good character of the merchant of whom he bought the suit of clothes, or upon the tailor who fabricated the suit of clothes. The merchant passed the same confidence back to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer passed the same confidence back to the supplier of the raw materials which he used. On that sound principle of morality, of good manners, of public welfare, we have built up an industry in this country which is entirely satisfactory, and which has clothed the people more handsomely, and more comfortably, than the people of any other country on earth are clothed.

Take the seamstress who sews for my family. She would be the victim of this regulation as much as anyone else if the bill became the law. She would violate the prohibitions in the act if she worked for a grandchild of mine, or for my wife, upon material which contains wool and did not see to it that the label required by the great Government at Washington was attached to the product of her handiwork. Is it not an absurd burden to put upon a seamstress?

Is there any question about this requirement? Listen to these words. I read from section 5:

> Any person manufacturing for introduction, or first introducing into commerce a wool product shall affix thereto the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification required by this act, and the same or substitutes therefor containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product, or any other products contained therein in an amount of 5 percent or more by weight and other information required under section 4, shall be and remain affixed. * * *

That is the point. The label—

> Shall be and remain fixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, would not the bill, if enacted, apply to every dressmaker in the United States?

Mr. AUSTIN. It would. No one could escape. Every person would be bound to observe this mandate. There are other sections of the bill which make sure that the product shall not escape.

What is misbranding? Let us see the definition in section 4 (a):

> A wool product shall be misbranded—
> (2) If a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, is not affixed on or affixed to the wool product and does not show. * * *

It makes no difference that the suit of clothes I wear is of the very highest quality, made of the purest wool, of the highest grade, I cannot wear it around, no tailor can make it for me, no merchant can sell it to me, without that tag being attached to it.

Where would it be placed; where would I wear this tag anyway? Think of that for a moment. Senators understand that the bill requires the tag to be on the wool. Where will it be put? The lining is not wool. Senators understand also that the tag must be clearly legible. It must be in a place where it can be seen, and it must be on the wool product. It cannot be on the lining, which is of some other material. If I have a lining on any part of my garment that is represented as containing wool, that also must bear a tag of its own, and a separate one entirely. This is the absurd requirement which the great Government at Washington attaches to the material so that no matter what hands it goes through, every seamstress in the land is bound by it, because the materials she handles must have the tag affixed to it.

Then again the language in subsection (d) of section 4 has a proviso in it—

Provided, That if any such article or product—

Meaning—

Linings, paddings, stiffening, trimmings, or facings, except those concerning which express or implied representations of fiber content are customarily made, nor as requiring designation of fiber content of products which have an insignificant or inconsequential textile content—

What provision do we find with respect to all such articles, if they are represented to be wool or contain wool?

Provided, That if any such article or product purports to contain or in any manner is represented as containing wool, this section shall be applicable thereto and the information required shall be separately set forth and segregated.

Mr. President, we will be plastered over with signs and tokens, the number depending upon the different pieces of cloth in our garments. We will be parading around like tin soldiers with labels hitched to us, so that everybody may plainly see that the cloth we wear is one of these three kinds or classifications arbitrarily made by the great Government at Washington.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that the tag or label, or whatever one may choose to call it, must be plainly legible. I suppose that means that it must be of a size and the characters and the writing on it must be such that it can be read. Has the Senator from Vermont undertaken to figure out how large a tag would be necessary in order to carry the information required in the bill, and to be plainly legible?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, I can answer that very readily. To set out the necessary language would require the space from line 8 to line 22 on page 5. That print is fairly legible to a person who holds the page up as near as I am holding it up to my eyes, but if it is to be legible beyond that, at arm's length, we will say, the type would have to be still larger. The space those lines take is about 5 inches high by 4 inches wide. Where would the label be put on my coat, where would it be put on my trousers, and, Mr. President, where would it be put on my vest? Think it over.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the Senator's contention that one has to wear the label after he has bought the coat or suit?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; it is my contention that the label must be affixed to the goods by every person who makes a transaction in commerce, and the bill undertakes to apply that not only to interstate commerce, but also to intrastate commerce, thus undertaking to regulate and control the simple transaction of making clothes within the States.

Mr. HUGHES. I had the impression from what the Senator said that he would go around with labels on his clothes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I would if I did not take them off.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the object of the label, I presume, is to notify the purchaser of the contents of what he is buying. After I buy a suit of clothes I have no further reason, I suppose, to wear the label if there is a label on it. It would be no violation of the law, would it, to take it off unless I wanted to sell it to somebody else?

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. President, we get right down to the question of label. How is wool cloth labeled? The testimony to which I myself listened in committee shows that customarily there is woven into the selvage of the cloth the label which the manufacturer puts into it, and which the bill provides must stay affixed to the cloth in its ultimate form.

I have debated this matter earnestly on other occasions, and I do not intend to repeat what I have previously said. I want to conclude with the comment that the very able and, I believe, very sound argument of the Senator from Oklahoma has demonstrated beyond question that this special privilege for a very small class of the inhabitants of the United States will place a burden upon the consumer, upon the retailer, and upon the manufacturer. It will not merely increase the cost of the original fleece of the lamb, and the cost of labor for bookkeeping, labeling, inspection, and all those things that are necessary in order to put the measure into effect, but it will add this burden to the consumer and to the manufacturer and to the retailer. It will narrow the market. It will reduce the volume of wool products which will be purchased and used by the consumer. So I think that in practical effect this special privilege to a very small segment, at the cost of a very large proportion of the people of the country, including the investor, the employer, the laborer, and the consumer, is far beyond any demand whatever for this sort of regulation. It is not needed. For more than 20 years the Congress year after year has studied the question and decided against it. Right now, when we need every resource, when we need every economic nerve we have in this country, what folly it is to add to the regimentation of business this regimentation of an absolute necessity of life and a great and important element of national defense, namely, uniforms for American soldiers.

I have finished what I wanted to say. I hope the conference report will be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield long enough for me to put something in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless the Senator withholds the point of no quorum, the Chair is compelled to direct the clerk to call the roll. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Capper	Hughes	Thomas, Idaho
Austin	Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Thomas, Okla.
Barkley	Danaher	McKellar	Truman
Bridges	Hale	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Bulow	Harrison	Reed	Walsh
Burke	Hill	Schwartz	Wheeler
Byrnes	Holt	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Would it be in order for me to ask that the demand for a roll call be vacated, so that we may proceed immediately thereafter to fix a time to vote tomorrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate can do nothing in a legislative way without a quorum. The want of a quorum has been developed. Therefore, there is nothing for the Chair to do except to direct the clerk to call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. GIBSON, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. SMATHERS, Mr. STEWART, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. WILEY answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Senators and request them to come to the Chamber of the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. MEAD, and Mr. ASHURST entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I am informed that if the junior Senator from North Dakota were present he would vote "yea," and that if the senior Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "nay." I am free to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHEELER. I announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BRIDGES (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I am just informed he is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and allow my vote to stand. I am advised that, if the Senator from Ohio were present, he would vote "nay," and that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce the necessary absence of the following Senators: The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] are absent because of illness.

I also announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], who would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

I also announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—31

Adams	Connally	Murray	Shipstead
Andrews	Ellender	O'Mahoney	Smathers
Ashurst	Guffey	Pepper	Stewart
Barkley	Harrison	Pittman	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Holt	Reed	Truman
Capper	Hughes	Schwartz	Van Nuys
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	McNary	Sheppard

NAYS—18

Austin	Gibson	Mead	Walsh
Bankhead	Green	Overton	White
Bridges	Hale	Radcliffe	Wiley
Byrnes	Hill	Thomas, Okla.
Danaher	Maloney	Wagner

NOT VOTING—46

Bailey	Downey	King	Reynolds
Barbour	Frazier	La Follette	Russell
Bilbo	George	Lee	Slattery
Bone	Gerry	Lodge	Smith
Brown	Gillette	Lucas	Taft
Burke	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Utah

Caraway	Hatch	Miller	Townsend
Chandler	Hayden	Minton	Tydings
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Neely	Vandenberg
Davis	Holman	Norris
Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Nye

So the conference report on Senate bill 162 was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of this act shall take effect on November 1, 1940, except that sections 2, 11, 25, 26, and 27 shall be effective as of July 1, 1940, and sections 19 and 20 shall become effective upon the approval of this act: Provided, however, That—

(a) A half month which has begun prior to November 1, 1940, in accordance with the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations thereunder, and which includes such date, shall continue, and benefits with respect thereto shall be computed and paid as if this act had not been enacted;

(b) All benefit years current on October 31, 1940, shall terminate (1) on October 31, 1940, or (2) on the last day of a half month which includes October 31, 1940, and November 1, 1940, whichever is later, and, for the purposes of section 2 (c) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended by this act, all benefits paid for unemployment in half months begun subsequent to June 30, 1940, and prior to November 1, 1940, shall be deemed to have been paid for unemployment within the benefit year ending June 30, 1941;

(c) Benefits for unemployment in the first registration period, beginning after October 31, 1940, of an employee who has, subsequent to June 30, 1940, completed a waiting period under section 3 (b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, shall be determined and computed as though such registration period were a subsequent registration period in the same benefit year.

SEC. 2. Subsection (g) of section 1 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1094), as amended June 20, 1939 (53 Stat. 845), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits and the amount of contributions due pursuant to this act, employment after June 30, 1940, in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor organization employer or as an employee representative shall be disregarded."

SEC. 3. Subsection (h) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(h) The term registration period means, with respect to any employee, the period which begins with the first day for which such employee registers at an employment office in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office; and thereafter each period which begins with the first day for which he next registers at an employment office after the end of his last preceding registration period and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office."

SEC. 4. Subsection (j) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by inserting between the first and second sentences thereof the following: "The term 'remuneration' includes also earned income other than for services for hire if the accrual thereof in whole or in part is ascertainable with respect to a particular day or particular days."

SEC. 5. Subsection (k) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(k) Subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act, a day of unemployment, with respect to any employee, means a calendar day on which he is able to work and is available for work and with respect to which (i) no remuneration is payable or accrues to him, and (ii) he has, in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, registered at an employment office: Provided, however, That 'subsidiary remuneration,' as hereinafter defined in this subsection, shall not be considered remuneration for the purpose of this subsection except with respect to an employee whose base-year compensation, exclusive of earnings from the position or occupation in which he earned such subsidiary remuneration, is less than $150: Provided further, That remuneration for a working day which includes a part of each of 2 consecutive calendar days shall be deemed to have been earned on the second of such 2 days, and any individual who takes work for such working day shall not by reason thereof be deemed not available for work on the first of such calendar days.

"For the purpose of this subsection the term 'subsidiary remuneration' means, with respect to any employee, remuneration not in excess of an average of $1 a day for the period with respect to which such remuneration is payable or accrues, if the work from which the remuneration is derived (i) requires substantially less than full time as determined by generally prevailing standards, and (ii) is susceptible of performance at such times and under such circumstances as not to be inconsistent with the holding of normal full-time employment in another occupation."

SEC. 6. Subsection (m) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the designation "(m)" and substituting "(l)" therefor.

SEC. 7. Subsection (n) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(m) The term 'benefit year' means the 12-month period beginning July 1 of any year and ending June 30 of the next year, except that a registration period beginning in June and ending in July shall be deemed to be in the benefit year ending in such month of June."

SEC. 8. Subsection (l) of section 1 of said act is hereby transferred to follow the subsection relettered as "(m)", and is amended to read as follows:

"(n) The term 'base year' means the completed calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of the benefit year."

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Benefits shall be payable to any qualified employee (as defined in section 3 of this act) (i) for each day of unemployment in excess of 7 during the first registration period, within a benefit year, in which he has 7 or more days of unemployment, and (ii) for each day of unemployment in excess of 4 during any subsequent registration period beginning in the same benefit year.

"The benefits payable to any such employee for each such day of unemployment shall be the amount appearing in the following table in column II on the line on which, in column I, appears the compensation range containing the total amount of compensation payable to him with respect to employment in his base year:

Column I Total compensation	Column II Daily benefit rate
$150 to $199.99	$1.75
$200 to $474.99	2.00
$475 to $749.99	2.25
$750 to $999.99	2.50
$1,000 to $1,299.99	3.00
$1,300 to $1,599.99	3.50
$1,600 and over	4.00

SEC. 10. Subsection (c) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) The maximum number of days of unemployment within a benefit year for which benefits may be paid to an employee shall be 100."

SEC. 11. Subsection (d) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) If the Board finds that at any time more than the correct amount of benefits has been paid to any individual under this act or a payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940), recovery by adjustments in subsequent payments to which such individual is entitled under this act or any other act administered by the Board may, except as otherwise provided in this subsection, be made under regulations prescribed by the Board. If such individual dies before recovery is completed, recovery may be made by set-off or adjustments, under regulations prescribed by the Board, in subsequent payments due, under this act or any other act administered by the Board, to the estate, designee, next of kin, legal representative, or surviving spouse of such individual, with respect to the employment of such individual.

"Adjustments under this subsection may be made either by deductions from subsequent payments or, with respect to payments which are to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes, by subtracting the total amount of benefits paid in excess of the proper amount from the actuarial value, as determined by the Board, of such payments to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes and recertifying such payments on the basis of the reduced actuarial value. In the latter case, recovery shall be deemed to have been completed upon such recertification.

"There shall be no recovery in any case in which more than the correct amount of benefits has been paid to an individual or payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940) who, in the judgment of the Board, is without fault when, in the judgment of the Board, recovery would be contrary to the purpose of this act or would be against equity or good conscience.

"No certifying or disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount certified or paid by him in good faith to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under the third paragraph of this subsection or has been begun but cannot be completed under the first paragraph of this subsection."

SEC. 12. Subsection (f) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) If (i) benefits are paid to any employee with respect to unemployment in any registration period, and it is later determined that remuneration is payable to such employee with respect to any period which includes days in such registration period which had been determined to be days of unemployment, and (ii) the person or company from which such remuneration is payable has, before payment thereof, notice of the payment of benefits upon the basis of days of unemployment included in such period, the remuneration so payable shall not be reduced by reason of such benefits, but the remuneration so payable, to the extent to which benefits were paid upon the basis of days which had been determined to be days of unemployment and which are included in the period for which such remuneration is payable, shall be held to be a special fund in trust for the Board. The amount of such special fund shall be paid to the Board, and in the collection thereof the Board shall have the same authority, and the same penalties shall apply, as are provided in section 8 of this act with respect to contributions. The proceeds of such special fund shall be credited to the account. Such benefits, to the extent that they are represented in such a special fund which has been collected by the Board, shall be disregarded for the purposes of subsection (c) of this section."

SEC. 13. Section 3 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"QUALIFYING CONDITION

"SEC. 3. An employee shall be a 'qualified employee' if the Board finds that there was payable to him compensation of not less than $150 with respect to the base year."

SEC. 14. Paragraph (ii) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(ii) any of the 30 days beginning with the day with respect to which the Board finds that he failed, without good cause, to accept suitable work available on such day and offered to him, or to comply with instructions from the Board requiring him to apply for suitable work or to report, in person or by mail as the Board may require, to an employment office."

SEC. 15. Paragraph (iv) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(iv) any of the 75 days beginning with the first day of any registration period with respect to which the Board finds that he knowingly made or aided in making or caused to be made any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of causing benefits to be paid."

SEC. 16. Paragraph (v) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(v) any day in any period with respect to which the Board finds that he is receiving or has received annuity payments or pensions under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, or insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, or payments for similar purposes under any other act of Congress, or unemployment benefits under an unemployment compensation law of any State or of the United States other than this act: Provided, That if an employee receives or is held entitled to receive any such payment, other than unemployment benefits, with respect to any period which includes days of unemployment in a registration period, after benefits under this act for such registration period have been paid, the amount by which such benefits under this act were increased by including such days as days of unemployment shall be recoverable by the Board: And provided further, That if that part of any such payment or payments, other than unemployment benefits, which is apportionable to such days of unemployment is less in amount than the benefits under this act, which, but for this paragraph, would be payable and not recoverable with respect to such days of unemployment, the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply but such benefits under this act for such days of unemployment shall be diminished or recoverable in the amount of such part of such other payment or payments."

SEC. 17. Paragraph (vi) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(vi) any day in any registration period with respect to which period the Board finds that he earned, in train and engine service, yard service, dining-car service, sleeping-car service, parlor-car service, or other Pullman-car or similar service, or express service on trains, at least the equivalent of 20 times his daily benefit rate;"

SEC. 18. Subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(vii) any day in any registration period comprising the last 14 days of a period of 28 days with respect to which period of 28 days the Board finds that he earned, in train and engine service, yard service, dining-car service, sleeping-car service, parlor-car service or other Pullman-car or similar service, or express service on trains, at least the equivalent of 40 times his daily benefit rate;

"(viii) any day which is a Sunday or which the Board finds is generally observed as a holiday in the locality in which he registered for such day, unless such day was immediately preceded by a day of unemployment and immediately followed by a day of unemployment or was the last day in a registration period and was immediately preceded by a day of unemployment: Provided, That if two or more consecutive days are a Sunday and one or more holidays, then with respect to any employee such consecutive days shall not be considered as days of unemployment unless they were immediately preceded by a day of unemployment and immediately followed by a day of unemployment or the last of such days was the last day of a registration period and such days were immediately preceded by a day of unemployment."

SEC. 19. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 5 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows: "Each qualified employee whose claim for benefits has been denied in whole or in part upon an initial determination with respect thereto upon a basis other than one which is reviewable pursuant to one of the succeeding paragraphs of this subsection, shall be granted an opportunity for a fair hearing thereon before a district board."

SEC. 20. Subsection (c) of section 5 of said act is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"Any claimant whose claim for benefits has been denied in an initial determination with respect thereto upon the basis of his not being a qualified employee, and any claimant who contends that under an initial determination of his claim he has been awarded benefits at less than the proper rate, may appeal to the Board for the review of such determination. Thereupon the Board shall review the determination and for such review may designate one of its officers or employees to receive evidence and to report to the Board thereon together with recommendations. In any such case the Board or the person so designated shall, by publication or otherwise, notify all parties properly interested of their right to participate in the proceeding and, if a hearing is to be held, of the time and place of the hearing. At the request of any party properly interested the Board shall provide for a hearing, and may provide for a hearing on its own motion. The Board shall prescribe regulations governing the appeals provided for in this paragraph and for decisions upon such appeal.

"In any case in which benefits are awarded to a claimant in whole or in part upon the basis of pay earned in the service of a person or company found by the Board to be an employer as defined in this act but which does not comply with the provisions of this act and denies that it is such an employer, such benefits awarded on such basis shall be paid to such claimant subject to a right of recovery of such benefits. The Board shall thereupon designate one of its officers or employees to receive evidence and to report to the Board on whether such benefits should be repaid. In any such case the Board or the person so designated shall, by publication or otherwise, notify all parties properly interested of their right to participate in the proceeding and, if a hearing is to be held, of the time and place of the hearing. At the request of any party properly interested the Board shall provide for a hearing, and may provide for a hearing on its own motion. The Board shall prescribe regulations governing the proceedings provided for in this paragraph and for decisions upon such proceedings.

"Final decision of the Board in the cases provided for in the preceding two paragraphs shall be communicated to the claimant and to the other interested parties within 15 days after it is made. Any properly interested party notified, as hereinabove provided, of his right to participate in the proceedings may obtain a review of any such decision by which he claims to be aggrieved or the determination of any issue therein in the manner provided in subsection (f) of this section with respect to the review of the Board's decisions upon claims for benefits and subject to all provisions of law applicable to the review of such decisions. Subject only to such review, the decision of the Board upon all issues determined in such decision shall be final and conclusive for all purposes and shall conclusively establish all rights and obligations, arising under this act, of every party notified as hereinabove provided of his right to participate in the proceedings."

SEC. 21. Section 6 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Employers shall file with the Board, in such manner and at such times as the Board by regulations may prescribe, returns under oath of compensation of employees, and, if the Board shall so require, shall distribute to employees annual statements of compensation: Provided, That no returns shall be required of employers which would duplicate information contained in similar returns required under any other act of Congress administered by the Board. The Board's record of the compensation so returned shall, for the purpose of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits be conclusive as to the amount of compensation earned by an employee during the period covered by the return, and the fact that the Board's records show that no return was made of the compensation claimed to be earned by an employee during a particular period shall, for the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits, be taken as conclusive that no compensation was earned by such employee during that period, unless the error in the amount of compensation in the one case, or failure to make or record return of the compensation in the other case, is called to the attention of the Board within 18 months after the date on which the last return covering any portion of the calendar year which includes such period is required to have been made."

SEC. 22. Subsection (d) of section 11 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) So much of the balance in the fund as of June 30 of each year as is in excess of $6,000,000 shall as of such date be transferred from the fund and credited to the account."

SEC. 23. The first paragraph of subsection (l) of section 12 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "A person in the employ of the Board on June 30, 1939, and on June 30, 1940, and who has had experience in railroad service, shall acquire a competitive classified civil-service status if, after recommendation by the Board to the Civil Service Commission, he shall pass such noncompetitive tests of fitness for the position for which the Board recommends him as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe."

SEC. 24. Subsection (l) of section 12 of said act is hereby further amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a colon and adding the following: "And provided further, That, for the purpose of registering unemployed employees who reside in areas in which no employer facilities are located, or in which no employer will make facilities available for the registration of such employees, the Board may, without regard to civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, appoint persons to accept, in such areas, registration of such employees and perform services incidental thereto and may compensate such persons on a piece-rate basis to be determined by the Board. Notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 22, 1906 (34 Stat. 449), or any other provision of law, the Board may detail employees from stations outside the District of Columbia to other stations outside the District of Columbia or to service in the District of Columbia, and may detail employees in the District of Columbia to service outside the District of Columbia: Provided, That all details hereunder shall be made by specific order and in no case for a period of time exceeding 120 days. Details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by order of the Board, in each particular case, for periods not exceeding 120 days."

SEC. 25. Subsection (h) of section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 307) is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining monthly compensation and years of service, and for the purposes of subsections (a), (c), and (d) of section 2 and subsection (a) of section 5 of this act, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and (1) such compensation is earned between December 31, 1936, and April 1, 1940, and taxes thereon pursuant to sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 or sections 1500 and 1520 of the Internal Revenue Code are not paid prior to July 1, 1940; or (2) such compensation is earned after March 31, 1940.

SEC. 26. Section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. (a) If the Board finds that at any time more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits has been paid to any individual under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, or a payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940), recovery by adjustments in subsequent payments to which such individual is entitled under this act or any other act administered by the Board may, except as otherwise provided in this section, be made under regulations prescribed by the Board. If such individual dies before recovery is completed, recovery may be made by set-off or adjustments, under regulations prescribed by the Board, in subsequent payments due, under this act or any other act administered by the Board, to the estate, designee, next of kin, legal representative, or surviving spouse of such individual, with respect to the employment of such individual.

"(b) Adjustments under this section may be made either by deductions from subsequent payments or, with respect to payments which are to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes, by subtracting the total amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits paid in excess of the proper amount from the actuarial value, as determined by the Board, of such payments to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes and recertifying such payments on the basis of the reduced actuarial value. In the latter case, recovery shall be deemed to have been completed upon such recertification.

"(c) There shall be no recovery in any case in which more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 has been paid to an individual or payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940) who, in the judgment of the Board, is without fault when, in the judgment of the Board, recovery would be contrary to the purpose of the acts or would be against equity or good conscience.

"(d) No certifying or disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount certified or paid by him in good faith to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under subsection (c) of this section or has been begun but cannot be completed under subsection (a) of this section."

SEC. 27.(a) Subsection (e) of section 1532 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purpose of determining the amount of taxes under sections 1500 and 1520, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and (1) such compensation is earned before April 1, 1940, and the taxes thereon under such sections are not paid before July 1, 1940, or (2) such compensation is earned after March 31, 1940."

(b) For the purpose of determining the amount of taxes under sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and the taxes thereon under such sections are not paid before July 1, 1940.

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS ACT OF 1940

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent than in the engrossment of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts, the Secretary of the Senate be directed to change the references to the Contract Assignment Act of 1940 to the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have examined the change which the distinguished Senator from Kentucky desires to make, and I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSTRUCTION OF WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION PROJECTS

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. BRIDGES addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair make a statement. At the beginning of the discussion of the conference report, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] requested recognition from the Chair.

The understanding of the Chair is that he gave way for the purpose of consideration of the conference report. The Chair promised to recognize him when consideration of the conference report had been concluded. The Senator is on his feet, and the Chair will keep his promise to recognize the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized. Does he yield, and, if, so, to whom?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to call up a House bill. There will not be any controversy over it. It is lying on the table. The Senate passed a similar bill with a very slight change. This afternoon I spent considerable time with the Interior Department and the Representatives from Colorado, and we have gotten together on the differences.

I ask unanimous consent that House bill 10122 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869), which was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment as a substitute for subparagraph (5) on page 9 of the bill. I may say that this is in accordance with an agreement of all those who are interested in irrigation and reclamation, and it is also satisfactory to the Department.

I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, it is proposed to strike out lines 21 to 24, inclusive, and lines 1 to 19, on page 10, and to insert:

(5) The Secretary shall establish the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated. No water may be delivered to or for more than the farm unit area of irrigable lands in the project owned by a single landowner: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate, or otherwise. No water shall be delivered to or for any land, in a project area, transferred or disposed of subsequent to approval of the project by the President, and within 3 years from the time water becomes available, unless and until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative that the land has been transferred or disposed of at a price not exceeding the appraised value as determined by the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives, and upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved the Secretary is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to create authority to interfere with the delivery of water under prior rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I inquire whether or not the amendment would impose any burden upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would it impose any burden upon the taxpayers?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever. Let me say to the Senator that there was only one thing in controversy. As the Senate bill passed the Senate it contained a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to refuse to permit any irrigation unless the owner of the land sold all his land above 160 acres. Representatives LEWIS and TAYLOR, of Colorado, objected to that provision and it was eliminated in the House bill. This afternoon I conferred with representatives of the Secretary of the Interior and Members of the House, and we agreed upon a provision to eliminate the objectionable provision giving the Secretary of the Interior power to make anyone sell some of his land if he did not want to do so. Otherwise, the House bill is identical with the Senate bill which passed the Senate the other day.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has this measure been considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senate bill was considered by the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee, of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is chairman. It was approved by the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee and passed the Senate the other day. This bill passed the House of Representatives; so the measure has passed both bodies, except with reference to the disagreement as to this particular matter. It must go back to the House with this amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would the proposed modification of the bill change the method of exercise of the power of eminent domain?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. It has nothing at all to do with it.

Mr. AUSTIN. By what method would the Secretary compel a private owner to sell?

Mr. WHEELER. That is the provision we are taking out. Under the provisions of the bill which passed the Senate, and under the provisions of this bill as it passed the House, the Secretary of the Interior was empowered to require a man, before he was given water on 160 acres, to sell the remainder of his land if he owned more than 160 acres. As I say, Representatives TAYLOR and LEWIS and several other Members of the House objected to that provision, as did some Members of the Senate. We are eliminating that particular provision, which was offensive to Members of the House as well as to Members of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the committee unanimously agree upon the change?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and other Senators from the West who are interested in irrigation and reclamation have agreed upon the change, as have Members of the House.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I understand the situation, the House bill passed the House in a certain form with respect to subparagraph 5.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the Senate bill passed the Senate in a different form.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The section which the Senator now brings in combines the action of the two bodies. There is no new material in it. It does not change the operation of the law in any respect, but merely effectuates the desire of the majority of the House and the majority of the Senate with respect to the language of this particular section.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. I thank the Senator for his observation. He is entirely correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is there a special emergency which calls for the passage of the bill tonight?

Mr. WHEELER. The reason why I bring it up tonight is because House Members have said to me that they are very much afraid that unless the bill reaches the House tomorrow it may not be acted upon. The matter is of vital importance to the Western States. It is felt that if the bill does not reach the House tomorrow it may be tied up, and may not get through the House. That is the reason for asking for consideration of the bill tonight.

Mr. AUSTIN. If it is possible to obtain such an agreement from the Senator, I should like to have it understood that if tomorrow some member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation should raise a question about the adoption of this amendment, we may have a reconsideration of it.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be very happy to agree to that.

Mr. AUSTIN. The reason why I make the request is that at this moment I do not see any minority member of that committee in the Chamber.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be very happy to agree to the request.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Let me state to the Senator from Vermont that I am a member of the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee, and I know we all agree with the Senator from Montana. I am sure that my colleague [Mr. HATCH] agrees with the Senator from Montana. I do not see in the Chamber the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] who is also a member of the committee; but I am positive that all the Senators I have named agree.

Mr. WHEELER. I talked with the Senator from Colorado this afternoon and submitted the matter to him.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will remember that about 3 years ago there was passed a special measure called the antispeculation bill in reference to the lands of Grand Coulee. When this bill came upon the calendar a couple of days ago, upon glancing at it I did not feel that it in any way affected the measure which was enacted by Congress I think in 1937. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the adoption of this amendment will make any change so far as that specific act is concerned.

Mr. WHEELER. No; we repeat the language of the former act. The antispeculation provision is in this bill as it passed the House, and was in the Senate bill as it passed the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. WHEELER, the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 4167) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869), was reconsidered, and the bill was ordered to be indefinitely postponed.

WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I thank the Vice President and the majority leader for their courtesy in keeping the agreement which I made with them. I shall confine my remarks to the subject, making them as closely knit as possible, in order that my speech may be as brief as possible and detain the Senate no longer than is necessary.

In recent days there has been a series of attacks upon the character of Wendell Willkie, the next President of the United States, chiefly on the grounds that he was nominated by the alleged sinister connivance of the so-called Power Trust, and that he is typical of the evils which in the past have plagued that industry. The material for these speeches is obviously drawn from a recently published special smear issue of the magazine, the New Republic. This organ advertises itself as a "magazine of opinion"—and rightly so, because it certainly is a magazine devoted not to fact but to opinion.

This special smear issue is advertised as containing 18,000 words. The fact is not advertised that it is the most colossal tissue of innuendo, propaganda, false inference, and plain and fancy lying ever assembled between the covers of this self-proclaimed organ of liberalism—18,000 words containing 1,800 lies. This slimy piece was admitted to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD last week.

On Saturday the New Republic published a brief letter of reply by Mr. Russell Davenport, Mr. Willkie's personal representative. Mr. Davenport added that "Mr. Willkie has had prepared a detailed statement answering all charges made or implied," and offered a copy for publication in fair public rebuttal to this tissue of libels. The New Republic, bent on smearing Mr. Willkie and wholly disinterested in the truth, did not see fit to print that rebuttal.

I have here as exhibits A and B the Davenport letter and the complete rebuttal, which the New Republic ignores. To save time, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of Mr. Davenport's letter to the New Republic and the reply to the article which has been prepared at the request of Mr. Willkie.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From the New Republic of September 30, 1940]

A COMMUNICATION IN DEFENSE OF MR. WILLKIE

SIR: I enclose a copy of an open letter to the editors of the New Republic by Mr. Wendell L. Willkie's personal representative, Mr.

Russell W. Davenport, in response to the New Republic's supplement "This Man Willkie" and subsequent references to that supplement in your periodical. Mr. Davenport, as you doubtless know, is with the campaign train in the West, and, at his direction, I have signed the letter for him.

JOHN S. MARTIN.

NEW YORK CITY.

SIR: Your recently published supplement "This Man Willkie" may not, in your opening words, be a "horror story," but it is nevertheless an extraordinary piece of fiction. To take a single instance, there is the statement on page 327 that Commonwealth & Southern's subsidiaries have in force only two labor contracts with the A. F. L. The most elementary care in investigation would have revealed the fact that these companies have no less than 21 existing contracts with the A. F. L. and 1 with the C. I. O.

The section "Mr. Willkie in Business" rests entirely on a fundamental premise that reveals appallingly slipshod reporting. The writer suggests that since Commonwealth & Southern was organized in 1929, since the market collapse occurred in 1929, and since Mr. Willkie joined the firm of Weadock & Willkie as counsel for Commonwealth & Southern in 1929, Mr. Willkie is therefore responsible for such criticisms as may be made of the organization of Commonwealth & Southern and its common-stock exchange offers. The New Republic's writer, however, has completely disregarded the fact that the year 1929 was 12 months long. The facts are that the discussions relative to the organization of Commonwealth & Southern took place prior to May 23, 1929. On that day the enterprise was incorporated. The offer by Commonwealth & Southern to exchange its common stock for the common stock of the subsequently merged holding companies was made on June 12, 1929. Whether or not the organization of Commonwealth & Southern is in any way subject to criticism, Wendell Willkie had nothing to do with it. He did not come to New York and did not join the firm of Weadock & Willkie as Commonwealth & Southern counsel until October 1, 1929. As he has repeatedly stated, he did not participate in, nor was he even aware of, the discussions relative to the organization or exchange offerings of Commonwealth & Southern. The entire thesis of "Mr. Willkie in Business" obviously falls to the ground.

Similarly, the New Republic has apparently accepted some exceedingly poor research in the section "Mr. Willkie and Labor." I have referred, at the beginning of this letter, to the New Republic's misstatement with regard to the number of labor contracts in force among Commonwealth & Southern's subsidiaries. The section charges those subsidiaries with hiring labor spies and the New Republic's subsequent issue of September 16, 1940, echoes this charge with a long essay attempting to suggest that the word "espionage" as used in connection with the La Follette committee's investigation necessarily meant labor spies. Such is not the case. Mr. Willkie has stated in the press, and in his behalf I reiterate, that any statement which implies that there was any such testimony before the La Follette committee or that any company of the Commonwealth & Southern system ever employed any spy for the purpose of interfering with labor activities is completely false. Agents have been employed for normal corporate purposes. For instance, the $31,000 allegedly spent by Georgia Power Co. on labor spies was actually spent for inspectors to check streetcar service and cash receipts. This is a common practice in the business, nor have the unions ever objected to the same. To claim that such a practice constitutes the use of labor spies is a complete distortion of the facts.

Equally without foundation are the New Republic's charges against Mr. Willkie with regard to the so-called Ashwander case, the 19-company suit, the Chattanooga situation, rural power-line development, and subsidiary companies' labor relations. It would, indeed, be possible to go through the New Republic's supplement, paragraph by paragraph, showing how innumerable misstatements have been compounded into a series of attacks on Mr. Willkie that cannot for an instant be supported by the facts. I believe that the highly important factual inaccuracies already cited should be enough to give pause to those who may be in the habit of taking what they read in the New Republic for granted. Mr. Willkie has prepared a long, detailed statement answering all charges made or implied in your article, a copy of which I will gladly send you if you would consider printing it as another supplement.

RUSSELL W. DAVENPORT.

EXHIBIT B

REPLY TO THE NEW REPUBLIC'S "THIS MAN WILLKIE"

The New Republic's special edition entitled "This Man Willkie," issued under date of September 2, 1940, was brought to the attention of the Republican National Committee, together with the statement that it was to be distributed as a campaign document by the Democratic National Committee, that it has been availed of by the chairman of that committee, Edward J. Flynn, as a basis for his political discussion of Wendell L. Willkie's fitness for the office of President of the United States, and that the same was to be further used for what is termed "a political smear" of Mr. Willkie and for heckling Republican campaign speakers.

The article is general, touching immaterial things and referring to some factual matters to give it the semblance of accuracy.

The committee directed one of its research men to take the article, analyze it, state the charges it attempts to make, ascertain the facts with respect thereto, and state them specifically and accurately in conjunction with the charges, for use if and when occasion may require.

The examination has been made, and the charges and facts in respect thereto following the order of the article are as follows:

WHAT'S HE LIKE?

The article under this heading merely expresses the views of the writer as to Mr. Willkie's personality.

MR. WILLKIE IN BUSINESS

This section of the article attacks Mr. Willkie's statement that "he had absolutely nothing to do with * * * the speculative orgies of the twenties." The charge is then made that "Mr. Willkie was one of those responsible for the speculative orgy."

The facts completely substantiate Mr. Willkie's statement and show the charge to be entirely without foundation; indeed, the charge is one that never could have been made by anyone who cared to make the slightest investigation of the facts and who had any regard for his own reputation for accuracy and honesty. The only evidence set forth in the article to prove this outrageous charge are statements, themselves inaccurate, of what was done by the United Corporation and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the organizers of those corporations early in 1929, and specifically in May and June of 1929. The fact is that during all of this period Mr. Willkie was a practicing attorney in Akron, Ohio. He did not come to New York until October 1, 1929. Before that date of October 1, 1929, he did no work of any kind for the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation (hereafter sometimes called Commonwealth & Southern). At no time has he done any work of any kind for the United Corporation. Even, therefore, if there is anything to criticize in the organization of the Commonwealth & Southern in May 1929 or in any of the other transactions in the first 9 months of 1929, which is denied, in no event can Mr. Willkie be charged with any responsibility therefor. The whole section of the article, Mr. Willkie in Business, is built upon the entirely false assumption that Mr. Willkie participated in the affairs of Commonwealth & Southern in the early half of 1929. As this assumption is false, the whole article obviously falls.

The article makes many loose misstatements and false assertions about Commonwealth & Southern and the conduct of its business. It would require much space to analyze and answer such irresponsible charges and innuendoes. It is impossible, however, to refrain from pointing out that, at the organization of Commonwealth & Southern there was no general sale of Commonwealth & Scuthern common stock to the public. The $45,000,000 which was paid in cash for common stock and option warrants was paid by a very few concerns who are described in the article as "insiders." The remaining common stock and option warrants of Commonwealth & Southern were issued in exchange for stocks and option warrants of the holding companies whose systems were later consolidated into Commonwealth & Southern. Since when has it been a subject of criticism for "insiders" to pay in cash when the public is asked only to make an exchange of common stocks and at the prevailing market values? This $45,000,000 paid by so-called insiders, together with approximately $15,000,000 paid in cash on the exercise of options to purchase stock by stockholders in the holding companies whose stocks were later acquired, gave to Commonwealth & Southern the financial strength which enabled it to carry certain of its subsidiaries through the depression years in the face of the bitter attacks by the administration on the public utility industry and the ruinous competition of the subsidized T. V. A.

Again the reckless charge is made that on the organization of Commonwealth & Southern there were "write-ups" of $531,205,571.92. There were no "write-ups." The Commonwealth & Southern acquired stocks of other holding companies by exchanging its own stock for the stock so acquired. The cost of the acquisition of these stocks was naturally entered on the books of Commonwealth & Southern at its cost which was market value at the time of acquisition. Any other entry would have been an incorrect recording of what actually occurred. The market value of these stocks so acquired were in the aggregate in excess of the book value of the operating companies by over $531,000,000, but all Commonwealth & Southern did was to enter upon its books the true cost of the stocks so acquired. In no sense can that be considered a "write-up."

From the outset when a consolidated balance sheet was issued (that is a statement combining the assets of the subsidiary companies and of Commonwealth & Southern as a holding company) this excess of cost paid by the holding company was eliminated and the total value of the assets of $1,133,700,000 mentioned in the article did not include this excess. The only possible criticism of Commonwealth & Southern in this connection might be that as a matter of business judgment it, like many others in that year, paid too much in 1929 for the stocks it then acquired. All these transactions, it should be remembered, were had long prior to Mr. Willkie's connection with the company.

The article brings up again the old misrepresentations respecting the power purchased by the Alabama Power Co. from Wilson Dam and builds up the fantastic figure of $1,500,000 per year as the alleged profit accruing to the power company. There is absolutely no basis for any such charge. There was no profit. Everyone knows that the cost of producing power is the least important item entering into the cost of power delivered to the ultimate consumer. During all the period that power was being purchased from Wilson Dam the company owned steam-generating plants which could have generated an equal amount of power at substantially the same cost to the company. It was only because of the desire of the Commonwealth & Southern to cooperate with the Government that purchases were made rather than the power generated by the company itself. It should also be pointed out that the power purchased by the Alabama Power Co. from Wilson Dam was purchased under a contract revocable by the Government without notice and therefore was not a reliable source of power. The company, therefore, had to rely on its own plants for future supply. No responsible official of the Government has ever questioned the fairness of the price paid to the Government for the power purchased. It was glad to get it.

In general, Mr. Willkie's true responsibility for the conduct of Commonwealth & Southern dates from his assuming the office of chief executive in June 1934. He has a record of which anyone may be proud. A factual statement of the results obtained can be found in a copy of the annual report of the corporation for 1939. It shows, among other things, that when Mr. Willkie assumed office the company was not earning its preferred-stock dividend. For 1934 there was a deficit after providing for preferred-stock dividends of $1,522,000. At the end of 1939 there was a surplus of $4,416,000, notwithstanding nearly $5,000,000 increase in taxes, and nearly $7,000,000 increase in provision for retirement reserve and depreciation, and also notwithstanding the fact that owing to the subsidized competition of the T. V. A., the company was unable to refund any of the obligations of the companies within the area of competition, which would have resulted in substantial increase in net income.

Not only from the standpoint of investors, but from the standpoint of consumers, has Mr. Willkie's administration been noteworthy. The average residential use per customer has increased from 722 kilowatt-hours to 1,196 kilowatt-hours, and the average residential rate has decreased from 4.37 cents to 3.09 cents. For the 12 months ending March 31, 1940, the average residential use has increased to 1,226 kilowatt-hours, and for the first quarter of 1940 the average rate charged has decreased to 2.93 cents.

These facts speak more eloquently as to Mr. Willkie's record in business than any words.

The reference, page 317, to Mr. Willkie's most important work being arranging for renewals of utility franchises has no factual foundation, and he never was a lobbyist.

When Mr. Willkie was nominated for President he resigned from all his offices in the Commonwealth & Southern system; his directorship in the First National Bank of New York, and his connections with utility organizations, and is now giving his entire time to his candidacy for President.

WILLKIE AND THE T. V. A.

What political advantage can be had from bringing the T. V. A. controversy into the discussion must, of course, be determined by the party responsible for doing so. There can be no advantage to the T. V. A., the Commonwealth & Southern, or the consumers. Right or wrong, the Government has gone into the power business in the valley of the Tennessee, and the T. V. A. and the power companies after the struggle are now doing business considerately and amicably without discord and accommodating each other to the end of getting the best results out of their synchronized operations. The T. V. A. openly stated that Mr. Willkie's conduct in all things with respect to the negotiations has been open, fair, and honest, and that leaves little if anything which should be said. Certainly the major question of whether the Government should engage in the power business in the Tennessee Valley in competition with privately owned companies is moot.

The New Republic's statement under the above heading is erroneous as to factual matters, draws unfounded conclusions from old propaganda, and in many cases is negligently or deliberately false. The indefiniteness and looseness of the accusations make it unnecessary to do more than to generally deny their accuracy, and the same is denied, but for the purpose of making specific denials an effort is made to frame from the language used in the statement what the undisclosed critic has endeavored to charge and to make reply thereto.

The article's asserted charges as framed are stated and the replies follow in the order of the article:

(1) The Commonwealth & Southern indulged in a propaganda campaign "not differing greatly from other utility-company exploits that congressional investigating committees have made famous" against the T. V. A. bill.

This is entirely untrue, and the use of harsher language with respect to its falsehood would be justified. Mr. Willkie appeared before the House Military Affairs Committee on April 14, 1933, and in his testimony stated of record his position in which statement the following appears:

"Mr. Willkie * * *. But whether or not you gentlemen want to develop the Tennessee Valley, whether or not you believe in the building of hydro plants on the Tennessee Valley for the promotion of navigation and flood control, and incidentally the production of power, whatever may be my personal opinion on that, we are not here in opposition to that, but we say to you that if you will make that power we will absorb it into our system as fast as we can, which means that we will, in effect, have to cease the building of generating plants and absorb that power; and I think it has been shown to you that economically, by all the principles of economics, we offer the most economic way of doing it, the cheapest way of doing it, and the widest possible benefit to those consumers. * * *

"* * * I will say this now, that we will enter into a contract with you to take that power and we will pass on any saving that is made on the generation of that power to the ultimate consumer."

The following is a quotation from a letter of Mr. Willkie, dated February 1, 1937, to Mr. Lilienthal, Director of the T. V. A.:

"As I have said to you heretofore, we have an adequate and reliable supply of power for our entire southern system well into the year 1938 and have made arrangements to install additional generating capacity to meet the additional requirements which may develop by that time. We desire, however, to work with the Government and if possible provide a market for its power. We can, as we have in the past while we have been purchasing your power, do this by refraining from operating some of our steam plants. We are willing to buy substantial quantities of power from the Government, provided the Government will agree not to sell power directly or indirectly which is to be used to compete with us in the territory where the power we purchase from the Government is necessarily distributed."

(2) The T. V. A. "offered to continue to provide current for Alabama Power Co. if the company would sell them certain of its transmission lines to make possible an experimental 'yardstick' area. This would have amounted to a division of territories, a mutual hands-off policy, which is precisely what Mr. Willkie afterward clamored for."

That any such offer was ever made is untrue. Mr. David E. Lilienthal and his counsel will say there was no such offer made and no offer with respect to a division of territory was ever made by T. V. A. On the contrary, Mr. Willkie made several requests for a division of territory, which requests were always declined.

(3) That "with seeming sincerity the T. V. A.'s offer (presumably with respect to division of territory) was accepted."

If reference is made to the agreement of January 4, 1934, then the answer is that an agreement was made. It contemplated the transfer of electric property in a limited area. It provided for an exchange of power. It provided that it "should remain in force and effect until midnight December 31, 1938, or until 3 months after the completion of Norris Dam power plant, whichever is earlier." At a conference held September 30, 1936, for the purpose of maintaining the status quo during the exploration of the possibilities of pooling the transmission lines the term of the contract was extended for a period of 3 months from November 3, 1936. The January 4, 1934, contract provided that the power companies would cooperate with the Authority and with Electric Home & Farm Authority, Inc., to promote the sale of electrical appliances throughout the Tennessee Valley served by them and that during the period of the contract Authority would not sell electric energy outside of said counties, where the property sold was located, to any municipality, corporation, partnership, or individual which, or the distribution system serving which, was on the date of the execution of the agreement being served by the power companies. Shortly after the execution of this agreement a division of opinion arose between the contracting parties with respect to whether the T. V. A. was at liberty during the period of the contract to enter into contracts for service in the areas of the Commonwealth & Southern system where such services were to be rendered after the expiration of the January 4 contract, and the T. V. A. insisted that it had a right so to do and did solicit such business.

(4) "Ostensibly, the Ashwander case was brought by preferred stockholders of Alabama Power Co.," and Mr. Willkie declared publicly, "The Alabama Power Co. has no connection, direct or indirect, with pending litigation against T. V. A. * * * but in the course of the litigation the law firm conducting the case was paid by the Edison Electric Institute."

During the negotiations resulting in the contract of January 4, 1934, it was the contention of Mr. Willkie that the T. V. A. Act was invalid, and it was suggested to Mr. Sutherland, Mr. Lilienthal's counsel, that a court action for the purpose of determining whether the act was valid should be had, but neither Mr. Lilienthal nor the counsel for the Tennessee Valley Authority thought they were at liberty to join in such an action. Certain of the preferred stockholders of the Alabama Power Co. petitioned the board of directors of the Alabama Power Co. to take steps to invalidate the contract of January 4, 1934. This the board of directors declined to do, whereupon the stockholders, headed by Mr. Ashwander, launched their action against the Alabama Power Co. and the T. V. A. for the purpose of determining the validity of the contract. The Alabama Power Co. filed its answer in that case denying the right of the plaintiffs therein to have the contract declared invalid. It clearly appears that at the time the company refused to launch an action at the request of its preferred stockholders as well as at the time it answered the complaint of its preferred stockholders and at all times throughout the proceeding, the Alabama Power Co. always held to the position that it had executed the contract and proposed in good faith to carry it out. The proceedings on the part of Ashwander and his associates in that case were amended, and the plaintiffs sought to have the court render a declaratory judgment that the T. V. A. Act was unconstitutional. As to the validity of the act, there never was any misunderstanding with respect to the position of the Alabama Power Co., which from the beginning contended that the act was invalid and beyond the powers of the Federal Government, but that it had made the contract to sell its property in a limited area and would carry it out. In its brief, while stating its position that it was at all times willing to carry out the contract, but if the court was to pass on the validity of the act then in its opinion the act was invalid, and the Supreme Court of the United States held the contract to be valid, refused to pass upon the constitutionality of the act, and the contract was carried out.

The statement erroneously says the Supreme Court held the act to be constitutional. Tne consensus of opinion today is that the act is unconstitutional, and the Supreme Court, though asked to pass upon the validity of the act in the case of The Tennessee Electric Power Co. et al. v. Tennessee Valley Authority et al., it did not do so. It held only that while the complainant companies were grossly injured, they did not have exclusive franchises in the cities which were directly inflicting the injury and they could not complain of the source from which the cities acquired the money or means to inflict such injury. In other words, it was what the lawyers term damnum absque injuria.

(5) By inference from false premises the article undertakes to show that Mr. Willkie as a director of the Edison Electric Institute procured the Institute to pay the fees of the attorneys for the Ashwander litigation.

That is untrue. A quotation from the minutes of a meeting of the Edison Electric Institute on December 6, 1934, gives the lie direct to the insinuations of the article. It reads as follows:

"Mr. Willkie stated that the litigation in the case of George Ashwander et al. v. Tennessee Valley Authority et al. involved the validity of contracts executed by the Alabama Power Co., that he was not present at the meeting (November 15, 1934), at which the resolution employing counsel and authorizing expenditures to test the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority act was adopted, having been detained because of a conference with Mr. Lilienthal, but that he was opposed to the adoption of that resolution and desired to be recorded as opposed to this motion."

(6) Some time in 1935–36, the Roosevelt administration made a second attempt to deal with Mr. Willkie and he and his advisers were eager to arrange for a pooling agreement, or power grid, and that "a report spread that he (Mr. Willkie) had become the President's adviser on power questions," and "would act as negotiator between the New Deal and the whole utility industry," and that the 19-company suit was abruptly brought against the T. V. A. and "that ended permanently the effort of the administration and the T. V. A. to have a relationship with Mr. Willkie."

For such report if there was such a report there is absolutely no foundation. The facts are that the administration never undertook to have any such relationship. Consideration of a power pool was deliberately dropped by the administration and at the time of the discussion with the president Mr. Willkie distinctly informed the president that the company would continue its litigation for the purpose of determining whether the T. V. A. act was valid.

(7) "What happened in Chattanooga is one of the ugliest parts of the Willkie-T. V. A. record. In that city George Fort Milton, of the Chattanooga News, had long been an advocate of publicly owned power. A year after the T. V. A. was started, he opened a campaign for cheap municipal electricity. He was fought furiously by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., a Willkie-Commonwealth & Southern subsidiary. The company contributed $20,000 to a Citizens and Taxpayers' League which suddenly appeared to oppose Milton." Then the statement proceeds and refers to the acquirement of real estate as tenants in common by the company's employees to entitle them to vote at the election, says the Willkie company arranged therefor and on election day whisky admittedly bought by the power interests flowed freely near the polls.

The facts are that the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association was organized to oppose the bond issue not for the purpose of opposing Mr. Milton. It was headed by prominent businessmen of the city, its receipts and expenditures were reported to the authorities. Upon the charge of certain of the advocates of the bond issue the action of the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association was investigated by the grand jury which, reported that no law had been violated by the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association, that no law was violated by contributing money to the association and although this finding officially closed the matter as to the charges they were brought up before the T. V. A. Investigating Committee by Francis Biddle, a stockholder in Mr. Milton's paper, and the charges were openly denied by Fred B. Frazier, a former city commissioner, who was chairman of the Citizens and Taxpayers' Association, and others. Neither Mr. Willkie nor the Tennessee Electric Power Co. had anything to do with the founding of or business of the Chattanooga Free Press. The Tennessee Electric Power Co. did cease to advertise in the Chattanooga News, which it had a right to do. The Free Press was delinquent on its light bills but the bills were paid. Many other of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s customers were delinquent in the payment of their bills, including many municipalities in the State of Tennessee, for example, the city of Nashville at the time it purchased the Tennessee Electric Power Co. distribution system in that city owed the company more than $90,000 for electric service for more than a year. The Chattanooga News did suspend but such suspension was after the sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. property to the T. V. A. and various municipalities in Tennessee and certainly ought not to be attributed in any way to the Tennessee Electric Power Co. failing to patronize it, and the Evening Tribune, which the article says was organized to carry on the fight and is fighting still has ceased to exist, and while the general public in Tennessee understand the reason why the Chattanooga News suspended and the Evening Tribune did likewise, neither event was brought about by the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

(8) "Another stiff battle occurred between the Tennessee Valley Authority and Commonwealth & Southern over rural power lines."

There were contests over the construction of rural lines and the sole reason for it was that the Federal Government was organizing cooperatives, paying the cost of building their lines for the purpose of selling the T. V. A. power in the territories in which the local companies were extending their service more rapidly than the economies of the situation justified.

(9) Throughout all this period Mr. Willkie claimed that as a private-utility operator his companies had reduced rates and increased power consumption and admits that he was entitled to so claim, that for years prior to the existence of the T. V. A. the southern companies had made a progressive reduction of their rates.

There does not seem to be any point to the statement with respect to rates, other than it was the T. V. A. competition that forced down the rates and with respect to that the plan to give promotional rates that would tend to increase consumption and reduce rates was in force before the competition of the T. V. A. The company never claimed to be able to meet the T. V. A. rates, always claimed that they could not compete with the Government. The basic points with respect to a comparison of the T. V. A. rates with rates of privately owned utilities apart from the question of the lawful right of the Government to engage in the electric business are (1) the allocation of the capital cost; (2) the allocation of the operating costs, including depreciation; (3) the advantage of low governmental rates on borrowed capital; (4) the freedom from taxes, licenses, etc.; (5) the advantage of governmental postal, railroad, telegraph, and freight rates, etc.; and (6) the P. W. A. grants or gifts to the municipalities to which the T. V. A. sells electric energy, which in turn sells the same to the consumer, of as high as 45 percent of the cost of their facilities for distributing the power to the consumer.

Statements of residential rates of the Commonwealth & Southern system showing increasing service and lowering costs to consumers for which Mr. Willkie labored increasingly are attached.

(10) "The role of Consumers Power was even more specifically revealed in the special investigation of Republican State Senator Earl W. Munshaw. Senator Munshaw, as the Detroit Times of July 16, 1938, reported, was found to be receiving 'legal fees' from Consumers Power at the very time that 'the public utilities committee,' of which he was a member, was busy pigeonholing and killing several utility-reform measures which had aroused the opposition of the Consumers Power Co."

The facts are that there was no investigation of Senator Earl W. Munshaw. There was a rate proceeding pending before the Michigan Public Utilities Commission, presided over by Paul H. Todd, an advocate of public ownership and ardent new dealer, who at the hearing before the commission involving rates only, and for the purpose of trying to smear it before a number of newspaper reporters that he had been invited to attend the meeting upon a promise that a news item of importance would be developed, undertook through a Mr. Winder, who acted as an attorney for the commission to show that Senator Earl W. Munshaw, of Grand Rapids, had been corrupted by the Consumers Power Co. All the showing amounted to was that Mr. Munshaw had been an attorney for the Consumers Power Co. for many years and prior to his election as a State Senator and that during the month of June 1937, while the senate of which he was a member was in session, Mr. Munshaw's bill for $199.50 covering his personal services in the amount of $139 and cash paid out for abstracts of title $60.50 was paid. During the period of Mr. Munshaw's employment for the Consumers Power Co., his work had been principally examining abstracts of title to property and easements acquired for right-of-way purposes and protecting the company with respect to nonpayment of taxes by the owners of property leased to the Consumers Power Co. and upon which buildings, tower lines, etc., had been erected. The testimony appears on pages 1865 to 1909 at the hearing of July 15, 1938, and at pages 2241 to 2284 at the hearing of July 22, 1938, and a reading of that testimony is welcomed. The testimony in no way applied to the determination of the question pending before the commission and was dragged in for spite purposes.

MR. WILLKIE AND LABOR

The article cites the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee as its authority for certain charges with respect to the labor practices of some of the Commonwealth & Southern operating companies. The so-called Civil Liberties Committee (actually a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor) was by Senate Resolution No. 266 charged with the duty of making "An investigation of violations of the right of free speech and assembly and undue interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively." The committee was authorized, "* * * to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents * * * as it deems advisable." There was appropriated at least $150,000 for the expense of the committee's investigation.

Bearing in mind the duty of this committee and the authority granted to it as set out in the resolution, it is significant that at no time during its investigation lasting over a period of more than 2 years, did it call before it a single witness employed by any of the Commonwealth & Southern Cos. Had the labor practices of these utilities been reprehensible as the New Republic alleges, certainly the Civil Liberties Committee could hardly have failed to extend its investigation to the Commonwealth & Southern and its subsidiaries.

Common fairness would have dictated that the references to Commonwealth & Southern properties found in the records of the Civil Liberties Committee have been taken from testimony of witnesses who were in the employ of detective agencies or similar concerns or else from exhibits introduced into the committee's record by staff members of the committee, which exhibits had been compiled by the staff from records of detective agencies or similar organizations. Neither Commonwealth & Southern nor any of its operating companies were represented by counsel at the hearing before the Civil Liberties Committee. The simplest cross examination of the witnesses appearing before this committee could not have failed to elicit the fact that the purposes for which Commonwealth & Southern's subsidiaries had employed detective agencies were in every instance wholly unrelated to labor practices. Similarly had any Commonwealth & Southern witnesses been called before this committee their testimony would have shown that the use of detective agencies by these utilities was not in connection with labor matters. The statement of an agency or anybody else that operatives were employed for espionage purposes does not change the fact.

Perhaps the most flagrant piece of deception in this section of the New Republic's article is the charge that Commonwealth & Southern companies have resorted to the use of labor spies. This charge is wholly without foundation and the specific instances cited in support of it are entirely misleading.

It is charged that "Georgia Power Co. spent more than $31,000 on labor spies from Pinkerton's * * *." Georgia Power Co. retained the Pinkerton Agency for the purpose of checking its streetcar and bus operations and passenger receipts. This is a practice, common in the streetcar and bus transportation industry, which has been employed for at least 40 years. Everybody knows about it. It is a commonly accepted incident to the business just as is the check of the accounts and records of other persons who handle company money. The unions have never objected in any way to this practice, which, of course, has nothing to do with labor relations and is certainly an entirely different thing from the use of "labor spies."

The article further alleges that the Pinkerton Agency "also serviced Alabama Power." This is clearly intended to imply that Alabama Power Co. employed labor spies from the Pinkerton Agency. As a matter of fact, the only two occasions upon which the Pinkerton Agency was ever retained by Alabama Power Co. were in connection with the murder of a power-company employee, and on these occasions this agency was retained to find and bring to justice the guilty person.

With respect to the charge that the Central Illinois Light Co. purchased $500 worth of tear-gas guns and shells, it may be said again that the article is deliberately misleading. The Central Illinois Light Co. purchased tear-gas guns and shells for the use of its regular employees in patrolling its transmission lines at a time when another company not affiliated with the Central Illinois Light Co., but with power lines near those of Central Illinois Light Co.'s, was undergoing a strike. Mr. Eugene E. Scott, business manager of local No. 72 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (an affiliate of A. F. of L.) has commented upon this specific charge and wired the newspapers in which the same were published, as follows:

"Regarding Mr. Edward J. Flynn's statement in your paper this morning, have conducted negotiations with Central Illinois Light Co. for many years as business manager, local No. 702, of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (A. F. of L.). Practically all their operating employees are members of our union. This company has never used tear gas or other weapon. As stated by me previously, their labor policy has been and is "1,000 percent satisfactory."

The article states that "Southern Indiana Gas & Electric did business with the Railway Audit and Inspection Bureau * * *" as though some stigma was attached to that fact. But none does attach. In response to a questionnaire sent out by the La Follette committee, the company submitted, under oath, records which showed clearly that Railway Audit & Inspection Co. was employed for the sole purpose of checking street railway and bus operators in the collection of fares, and the proper operation of streetcars and busses. This sentence is another instance of leaving the impression that some violation of labor rights occurred, when, in fact, the employment had nothing to do with labor. Sworn evidence submitted to the La Follette committee to which presumably the anonymous author had access showed the company to be innocent of spying upon labor.

The article suggests that the Georgia Power Co. contract with an affiliate of the A. F. of L. was entered into for the purpose of securing the assistance of the A. F. of L. in fighting T. V. A. This suggestion is attributed to a correspondent of the New York newspaper PM. The absurdity of this claim is disclosed by the fact that there have been A. F. of L. contracts in effect for street-railway employees of Georgia Power Co. since as early as 1912 and for electrical employees of Georgia Power Co. since 1919.

The New Republic charges that two companies, Alabama Power Co. and Consumers Power Co., have been brought to trial and found guilty of interfering with the rights of their employees.

In the case of Alabama Power Co. the N. L. R. B. ordered the company to cease and desist recognizing an employees' association, which the company had not recognized for more than a year, to refrain from recognizing an independent union which it had never recognized, and to refund amounts deducted from pay checks on authorization of individual employees. It is difficult to conceive in what respect the company interfered with the rights of employees unless we accept as a basis for that charge the fact that the Board ordered the company to cease doing certain things which it never had done. It should always be borne in mind that the policy of the company with respect to the organization of its employees is, and always has been, that the question should be determined by a majority of the employees themselves. The company has cooperated with governmental agencies in conducting consent elections in which the employees, on the only two occasions on which the question of representation has arisen, had the opportunity to express by secret ballot their free choice. That policy has met the general approval of the employees. The relations between the management and the employees have been satisfactory for more than a quarter of a century.

In the case of the Consumers Power Co., a strike occurred because a C. I. O. affiliate refused to consent to an election or otherwise to demonstrate that it had been chosen by a majority of the employees it claimed to represent. Notwithstanding negotiations were in progress, a strike was called.

Trouble continued for some time as a result of such refusal, and eventually two additional labor organizations began to contend for the right to represent the employees. It has been the policy of the company to recognize as the sole bargaining agent for its operating, maintenance, and construction employees any organization which may receive a majority vote in the election held to determine such representation. The entire trouble is due to the failure of the National Labor Relations Board and to the unions themselves in being unable to determine which union shall have the right to represent the employees. The company has been willing at all times to deal with whichever union secures the right to represent the employees.

The Consumers Power Co. was reluctant to speak about strike occurrences, saying that an election had been held to determine which of the unions represents a majority of its employees, but neither union was shown to have such majority and another election was about to be held and a discussion of the past occurrences inquired about might create feeling among its employees which now seems to be entirely allayed, but when shown the article in the September 16 copy of the New Republic wherein it is charged that "the actions of Consumers Power, coupled with threats of perjury charges by the grand jury officers, 'so intimidated the employees that they now fear to employ counsel or take any action to protect their constitutional rights.' Employees were arrested without warrants, held incommunicado for as long as 5 days, and not permitted to notify even their families or closest relatives of their whereabouts," the company felt obligated to speak with reference to that charge.

Mr. Wilson Arthur, vice president of the company, stated that there were three incidents of serious strike trouble. In the first there was a plot to dynamite some of the company's property and four men were apprehended, viz, Don A. Hackett, a substation operator and vice president of the C. I. O. union; Dan Robinson, a lineman; and two outsiders were involved. One of the outsiders was named Tom Ficken and the other Tony Herod. Dan Robinson pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to sabotage and was sentenced to serve from 2 to 5 years. Don Hackett pleaded guilty to a charge of perjury committed before the grand jury in connection with its investigation of the occurrence in that he testified that he had no knowledge of the plot, whereas, in fact, he had supplied the transportation to get the dynamite in Detroit and had supplied the money with which to buy it. He was fined $100 and put on probation for 3 years. Of the two outsiders, Tony Herod pleaded guilty and was fined $100 and put on probation, and Tom Ficken pleaded guilty to conspiracy and was sentenced to the penitentiary for 2 to 5 years. In the second incident a group of employees were apprehended and charged with conspiracy to sabotage in connection with the destruction of some of the company's lines in the neighborhood of Oscoda. The company's employees were Howard Stitt, Donald Addis, Grant Goddard, Harry Lee, Reuben Eady, William Restainer, and Monroe Causley. Causley was president of the C. I. O. union. Stitt, Addis, Goddard, and Lee pleaded guilty to conspiracy. Eady and Restainer demanded an examination before a justice of the peace and were bound over for trial. Causley demanded a separate trial, was tried in December 1939, and the jury disagreed. None of those who pleaded guilty have yet been sentenced. The third incident had to do with the destruction of property by tipping over transmission towers. Involved in this were Joseph Mason, Dan Robinson, Robert Lennox, Ace Mitchell, and Cecil Bow. Bow was secretary of the State council of the C. I. O. union. Joseph Mason pleaded guilty to malicious destruction of property, and was fined $100 and sentenced to 90 days in jail. Dan Robinson pleaded guilty to conspiracy and was sentenced to serve from 3½ to 5 years in prison. Robert Lennox, Ace Mitchell, and Bow pleaded not guilty and have not yet been tried. Have been informed that the charges against Bow had been dropped.

Alfred Timm was charged with conspiracy, tried and acquitted. He was put back to work by the company on acquittal, and an adjustment was made as to his back pay. Archie Mosher, arrested for malicious destruction of property, pleaded guilty, was fined $50 and placed on probation for 3 years.

All of these men who were charged with misdemeanors and crimes were immediately suspended. Upon their pleading guilty, or being found guilty, they were discharged. Those who have not yet been tried are still under suspension. The one that was acquitted has been reinstated.

With respect to the above-mentioned arrests, convictions, and acquittals no official or employee of the company took part with respect to the complaints, informations, or trials. The complaints, informations, and trials were made and conducted by the State police and the prosecuting officers of the counties in which the happenings occurred.

Referring again to the article in the New Republic of September 16, 1940 (p. 373), where it says that "Mr. Willkie, of course, does not and cannot flatly deny that some of his subsidiaries in Commonwealth & Southern did employ private detectives from Pinkerton's and other agencies engaged in industrial espionage," meaning to be understood that such private detectives were employed by Commonwealth & Southern subsidiaries for espionage purposes when in fact Mr. Willkie has specifically denied that charge and the charge is absolutely untrue. The facts in relation to employing detectives in all cases when they were employed are that they were employed in connection with street railway operations and not for espionage of laborers or union employees. This is illustrated by the telegram and reply, copies of which follow:

NEW YORK, September 4, 1940.

PRESTON ARKWRIGHT,
President, Georgia Power Co., Atlanta:

Re your Associated Press statement on Georgia Power Co.'s employment of Pinkerton Agency, please wire fuller explanation of service rendered. How many agents employed, how many dismissals or convictions of employees for fare thefts in past year? Has union ever protested against use of Pinkerton employees? What type fare collection boxes used by your company?

ALEXANDER L. CROSBY,
News editor, Federated Press.

ATLANTA, September 4, 1940.

ALEXANDER L. CROSBY,
News Editor, Federated Press, New York, N. Y.:

Answering questions your telegram, one agency employed at a time. Number of checkers various from time to time. Sometimes none. Sometimes a good many. We operate streetcars and busses in five cities. There were no dismissals or convictions of employees for theft in past year. Employees of this company as group are unusually honest. Question of dishonesty not involved. Merely checking fare registrations just as we check every person in company who handles money. Practice is universal. Union does not object to fare checkers no matter who supplies them. They have never raised any complaint about it at all. They welcome supervision of fare collections. We use Ohmer fare registers on streetcars and Johnson fare boxes on busses. Don't understand this matter to be an issue. Flynn charged that we used labor spies, which is an altogether different thing.

P. S. ARKWRIGHT.

MR. WILLKIE IN HIS OWN WORDS

This portion of the article is an effort to dispute what Mr. Willkie has said or written by quoting extracts from his speeches and writings and adding flippant remarks and drawing false conclusions; for example, the article (p. 328) says that Mr. Willkie said that the Wheeler-Rayburn bill as passed was "an unconstitutional process of control and destruction" and adds that "the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the law," while the facts are that the Supreme Court only passed upon the provisions of the act requiring registration and the Government earnestly contended in the presentation of the Bond & Share case that that question was the only one that required to be passed upon, the other questions could be liquidated when they arose; and the other provisions of the act have not been passed upon. It quotes (p. 329) Mr. Willkie as saying in a letter to Commonwealth & Southern stockholders that "the continued political propaganda, which has created a constant ferment for the lowering of rates when no operating companies of the Commonwealth & Southern system are earning a fair rate of return on the fair value of their property devoted to public use" and then intimates that such statement was untrue, while in truth and in fact it is absolutely true.

The best answer to this portion of the article is to invite a careful reading of it and a careful reading of Mr. Willkie's speeches and articles referred to and these the committee will be glad to supply, or designate where the same can be procured.

Mr. BRIDGES. Probably the most absurd and most self-evidently wrong statement made on this floor is the assertion that the Power Trust, so-called, engineered or had any part in Mr. Willkie's nomination. I have personal knowledge of efforts by his own business associates to dissuade him from running, on the ground that his nomination would make the utility industry a political football in this campaign. More than that, I have personal knowledge of strong influence brought to bear by interests closely identified with the utility industry to stop his nomination. The whole industry was paralyzed with fear of the political repercussions against it should Wendell Willkie, a utility executive, receive the nomination. Furthermore, there were within that industry powerful individuals who heartily disliked, envied, and feared Mr. Willkie because of his progressive and liberal policies as to rate reductions, as to labor policies, and his refusal to be a part of back-door political arrangements. His record caused invidious comparisons. Wendell Willkie was nominated in spite of and not because of the power interests. Anyone with a realistic viewpoint of the selfish interests of the utility groups should realize that.

POWER ISSUE A DUD

However, the utility industry as a whole was wrong, and—as was usually the case in his differences with them—Wendell Willkie was right. Every effort of the New Deal party to inject the alleged power issue into this campaign has failed. It does not click. The man who locked horns in personal dispute with Sam Insull cannot be identified in the public mind with the sort of speculator that Insull typified. It will not stick. The power issue is a dud.

Perhaps one additional reason for this is that the New Deal does not come before the bar of public opinion with clean hands. Its record on power is nothing to brag about.

Perhaps the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will explain to this body why there are 11 counties in west central Nebraska that have the local name of the "Norris desert"—a man-made desert, Mr. President, made by the New Deal at the insistence of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. They are three hydroelectric projects. Two of them are on a stream that in very recent times has been dry for more than a hundred miles for as much as 222 days in a single year—1935.

Now, as everybody knows, water for irrigation must be stored for use during the growing season; and, as everybody knows, electricity, to be valuable, must be deliverable 365 days in the year. These dams were used for power, so that little was left for irrigation. The two that are in operation are bankrupt, as the hearings of the Appropriations Committee of the House show.

The three of them have been reorganized by P. W. A. so that the 4-percent P. W. A. bonds with a 30-year maturity are exchanged for bonds the last of which will mature some time in the next century—2004 A. D. Instead of 4 percent, the Federal Treasury will receive at first one-half of 1 percent. Bear in mind, Mr. President, that the New Deal gave these projects as outright gifts from 30 to 45 percent of the cost, accepting the bonds that were defaulted for the balance.

These projects were first studied and unfavorably reported by the Army Engineers. They then were turned down by engineers sent out by the P. W. A. It is a matter of public record that at the complaint of the senior Senator from Nebraska, Harold Ickes, then Public Works Administrator, disregarded the engineering reports, and at the Senator's insistence poured $60,000,000 down that Nebraska "rat hole." The Senator, running with the President's support against a duly nominated Democrat, was reelected not long thereafter.

NORRIS' HOME TOWN REPUDIATES PUBLIC OWNERSHIP—EIGHT TO ONE

The projects are not so popular now, however. Recently at the instance of the Nebraska projects, a proposal was submitted to the voters of McCook, Nebr. This happens to be the home town of the Senator from Nebraska who formerly boasted of being the "father of Nebraska's 'little T. V. A.,'" as well as of the Tennessee project. On June 16 of this year the voters of the Senator's home town voted down the proposition of public ownership and purchase of power from the little T. V. A. by a ratio of 8 to 1.

One Nebraskan recently told me that Nebraska could well have paid the Federal Government what it spent on these projects to have stayed out of the State.

I have said and I now repeat that on the matter of public power the New Deal comes before the bar of public opinion with unclean hands. They have tried to hang on Wendell Willkie an obviously false charge of having destroyed a newspaper as the result of its opposition in a municipal ownership fight in Chattanooga 5 years ago. Not only is that tale an absurd falsehood, but the reverse of the coin brings out one of the best illustrations of the New Deal's abuse of official power to oppress and persecute the free press of the Nation at a time when the American press is one of the few remaining on this planet.

I here solemnly charge that the present Solicitor General not once but twice has abused his official position, first as ccunsel for the T. V. A. investigating committee, and, second, as Solicitor General, in attempts to injure and destroy a newspaper whose only afternoon rival was a paper in which Francis Biddle was financially interested. Had he succeeded he might have lined his pockets with the resulting dividends.

That is a serious charge and it must be proved to the hilt. I shall proceed to do so.

BIDDLE WOULD HAVE GAINED SUBSTANTIALLY

Francis Biddle, now New Deal Solicitor General, used his position as chief counsel of the T. V. A. congressional investigating committee to attempt to destroy a newspaper which was in competition with a second newspaper in which he was financially interested. Had he been successful his personal gain would have been substantial. Furthermore, for some months he has been using his present position as Solicitor General to harass and injure the successful newspaper. He was financially interested in a second opposition newspaper which suspended September 4 of this year.

And at the same time he takes rank with Harold Ickes as a New Deal praying mantis worshiping at the altar of the freedom of the press.

Born in Paris with the golden spoon of the Biddles in his mouth, he was generally known among his Groton classmates—just a couple of forms below little Frankie Roosevelt—as "Little Diddle" Biddle. How he acquired the nickname is attributed partly to euphony and partly to adolescent discernment of his compeers which, as so often happens, was justified by his later career.

The Chattanooga (Tenn.) News "folded"—journalese for newspaper death—on December 16, 1939. On June 27, 1940, Wendell Willkie became the Republican nominee for President. On July 29, 1940, for the first time in any newspaper, Mr. Willkie was charged with responsibility for the death of the Chattanooga News and with hyprocrisy in his support of a free press. The charge appeared in a journalistic sycophant of the New Deal in Philadelphia. It was followed up shortly afterward by John Carmody, Federal Works Administrator, who yields only to Harold Ickes as a New Deal political hatchet man. Thereafter, "Little Diddle" Biddle, still throwing paper wads after all these years, retold the tale in an admittedly political speech in Seattle. After that it was renewed in the New Deal "march of slime" recently published by the leftist New Republic. They were repeated on this floor by the senior Senator from Nebraska, who no doubt drew them from the New Republic.

The burden of these charges is that Mr. Willkie destroyed this newspaper because it opposed him. It is a falsehood. It is audacious because it is predicated wholly on the assumption that denials can never outrun a slander. It is a venomous falsehood because its manufacturer, Mr. Francis "Little Diddle" Biddle, was guilty of attempting what he now charges Mr. Willkie of having accomplished.

BIDDLE LISTED AS STOCKHOLDER

On October 11, 1939, Biddle was listed as one of the stockholders of the News, then virtually on its deathbed. The significance of this routine statement of ownership emerged in the news accounts which related the facts. Typical was the following from the Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal of October 18, 1939:

Judge Francis Biddle, counsel for the T. V. A. investigating committee in the 1938 probe, is one of the owners of the Chattanooga News.

This has been revealed in the statement of ownership published by the News, afternoon competitor of the Chattanooga Free Press, which Biddle "went after" most vigorously as being controlled by private power companies.

Biddle, a Philadelphia lawyer with definite New Deal leanings, was rewarded by the Roosevelt administration with a post as judge of the United States circuit court of appeals.

The Chattanooga phase of the T. V. A. investigation came unexpectedly, late in August 1938. The committee had been sitting here (Knoxville), but over the week end of August 20 Biddle was discovered in Chattanooga. Minority members of the committee said they knew of no business that would take Biddle there.

After executive sessions of the committee here, the following Monday Biddle announced the Chattanooga trip, and it was revealed he had urged it in a memorandum presented to Committee Chairman VIC DONAHEY (Democrat, Ohio) the previous Friday. The committee went to Chattanooga to investigate propaganda of the power companies.

There it was revealed Biddle had obtained two special investigators from other Government agencies who for some time had probed into the Chattanooga situation, even demanding data on financial affairs and advertising rates of the Free Press from its management.

Biddle directed much of his investigation against the Free Press, seeking to show it was favored and controlled by the Tennessee Electric Power Co., since sold. The News, a pro-New Deal newspaper, played up these attacks on its competitor.

The official report of the T. V. A. Investigating Committee also described the Free Press as having been favored by the power company.

But not until recently, when the News published its official statement of ownership, had there been so much as a whisper that Biddle was financially interested in the newspaper whose competitor he had attacked with such vigor.

The facts are more fully developed in the charges against Biddle on the floor of the House on August 12, 1940, by Hon. THOMAS A. JENKINS, who had served as a minority member of the T. V. A. Investigating Committee.

Briefly, Mr. JENKINS stated that without the knowledge of the committee, the chief investigators who—then or soon after—had a financial interest in Chattanooga News, had borrowed some snoopers from another Federal snooping agency to "go after" the News' afternoon rival, the Free Press. During the hearings, however, it developed that George Fort Milton, publisher of the News, had had the men hired to snoop on his rival publisher in his home, wining and dining them with conspiratorial hospitality.

The matter of "Diddle" Biddle's part ownership in the News was ably treated as far as Mr. JENKINS' knowledge of the situation then ran:

> To make a long story short, the facts brought out in the investigation indicated clearly that it was a wild-goose chase gotten into purely for spite. Francis Biddle should not have made that investigation without the knowledge and approval of the investigating committee. The fact that he did arrange for it clandestinely condemns him in the mind of any fair-minded person. If he owned stock in the Chattanooga News at the time he called this clandestine investigation of the Chattanooga Free Press, his conduct was extremely reprehensible. He should be called to give what the facts are in that connection. If he did not own the stock at that time but had bargained for it, his conduct would be more reprehensible. If during these investigations he made any arrangements to buy stock in this company, his conduct would also be reprehensible. And if he bought the stock after the investigation was over, I should like to know what his excuse would be for making such a purchase because he could not have made it for investment purposes because it was well known at the time when the committee was in Chattanooga that the Chattanooga News was on its last legs financially. The News blew up on about the 1st of December 1939, which was about 2 months after the statement appeared showing that Biddle had stock in it.

But Mr. JENKINS—and the public—had not been apprised of the continuation of the Biddle vendetta against the Chattanooga Free Press down to the present. Having lost his chance at a jack pot in the Chattanooga News by killing off the Free Press and thus multiplying his investment many times, Biddle neither forgave nor forgot.

Milton, foreclosed News publisher, tried once more to establish a newspaper in the town where two previous generations of his family had been successful publishers. His Chattanooga Tribune was launched in the spring of 1940 and died of anemia on September 4.

That Biddle was a part owner in this new newspaper is attested by the statement of the September 23 New Republic, which says, speaking of the Chattanooga Tribune:

> It had more than 600 stockholders, including Francis Biddle, Senator NORRIS, and others throughout America and Great Britain.

Rushing to the aid of his pal, fellow conspirator, and former and present copartner, the Solicitor General did a high diddle Biddle with the grave responsibilities of his high office.

He sent another pair of snoopers—from his own Department—to Chattanooga last spring, shortly after the birth of the sickly Tribune.

They had instructions to "get something on the Free Press." They did.

It was a trumped-up charge that Biddle dared not submit to a Federal grand jury, of attempting to obtain "exclusive afternoon advertising contracts" at a time when the Free Press was the only afternoon newspaper in the town—for which he refrains from bringing charges against many of the exclusively afternoon newspapers in the country. Biddle's Milton-inspired charges are in the form of an "information" of cooked-up diatribe, designed to breathe life into the already expiring corpse of a second Milton newspaper failure—which was born and died after Wendell Willkie and his allegedly sinister influences had left the scene.

He gives lip service to a free press but makes a mental reservation against the Free Press, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Now the above résumé sketches in the bold outlines of the picture. Biddle, either for reward or promise of reward—in the form of stock ownership—but surely not out of pure coincidence, tried to smear a newspaper in whose rival he was or was about to be financially interested. Furthermore, when he became financially interested in the successor newspaper, the Tribune, he again used his office to harass the Free Press, this time with flimsy charges which he did not dare submit to a Federal grand jury. The Tribune came to life and died long months after the Willkie power company had been sold to the T. V. A. Biddle now says that the newspaper in which he admittedly was a loser when it "folded" was destroyed by Wendell Willkie—but he remained silent in his accusation until after Mr. Willkie becomes Republican candidate for President. And he, by his performance of chambermaid service to the New Deal, stands to lose the spotlight of his high office if Wendell Willkie wins. These are the motives behind the postdated post mortem on the death of the Chattanooga News.

This amateur of law and letters and politics, this gilded scion of Philadelphia's main line, comes before the bar of public opinion, with hands unstained by toil, with lily fingers well manicured—but unclean, unclean with the filth of the desecration of his high office by violating one of America's most sacred democratic traditions, freedom of the press.

Nevertheless, let us examine all of the facts. Let us see if there is one iota of truth in this barrow of bile they have tried to heap on Wendell Willkie. Even from a Biddle, charges so grave should bear examination.

Since the New Deal descended upon the Nation more than 100 daily newspapers have died. Increased costs and reduced revenues together with radio competition have been the principal causes of this situation. The bitter animosity of the President and his advisers toward the press has injured the press but not so much as the economic strangulation of the business life of the Nation under the New Deal has resulted in a starvation diet for many newspapers.

Ironically enough one of the victims of New Deal economics was one of the strongest supporters of the New Deal, the Chattanooga News. It is perhaps only fair to the New Deal to qualify its responsibility for the death of the News by adding that its demise was undoubtedly hastened materially if unwittingly by its publisher, Mr. Milton.

Until his nomination by the Republican Party, the name of Wendell L. Willkie as the man who had killed this Cock Robin was never even mentioned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I know the Senator from New Hampshire does not want to make a statement which is not correct. This matter came before the utilities commission in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall deal with that in a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The commission found Mr. Willkie's company, in which Mr. Willkie's name was used hundreds of times, guilty on 842 counts, if I remember the number correctly, for having given special consideration to the rival of the Chattanooga News, the Free Press, which is now generally understood to be owned by Mr. Willkie's company. He was found guilty of various kinds of violations on 842 counts—for not collecting light bills, for lending money, or furnishing money, to the extent of $10,000, to break up Mr. Milton's newspaper. The facts are all set out, and I know the Senator does not want to make the statement that Mr. Willkie's name was not in it. Mr. Willkie's name was on almost every tongue in Chattanooga for several months during that particular conflict.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not want to have any more argument with the Senator, because I wish to finish my statement. However, I wish to say that I have documentary proof of everything I have said. I have photographs and evidence, and I can prove everything I say here, and in a moment I shall proceed to answer what the Senator has said.

Now, it develops from the minds of New Deal propagandists that the death of the News was the result of a deep plot, and the villain of the piece was none other than the Republican nominee. Moreover, this proves—according to the tale they tell—that Mr. Willkie is an enemy of freedom of the press and a double-dyed hypocrite from protesting his faith in that freedom.

Mr. Willkie's Tennessee Electric Power Co. used its stockholders' money to subsidize one newspaper to influence an election; it wrecked another newspaper advocating rural electrification, and organized a so-called Citizens' and Taxpayers' Association to defeat the efforts of the people of Chattanooga to secure cheap electricity—and this is the power magnate who as Candidate Willkie recently told a Cheyenne audience that "a free and untrammeled press is one of the guarantees of democracy."

Thus the note is pitched for the New Deal smear campaign by none other than John M. Carmody, Federal Works Administrator, speaking at Utica, N. Y., on August 12. He had followed up an editorial blast from one of the few remaining supporters of the New Deal, the Philadelphia Record of July 29, which flatly stated that one of the subsidiaries of the company of which Mr. Willkie was president had killed the Chattanooga News by withdrawing its advertising and transferring it to the Chattanooga Free Press.

Can any of the mud bombardment against Wendell L. Willkie stick? Not if this Chattanooga News yarn is the best they can dig up against him. Because their story simply does not stand up. In fact, the publicity may rebound not only to Mr. Willkie's credit but also turn up a pretty smelly mess of New Deal rottenness. It may even happen that some of the mud aimed at Mr. Willkie may miss him entirely and land smack in the face of the President's own tame millionaire, the Solicitor General, Francis Biddle.

This is an old tale in Chattanooga. It is the story of the rearguard battle of the private electrical companies in the Tennessee Valley against the invasion of the Federal Government into the field of private enterprise by the duplication of existing power facilities and the double subsidization of the sale of electricity.

Let Wendell Willkie sum up the story as he stated it 2 years ago on August 24, 1938, when his company, Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, was said to have contributed to the support of a committee of stockholders in the power company, taxpayers, and citizens of Chattanooga during a campaign for a municipal light plant in that city. The Federal Government had offered to pay 45 percent of the cost and to take over city bonds for the balance. T. V. A. had offered to supply power which it could sell at half cost by charging off to flood control and navigation one half of its capital costs.

"Sure," said Mr. Willkie, "we contributed to the committee that was fighting our battle and I only regret we did not make larger contributions."

NEW DEAL STACKS THE CARDS

There was a bitter campaign. Needless to say, with the cards stacked against it, the private company lost. Let us go into some of the details of it and the charges growing out of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator states probably in part the facts, but the Senator ought to state in that connection that Mr. Willkie went further than that. He had several score men in his employ, I think several hundred, registered from vacant lots in Chattanooga in order to vote in that election.

Mr. BRIDGES. Can the Senator prove that charge?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes. It is in the very record the Senator has.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not admit that charge. I do not believe it can be proved. I shall continue.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. BRIDGES. First. But did the company subsidize the Free Press as Carmody alleges "to influence the election"? The election was held on March 12, 1935. The Free Press at that time and for 18 months afterward was a free "throw away" weekly newspaper chiefly carrying the grocery advertisements for the 30 or 40 home stores of Roy McDonald, who also owned the Free Press. At the time of the election and for a long time afterward the local power company had never placed an advertisement in that paper, as the files will show. Mr. Carmody either misinformed his audience or was misinformed by somebody who knew better.

Second. The badly "misinformed" Mr. Carmody stated that the local power company "wrecked another newspaper"—the News. The electric company did not withdraw its advertising from the News until after the election campaign. It did not renew its annual contract when it expired on April 1, 1935. The News already was going downhill, losing prestige and circulation; it had maintained a steady policy of venomous vituperation against the local company. Yet it capitalized the loss of this advertising revenue by an assumption of martyrdom.

But the loss of this one advertising account did not and could not have killed the News. In the last full year in which the company advertised in the News, 1934, the newspaper received from the company a gross revenue of $8,182. And the auditor's report, after the paper quit 5 years later showed that it had been losing money at the rate of $40,000 a year for the last 2 years of its life. It would have still been bankrupt, had the electric company continued its advertising the 5 years more—and had added the amount it spent with the Free Press when it became a daily.

OWN FAMILY FORECLOSED ON NEWS

The bondholders foreclosed after the bonds had been in default from May to December 1939. These bondholders consisted chiefly of Mr. Milton's stepmother and half sisters. Could it have been that his own family decided to sell him out because they had lost confidence in his ability to make a go of the paper he had inherited from his father? Could it have been that Milton just failed to be a successful publisher and, by his own inability, killed the paper himself?

Third. Did the local utility company pay the Chattanooga Free Press a concealed subsidy by padding its advertising rates by 25 percent? Did it pay several times the comparable rate? It did not. The company had a regular rate for regular advertising which was 3 cents per inch lower than it had paid the News. It did, however, pay 25 percent higher for Sunday advertising in colors, exactly as every other advertiser had to pay for the use of this medium. It also paid a premium for position in the Sunday rotogratvure section. The News offered nothing comparable. It had no Sunday edition, no color-printing equipment, no rotogravure section. Sirloin costs more than hamburger.

Fourth. How about the charge that the company allowed the Free Press and the grocery stores owned by the paper's owner to run delinquent without the 5-percent penalty for delinquency? This is true and it is also true that if the company had forced payments the law allows a large portion of the city of Chattanooga at one time or another would have been without electric service. Had it shut down factories, which during the depression had been months in arrears, the unemployment situation would have been far more tragic than it was. The discrimination was not on the part of the company but on the part of the T. V. A. influenced State Railroad Commission. That commission made a separate offense of each month's delinquency of each store in the chain and of the bills of the Free Press. The punishment would have been close to a million dollars had the courts taken the charges seriously. They were dismissed, of course. However, the Railroad Commission, when it focused attention to this single case of delinquency and ignored the cases of several hundred other delinquents including cities, churches, factories, and stores which, equally delinquent, could, and with impartial justice should, have been cited for a total penalty to the company of about $18,000,000. The commission, however, singled out only the one newspaper which had lifted its voice against T. V. A.

Fifth. What is the truth about the two local committees opposing each other in the municipal bond power election of March 1935? Mr. Willkie had been candid about his part in that fight. Mr. Milton's News is almost equally candid.

EDITOR BOASTS NEWS' FAKE COMMITTEE

Sixth. Charles Poe, managing editor of the News in the June 29, 1935, editor and publisher, went into great detail on how this election had been "put over" by the News. Having experimented in the formation of a fake committee for a previous newspaper crusade, Mr. Milton had the technique perfected for the bond election.

I quote from the article by Mr. Poe, managing editor of the News:

Well, if you are still interested in an occasional crusade for some worthy cause, there is a method which has been successfully used, which can accomplish the desired reform without taking on the appearance of a promotional drive by the paper. It has recently demonstrated its merit in two campaigns pushed through by the Chattanooga News, owned by the progressive George F. Milton. * * *

About a year ago the News had one of its own periodic outbursts of indignation against fee-grabbing. Stories told of how little chance for justice the poor Negroes and whites have in the fee courts. But this time a few men in Chattanooga decided something ought to be done about it. They met quietly and decided that a crusade should be launched. The Civitan Club adopted a resolution, little different from hundreds of others which had been adopted in past years. The squires saw nothing to worry about, but they hadn't been sitting in on the meetings.

The Civitans asked other civic organizations to join with them in setting up a Committee of One Hundred to be composed of leading citizens representing every organization in the city. Mr. Milton was chosen to be chairman of this committee. Subcommittees were created on legal reform, organization, finance, and public opinion.

But what was this Chattanooga movement? A city-wide crusade in which an indignant citizenry was roused to the point of action? By no means. The Committee of One Hundred was nothing more than a screen behind which operated Editor Milton and a few sympathetic men of kindred mind.

The next movement undertaken by the News was the voting by the people of $8,000,000 in bonds to acquire a municipal electric-power system to secure cheap power from the Tennessee Valley Authority. To accomplish this purpose the News instigated an organization known as the Public Power League, supposed to be composed of just about everybody in town, but actually being only an organization of a dozen or so men, through which the News could work up public opinion to accomplish its ends. Committee or speakers, organization finance, public information, and all the other trappings were there.

Mr. Poe failed to add that the News, belaboring the power company, itself violated the State Corrupt Practices Act on two counts: First, as a Tennessee corporation it had made illegal contributions to the election campaign valued at $1,200 at its regular advertising rates, in no less than seven donated full-page advertisements, listed as gifts of the corporation; second, in failing to report such contributions.

LIFTED POLL TAX FOR ELECTION

But the pay-off on the Chattanooga power election was that for the first time in the post-Civil War history of the State an election was held in Tennessee without benefit of poll tax. For this particular election carpetbag T. V. A. lobbyists were able to induce the Tennessee Legislature to relax its fear of the Negro and poor-white votes in the special law required for the election. More than 9,000 more votes were cast in the power election than in the regular municipal election held simultaneously.

A dramatic highlight which exposes the hypocrisy of the New Deal is the public statement issued last week by the Democratic chairman at Chattanooga calling on all loyal new dealers not only to cancel their subscriptions but also to boycott the advertising of the Chattanooga Times because it had announced its support of Wendell Willkie.

To save time, I ask that an editorial from the Knoxville Journal, dated September 27, 1940, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(From the Knoxville Journal of September 27, 1940)

ATTEMPTED BOYCOTT OF CHATTANOOGA TIMES FOR SUPPORT OF WILLKIE TYPICAL OF NEW DEAL MENTALITY

In neighboring Chattanooga a few days ago, publishers of the respected Chattanooga Times announced, in a thoughtful and well-written editorial, the paper's support of Wendell Willkie for President. Its determination happened to be at variance with its established political affiliation with the Democratic Party, although the accent has always been on the word "independent" where the Time's political policy has been concerned.

The newspaper's decision, however, created some notable repercussions, not the least of which was a public demand on the part of the Democratic manager for Hamilton County that every loyal new dealer should forthwith boycott The Times. We quote the first paragraph of the boycott demand of State Senator Fletcher Morgan, which embodies the intent of the whole:

"I sincerely trust that every loyal Democrat and every supporter of President Roosevelt will cancel their subscription to the Chattanooga Times until, at least, after the November election."

That's the typical New Deal spirit, of course, and the Times was smart enough to print the boycott threat on its front page, knowing that the great majority of its readers would resent the attempt at intimidation, regardless of whether they were for Willkie or Roosevelt. Senator Morgan, by his statement, earns the title of blood brother in the New Deal, because he clearly subscribes to the New Deal credo that "all who are not with us must be destroyed."

It will occur to the discerning reader, however, that Senator Morgan is not being very consistent in attempting to penalize the Times for supporting a Republican instead of a Democrat in the present election.

In his own camp, in fact, on the ticket he is now supporting, there are candidates who have made far more remarkable changes of front position than the one he complains about so bitterly in the case of the Times.

For example, we would call the Hamilton Countian's attention to a certain resolution introduced in the United States Senate by Senator LA FOLLETTE in 1928. It reads as follows:

"Resolved, that it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our Government, and that a departure from this custom would be unwise and unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our great institutions."

That was a splendid statement of conviction in 1928 when it was passed in fear of a third term attempt by Calvin Coolidge. It expressed the views of a great majority of Americans. Now, 12 years later, it is still a splendid statement of convictions.

The thing that Senator Morgan should note, as a stickler for consistency in all things, is the fact that in 1928 Senator K. D. MCKELLAR was included in those voting with enthusiasm for this resolution, but that today Tennessee's senior Senator sees the issue in a different light. What was a patriotic resolution "fraught with peril to our institutions" when it referred to Coolidge is now, in the eyes of our own MCKELLAR, the childish prattle of the futile past.

Or if Senator Morgan wishes to pursue the matter of consistency further, let him consider another phase of Senator MCKELLAR's positions—for example, that on public power.

A few days ago our senior Senator delivered a tirade on the floor of the Senate in which he berated Wendell Willkie roundly for his position on the public power question. The Senator undertook to draw what he considered a striking contrast between the Willkie record as a utilities executive and the Willkie position as a Presidential candidate.

Yet, as was pointed out on the floor of the Senate, Senator MCKELLAR's views on the public power question have been distinctly revised in the last few years.

In 1924 our own and Senator Morgan's Senator MCKELLAR uttered these fateful words in connection with debate on Henry Ford's proposal to buy Muscle Shoals:

"I do not believe that the Government ought to be put in the power business if it is possible to avoid it."

And a little further on in the debate he said again in connection with the Ford offer:

"I am opposed to municipal operation or governmental operation. I would dislike to see that plant go into the hands of the Government for operation, because I do not know what would happen to it. * * * I cannot bring myself, with my rearing and education along political lines, to believe that Government operation of the plant can be as successful as private operation."

Now we would not be misunderstood. We do not deny to Senator MCKELLAR the right, as an American citizen, to change his mind, either on the matter of electing the same President for a third, fourth, or fifth term, or upon that of public ownership of power. We might question his motives, we might suspect that politics entered into both changes, but we concede him the right to make his change of mind.

We do not believe, however, that at least up to this time it is the exclusive privilege of a new dealer to change his position to any public question, which is what the attempted boycott in Chattanooga implies.

So far as the attempt to cut subscriptions on the Times for supporting Willkie is concerned, it won't amount to a hill of beans. But the attitude of those sponsoring the boycott is so typical of the New Deal mentality that it is worthy of notice.

Mr. BRIDGES. Ironically enough, the occasion for my remarks arises during what is known as National Newspaper Week, a period dedicated by the press of the Nation to that sacred American principle of democracy, freedom of the press. In Germany the newspapers may say anything they please, so long as it also pleases the Government. That is the New Deal perversion of the American principle of freedom of the press.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for its attention and courtesy. I am sorry that I had to rush through this matter so rapidly in order to save the time of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to reply this afternoon because it is so late; but while the Senator from New Hampshire is present—I understand he is going away tomorrow—I wish to call his attention to a statement which he made on September 23 concerning the arrest of some man for writing a poem, or a parody upon some other poem, in ridicule of the President of the United States. I sent the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 23, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT P. WILLIAMS,
Judge, Municipal Court, Knoxville, Tenn.

Senator BRIDGES has called attention to an article in the Journal stating that you had fined and imprisoned a man for writing and publishing a parody on President Roosevelt. Wire me succinctly facts in case night letter my expense.

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

I received the following telegram in reply, on the same date:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., September 23, 1940.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

Man went to foundry of Sanford Day and started trouble with employees with circulars. Foreman called in police, who arrested him, brought him into court, and he was fined $10 for breach of peace and not for circulating poetry.

ROBERT P. WILLIAMS, City Judge.

In that connection, in order to keep the RECORD straight, I desire to insert in the RECORD two letters, one from Mr. Lynn Bomar, Director of Public Safety of the City of Knoxville, and one from Mr. H. Staley, a citizen of Knoxville, together with an article published in the Knoxville Sentinel a day or two later. The date does not appear on the clipping. These documents show the facts concerning the arrest.

There being no objection, the letters and the article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF KNOXVILLE, TENN.,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY,
September 27, 1940.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing you herewith an article appearing in the Knoxville News Sentinel issue, September 27, 1940. I notice in this article that you say that you do not know whether the Senator from New Hampshire has obtained all the facts in the case. I say here and now that the Senator from New Hampshire has not gone to the trouble of finding out just what the arrest was all about.

As Director of Safety of the City of Knoxville, and having direct supervision over the police and fire departments of this city, I believe I am qualified to know what happened in this particular case, therefore, I am giving you below a complete history of what happened.

On the morning of September 10, 1940, a call was received by the desk sergeant at the Knoxville police station from Mr. Clemmons, foreman at the Sanford-Day Iron Works in Knoxville, stating that there was a man down at his plant distributing circulars concerning President Roosevelt and that his employees resented the circulars being distributed and Mr. Clemmons requested that a police car be sent immediately to the plant for fear that bloodshed might prevail over the incident. This man "Bill Manis" who lives at 1013 Woodberry Street, Knoxville, Tenn., has no visible means of support, therefore, police officers Ammons and McManus upon arrival at the scene, arrested Mr. Manis and placed a charge against him of vagrancy and disorderly conduct. There was absolutely no charge preferred against this man concerning any literature or poem regarding the President.

This case was tried in city court and the defendant was fined $10 for breach of peace by City Judge Robert P. Williams, of Knoxville.

Again, I say to you that there was no political issue in this arrest.

I trust that the information in my letter will give you enough material with which to answer the Republican Senator from New England and to defend the law-enforcement agencies of the good old Volunteer State.

I trust that you are enjoying good health, and knowing you as I do, I know you will continue to give them hell when any slurs are cast upon the citizens of our good old State.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Respectfully,

LYNN BOMAR,
Director Public Safety.

SOUTHERN COFFIN & CASKET CO.,
Knoxville, Tenn., September 27, 1940.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: Upon reading this morning's issue of the "dyed in the wool" Republican Knoxville Journal, I noticed where you had quite an argument with Senator BRIDGES in regard to the arrest of William Manis for circulating a parody poem about President Roosevelt.

For fear that no one else has enough interest in the case to give you the correct information, I have taken it upon myself to give you the facts.

Our police records show that this man entered the Sanford Day Iron Works and was creating a disturbance, and the foreman called the police and had him arrested. He was fined $10 in the city court.

Trusting that this information may be of some service to you, I remain,

Yours for a third term,

H. STALEY.

CASE OF KNOXVILLE MAN AND PARODY ON F. D. R. IS BROUGHT UP IN SENATE—SENATOR BRIDGES, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, BRINGS MANIS STORY ON FLOOR AND MCKELLAR DEFENDS DECISION—BARKLEY THINKS MAN "GOT OFF VERY LIGHTLY"

The case of Bill Manis, Knoxville man who was jailed and fined for distributing a satirical poem on President Roosevelt, was brought up in the United States Senate recently and is now a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is a record of a Republican Senator from New England arguing politics in the Senate with a Democratic Senator from the South.

Mr. Manis lives at 1013 Woodbury Street. He paid a $10 fine for "breach of peace" in city court after being jailed by police, who answered a call from a mill that Mr. Manis was creating a disturbance there.

Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, was responsible for bringing the Manis case before Congress. Referring to a newspaper clipping of the story, Senator BRIDGES rose in the Senate and, taking the floor from Senator HOLT, of West Virginia, said: "The Senator might be interested in some articles which I have in my hand. I refer to an article published in Knoxville on September 11, 1940. I have since somewhat investigated it personally.

"It says that a man down there by the name of William Manis was placed in jail because he circulated a parody having reference to Mr. Roosevelt.

DICTATOR METHODS

"The Senator from West Virginia, I believe, will recognize that this is getting into about the state of affairs that are found in dictator countries, and the methods used are the methods used by certain dictator countries, when a man in circulating a parody adopted from a poem by Kipling, goes to jail and pays a fine in Knoxville, which is located in the very liberal State of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

"I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee approves that kind of justice in his State, where a man goes to jail and pays a fine simply because he circularizes a little poem, a parody on President Roosevelt? Is that the type of thing going on in this country today? Are we living under such conditions?"

Senator MCKELLAR replied, "Of course, I do not know anything about it except what I have just heard from the Senator from New Hampshire. I have not seen the article from which he quoted. I must say, however, that if a man has been fined in Tennessee he probably was fined for violation of law."

Senator BRIDGES. "Would the Senator consider it a violation of law if a man wrote and circulated a little parody which has nothing wrong in it, about Mr. Willkie, and that he ought to go to jail for doing so? Do they not have a sense of humor in Tennessee?"

Senator MCKELLAR. "I would not consider it a violation of law and I do not think a man should be sent to jail for saying the same thing about President Roosevelt. I do not know, however, that the Senator from New Hampshire has gotten all the facts in connection with the case.

CAN APPEAL CASE

"I have no doubt that if the man to whom the Senator from New Hampshire refers was sent to jail in Tennessee it was because he had committed an offense against the Tennessee law, and under a proper application of the law, he was sent to jail. All the man has to do, in such circumstances, is to appeal the case."

Discussion continued and Senator BRIDGES was finally asked to read the poem, which he did, and it was incorporated into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

After the poem had been read, Senator HOLT said, "Does the Senator mean they sent him to jail for circulating that poem?"

Senator BARKLEY. "Does the Senator mean that he got off with a jail sentence for writing that sort of stuff. He is certainly lucky to get off with merely a jail sentence for writing that sort of thing."

GOT OFF LIGHT

Senator MCKELLAR. "I think a man who will deliberately tell a falsehood about the President of the United States such as that contained in the poem which the Senator from New Hampshire read got off very lightly with a $10 fine."

"What was done was done under the Democratic judicial system down there, and I simply bring it up to show that we are getting into a certain trend in this country."

Senator MCKELLAR. "We have a Republican Federal judge there who might look after the matter for the Republican Party."

Senator BRIDGES. "I will say that the Senator from Tennessee is going to help them as much as he can and as fast as he can by adding judges."

Senator MCKELLAR. "Yes; we are going to add them when appointment of judges is necessary to be made in a Democratic administration, in precisely the same way that the Republicans added Republican judges when vacancies arose under Republican administrations."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator has inserted certain matters in the RECORD, let me say that, as the Senator has pointed out, the charge was that of disturbing the peace; but the disturbance of the peace consisted of distributing circulars which contained a parody on Mr. Roosevelt. That was the basis of the charge. So the Senator has not told all the story.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine that the judge probably knew more about the facts than does my good friend from New Hampshire. I happen to know the judge. He is one of the most honorable, upright, and fair men in the city of Knoxville. I am quite sure he would tell me the truth. I sent the telegram in perfect good faith to ascertain the facts. I did not know the facts when the Senator discussed the matter on September 23, and I so stated; but I ascertained the facts. I have put into the RECORD a newspaper article published in the town, the facts as given by the judge, and the facts as given by others. I think they are probably more nearly correct than is my good friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Just one further reference, so long as the Senator from Tennessee has opened up the matter. I wish to point out that even in the newspaper article and in his explanation it is stated that the basis for the charge of disturbing the peace was the distribution of circulars. We do not know what was on the circulars, but I say there was on the circulars the parody on Mr. Roosevelt; and inasmuch as there was nothing obscene and nothing wrong with the poem, the man could not be fined on that basis. It was necessary to make a charge, so he was fined for disturbing the peace. The disturbance of the peace consisted in distributing the circulars with the parody on Roosevelt.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was fined and sent to jail, and did not appeal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the man was guilty of disturbing the peace, I do not suppose the Senator from New Hampshire would want the case dismissed merely because he had a poem in his pocket.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Victor Russell, of Beaumont, Tex., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 21, with headquarters at Port Arthur, Tex., in place of William H. Gilliland, deceased.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Roy G. Paschal, of Little Rock, Ark., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Arkansas, to fill an existing vacancy.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry senior surgeons, surgeons, assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons for promotion in the Public Health Service.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry doctors to be assistant surgeons in the Public Health Service.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS—VICTOR RUSSELL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination of Victor Russell to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 21. This nomination was reported earlier in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAHER in the Chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that Mr. Russell has been my secretary for more than 20 years. I take this occasion to thank him for the fidelity and efficiency with which he has performed the duties devolving upon him while at the head of my office staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTER FRANK S. PERKINS' NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank S. Perkins to be postmaster at Fremont, Nebr., which had been previously passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that this nomination be again passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, October 3, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we pray that the remembrance of Thee may fill our breasts with peace and confidence. When we forget Thee and become unmindful of Thy mercies do Thou bear patiently with us. Let this truth challenge us: No career can be defeated and no life can be a failure that seeks and strives to do Thy will. Let Thy hand still lead us on in strength and courage. Cast out of our lives the things that cause grief and harm. O Father of light and truth, in these days of great responsibilities, may all our powers be consecrated to the public service. We praise Thee that civilization is not dead. "A thousand years in Thy sight are as yesterday when they are past." We pray that the passion of timelessness may surge through our thoughts. The chivalrous, courageous soldier bodies of the immortal yesterdays consecrate the soil and dust of this old earth. They walked through poisoned flames across the shuddering battlefields and made answer to righteous duty. Almighty One, increase the power of our faith in the ultimate destiny of democracy and the kingdom of our Lord. Speak, Lord, that the vandals of truth and humanity may not turn backward the immortal timepiece nor hold up the chariots of God. In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9581. An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4316. An act to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

S. 4341. An act to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) entitled "An act for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) entitled "An act to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3437. An act for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a constituent on the Elliott Roosevelt appointment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief statement I secured from the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks three times in the RECORD and to include therein certain statistics and quotations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan, Mr. HESS, and Mr. SECREST were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief article by Roy Howard, the publisher, and comments thereon by the Japanese Ambassador.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter and two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes today after the disposition of the legislative program for the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I see in the Times-Herald this morning that President Roosevelt yesterday declined to be drawn into the controversy currently raging over the Army giving his son Elliott a captain's commission in the Procurement Division of the Air Corps.

I overheard a conversation yesterday by a Democratic Member of Congress the substance of which related to an effort on his part to have a man appointed a captain in the Army, a man who had distinguished himself in service. The War Department told this Congressman that no man could be given a captaincy except through the regular channels. The Congressman asked how Elliott Roosevelt became a captain, and he was told his commission "came from the White House."

If the newspapers want to know where it came from, they can just report that it came from the White House.

Let me make the further observation that those who wear the purple robes in this country are the ones who seem to be favored in these appointments—they and the economic royalists. Now we know where they live. The White House says we must place the favorite sons in service in the ordnance departments, but we will conscript your sons and put them in the ranks. Where is the dictator who places himself in such a position that he can do for his son what he does not want the poor man's son to have?

[Here the gavel fell.]

APPLY THE GASOLINE TAX TO ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, after a conference with officials of the Ohio Good Roads Federation, I prepared a bill to establish a permanent basis for Federal assistance to the States in road construction.

At the present time funds collected from the Federal tax on gasoline and oil are placed in the general fund of the Treasury, and appropriations for roads are made from any available funds regardless of where they were collected.

Under the bill I have introduced, the Federal taxes collected from the motorist would be placed in a separate account in the Treasury and the full amount expended for road construction.

At the present time Federal funds can be spent only on Federal highways, and the State must match the Federal grant dollar for dollar. This takes so much of the State's road funds that many State highways, such as Ohio Routes 7 and 78, are badly neglected.

Under my bill, the State would continue to match the Federal funds, but 40 percent of the total sum could be spent in the improvement of State routes. Only 60 percent would need to be expended on the Federal system. This would prevent a diversion of motorists' taxes and would permit the development of a much better balanced highway system.

Around such a key system the whole program of county and township roads could be developed, whether constructed with local funds or with W. P. A. assistance.

To expedite national-defense transportation and to insure a full return for the motorists' tax, legislation of this kind is imperative. I am sure it will have the full and careful consideration of the Roads Committee of the House when the time arrives to make our regular authorization of Federal highway grants.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHWERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Senator MEAD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if the House is in session on next Wednesday, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the calendar business in order for the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two articles from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on veterans' legislation and to include some data that I have prepared, including excerpts from laws and regulations on veterans' affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill, as it passed the House, amended the term "commodity" for purposes of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended.

The amendments of the Senate added to the list of commodities covered by the definition, hides, tallow, soybean oil and all other fats and oils, soybeans, and soybean meal.

The conference agreement omits "hides," from the definition but includes the other commodities added by the Senate, so that with the amendments agreed to in conference the term "commodity" for the purposes of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, will read as follows: "The word 'commodity' shall mean wheat, cotton, rice, corn, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed, grain sorghums, mill feeds, butter, eggs, Solanum tuberosum (Irish potatoes), wool tops, fats and oils (including lard, tallow, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, soybean oil and all other fats and oils), cottonseed meal, cottonseed, peanuts, soybeans and soybean meal."

H. P. FULMER,
HARRY P. BEAM, STEPHEN PACE,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this report, may I say that several months ago the House passed a bill to amend the Commodity Exchange Act so as to extend its provisions to other commodities. As the law reads at the present time the following commodities are under the terms of that act: Wheat, cotton, rice, corn, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed, grain sorghums, mill feeds, butter, eggs, Irish potatoes, and wool tops. At the present time those are the agricultural commodities subject to the terms of the Commodity Exchange Act. The House bill added fats and oils, including lard, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, cottonseed meal, cottonseed, and peanuts.

In the Senate the bill was amended to add soybean oil, soybeans, soybean meal, tallow, and hides.

The conference committee has agreed to the additions made in the Senate with the exception of hides. Under the conference report the item of hides is not included as a commodity under the terms of the Commodity Exchange Act. That is the full substance of the report.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. You took off hides, which was a Senate amendment?

Mr. PACE. There was some objection on the part of certain members of the committee at this time to the inclusion of hides under the act.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The conference report takes in fats and oils. Can the gentleman give us some idea whether or not that means all fats and oils of every character or just vegetable and animal fats and oils?

Mr. PACE. Under the terms of the amendment adopted by the Senate, my interpretation would be that it includes all vegetable oils and fats, because the Senate expressly added the language which was not in the House bill "and all other fats and oils." It specifies some in particular, for instance, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, soybean oil, lard, and tallow, then adds the all-inclusive term "and all other fats and oils."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman construe this language to mean that all fats and oils that are sold will be included under regulation of the Commodity Exchange?

Mr. PACE. All fats and oils listed on the Commodity Exchange will be subject to the terms of this act and should be.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That means it will take in those that are listed for sale on the Commodity Exchange?

Mr. PACE. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. And that would not necessarily mean all fats and oils that are sold?

Mr. PACE. That is my understanding. It deals only with the fats and oils listed on the exchange, and I think it properly should if they are competitive oils. They should all be treated alike.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT AND FIRE DEPARTMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES PARK POLICE AND WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8846) to provide for the retirement of certain members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, the United States Park Police force, the White House Police force, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after "service", insert "or whenever any member of the United States Secret Service, who has served 25 years in the service of the United States Government, the duties of whom in whole or in part related to the protection of the life of the President and who has actively performed duties other than clerical for 10 years or more directly related to the protection of the President extended by the Secret Service Division."

Page 2, line 9, after "service", insert "and having reached the age of 55 years."

Page 2, line 15, after "retirement", insert ": Provided, however, That in any fiscal year any such retirement shall be in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in no fiscal year shall the amount of all such retirements authorized under the provisions of this paragraph aggregate more than $30,000."

Page 2, line 15, after "retirement", insert "Provided further, That, when any member of the United States Secret Service Division shall have performed service in connection with the protection of the President for 10 years or more, thereby becoming subject to future retirement after 25 years' service under the provisions of this act, that he shall be authorized to transfer all funds to his credit in the United States Civil Service Retirement Fund to the Policemen and Firemen's Relief Fund of the District of Columbia, and that after the transfer of such funds the salary of that member shall be subject to the same deductions for credit to the Policemen and Firemen's Relief Fund of the District of Columbia as the deductions from salaries of other members contributing to that fund, and he shall be entitled to the same benefits as other members contributing to that fund."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill from the District Committee?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. In further answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, I should like to say that this measure passed the House on a regular District day several months ago. It went to the Senate and was passed by that body on Monday with three amendments. I believe the House should know exactly what these amendments are.

First of all, the House bill provided retirement features for members of the fire department and the police department of the District of Columbia. The Senate modified the bill to include the members of the United States Secret Service Police who actually guard or protect the President of the United States, not clerical forces in that group but those actually engaged in the active guarding or protection of the Chief Executive. The provisions of the retirement would become applicable to those members of the United States Secret Service Police after they had served in that capacity for 10 years.

The second provision, as changed by the Senate, would make the retirement benefits payable only upon the reaching of age 55 by a member of any of these three forces; that is, after he has served 25 years in that capacity.

The third change is that the Senate put a limitation of $30,000 on the cost of the retirement fund to the District of Columbia in any fiscal year.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, these amendments have the approval of the District Committee of the House.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; their full approval. I have discussed the matter with the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who has conferred with others.

Mr. MICHENER. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question of the gentleman. I understood the gentleman to say that the policemen and firemen will be retired at the age of 55 years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Only after they have had 25 years of service. They could not become eligible for retirement before the age of 55, and in no event until after 25 years of service.

Mr. RICH. If a man serves 25 years and is retired and gets a pension from the District of Columbia, will he be permitted to work in the District, to draw his pension and have another job?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No, indeed. Further, he would not have to retire at the age of 55. It would be optional.

Mr. RICH. I believe that whenever we get the pension age down to 55 years we are going after awhile to get it down to 50 years and 40 years, and then we will not want to work at all. I would not want to retire at 55 years of age unless I were sick or incapacitated. I cannot, for the life of me, see why an able-bodied American, whether he is in the police department or the fire department or in any other work, would want to retire at 55. That is too young.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I doubt if many of them would take advantage of it.

Mr. RICH. We ought not to pass such laws. We ought not to grant them that privilege. I would not want it myself, and I do not see why anybody else would want it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say in answer to the observation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it was brought out in the hearings that oftentimes, in fact, many times, men doing this type of work are men who should be eligible for retirement at the age of 55, but only after they have completed a quarter of a century of endeavor.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this will affect very few men of the age of 55, if any, because after they have served 25 years, having gone on the force at the age of 30 or 35, they will be 65 or over when they retire. There will be very few, probably none, who will be retired at 55.

Mr. RICH. Then why did we set the age limit at 55?

Mr. SECCOMBE. We made that limitation; that was all. We had to make some limitation.

Mr. RICH. Why did we not keep it up to 60 or 65?

Mr. SECCOMBE. The 25 years' service will correct that.

Mr. BOLLES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the bill we have before us is not the bill that was passed by the House. It is not as good a bill, but we are willing to accept this. The men in the fire department and many other services have retirement organizations.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say in regard to the observations of my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the fact of the matter is that practically every large city in the United States has much more liberal provisions for the retirement of their policemen and firemen than has the District of Columbia. One reason for this is that many times policemen and firemen, after performing their strenuous duties, are partially incapacitated when they reach the age of 55 or have served 25 years. If they were not permitted to retire, the efficiency of the police and fire departments would be very much decreased. It is also in the interest of having an efficient police department and fire department that the Committee on the District of Columbia favor this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

REQUESTING CERTAIN INFORMATION FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the House Committee on Military Affairs on House Resolution 613.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 613

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all such information as he may possess, or which may be available in the War Department, to answer the following questions:

(1) Has the War Department, or any official or representative thereof, entered into any contract for the construction of anything to be used in connection with our national-defense program, and especially contracts for the production of munitions of war, tanks, aircraft, artillery, including antiaircraft guns, warships, camps, cantonments, buildings, or structures of any kind, or furnishings for the same, which provide in substance, or are to the effect, that only members of a union are to be employed on such work?

(2) Under any contract let by the War Department for any of the foregoing purposes has any contractor or subcontractor entered into any contract which in substance provides for the employment of only those men who belong to a designated organization?

(3) On any of the work above designated has any contractor or subcontractor refused employment to any man otherwise qualified for the reason that he did, or did not, belong to a union?

(4) If in answering the foregoing questions it appears that men who are not members of a union have been denied employment because they were not members of a union, when they applied for work on any defense project or in any manufacturing industry which was engaged in making materials for the national defense, give three instances where men, for the reasons stated, were denied employment.

(5) If in any instance a demand has been made that only union men be employed on the work hereinbefore referred to, by whom was such demand made, and if the information is available, was the demand the result of a vote of the membership of the union or of some official or officials of the union?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee may be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT TO ACCOMPANY HOUSE RESOLUTION 613

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House Resolution 613, requesting certain information relating to employees on national-defense projects, having considered the same, submit the following report thereon with the recommendation that it do not pass:

The action of your committee is based upon a letter from the War Department under date of October 2, 1940, which indicates that a research for this information would involve an enormous amount of clerical help as there are over 1,000,000 contracts for purchase orders in connection with our national defense which would have to be thoroughly searched.

Attached hereto and made a part of this report is a letter from the War Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 2, 1940.

Hon. ANDREW J. MAY,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MAY: Careful consideration has been given to House Resolution 613, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, transmitted to the War Department, with the request that the committee be furnished a report in triplicate, setting forth the War Department's views concerning the proposed legislation.

The purpose of the resolution is to require the Secretary of War to furnish the House of Representatives such information as he may possess, or which may be available in the War Department, to answer certain questions, briefly restated as follows:

(1) Has the War Department or any official or representative thereof entered into any contract for construction or production "in connection with our national-defense program," which requires that only members of a union may be employed?

(2) Has any contractor or subcontractor, under any contract of the character referred to in paragraph (1) above, entered into any contract requiring the employment of only those men who belong to a designated organization?

(3) Has any contractor or subcontractor, or any of the work of the character designated in paragraph (1) above, refused to employ any man solely for the reason that he did or did not belong to a union?

(4) If in answering the foregoing questions it appears that men who are not members of a union have been denied employment on contracts of the character referred to in paragraph (1) above, because they were not members of a union, give three such instances.

(5) If in any instance a demand has been made that only union men be employed on work of the character referred to in paragraph (1) above, by whom was the demand made, and if the information is available, whether the demand was the result of the vote of the union or of some official or officials thereof.

If this resolution is passed the War Department would be in a position promptly to answer question (1) without extended research.

With reference to question (2) of the resolution subcontracts are not in general filed in the War Department. However, all subcontracts under prime contracts for construction on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis are so filed. Such of these subcontracts as are on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis are on a form approved by the War Department, and no investigation regarding them would be required. Though it is unlikely that subcontracts on a fixed-price basis under cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts contain any clause requiring the employment only of men belonging to a designated organization, nevertheless, in order definitely to answer question (2), insofar as such subcontracts are involved, it would be necessary to search the files of the War Department pertaining to all cost-plus-a-fixed-fee construction contracts. Cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts for supplies and facilities are in the same situation. As to construction and other contracts not on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis, ordinarily there is no occasion for filing the subcontracts with the War Department.

In order, therefore, definitely to answer question (2), insofar as information available in the War Department is concerned, a search of War Department records pertaining to each contract for construction and for production in furtherance of the national-defense program would be required, on the remote possibility that data might be found showing that contractors or subcontractors have entered into contracts requiring the employment of only those men who belong to a designated organization.

For the purpose of ascertaining what information, if any, is available in the War Department as the basis for an answer to question (3) whether any contractor or subcontractor on work of the character referred to in question (1) has refused to employ any man because he did not belong to a union, it will be necessary to make a search of War Department records pertaining to all contracts for construction and production entered into during the emergency in connection with the national-defense program, including reports and correspondence.

The same is true with regard to question (4) which requires that, if in answering questions (1) to (3), inclusive, it appears that men have been denied employment because they were not members of a union, three such instances be given.

Question (5) could only be answered by a thorough search of War Department records for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are available any data pertaining to any contract of the character referred to in question (1) showing that demand has been made for the employment of union men only.

As indicated above, a vast amount of research would be involved in ascertaining what information, if any, is available in the War Department as a basis for answers to questions (2), (3), (4), and (5) proposed in the resolution. The extent of such search will be appreciated when it is realized that during the emergency declared by the President to exist on September 8, 1939, there have been entered into by the War Department over 1,000,000 contracts and purchase orders in connection with the national-defense program.

The War Department, therefore, is of the opinion that during the existence of the emergency, when all the time and energies of War Department personnel are needed in carrying out the national-defense program, it should not be called upon to make the investigations which would be required to answer the questions referred to in the next preceding paragraph.

Accordingly, the War Department recommends against the passage of the resolution.

This report has not been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10339) to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after "military", insert "or naval."

Page 1, line 8, after "thereof", insert "ordered, manufactured, procured, or possessed for export purposes."

Page 2, line 3, after "materials", insert "and to sell or otherwise dispose of any such articles or materials, or any portion thereof, to a person or a corporation of the United States whenever he shall determine such action to be in the public interest. Any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale or other disposition of any such articles or materials or any portion thereof shall be deposited to the credit of that appropriation out of which was paid the cost to the Government of the property thus sold or disposed of, and the same shall immediately become available for the purposes named in the original appropriation: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall modify or repeal section 14 of Public Law No. 671, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved June 28, 1940."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, these amendments are matters of detail, so to speak, and do not change the fundamental principles of the bill as it passed the House. Am I correct or am I wrong about that?

Mr. FADDIS. That is correct. They are just clarifying amendments that the Senate saw fit to put in. A couple of them were proposed by the War Department to further clarify the measure.

Mr. MICHENER. I see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS], a minority member of the committee, is present.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, this has the approval of the members of the Military Affairs Committee, which met this morning and discussed the Senate amendments.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the minority members of the Military Affairs Committee are in accord with the Senate amendments and join in the request to accept the Senate amendments?

Mr. ARENDS. That is right.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman explain just what this bill is in order to refresh our recollections? Is this the strategic-materials bill?

Mr. FADDIS. This is a bill that passed the House on the 22d day of July and gives the President permission to requisition various tools—machine tools or materials of various kinds now on the docks at our ports—that are forbidden to be exported under the provisions of an act passed on July 2, 1940, which requires a license to export any of these tools because we need them today in the United States, and because of other matters connected with the foreign situation the exportation of them has been forbidden. They are now on the docks and the Government of the United States wishes to get them for the use of American industry in building up our national-defense program.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. And this amendment provides that he cannot only requisition them but sell them?

Mr. FADDIS. He can sell or dispose of them, and the money goes back into the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RICH. After we disposed of the 50 over-aged ships, I see in the papers that we are disposing of tanks and other war matériel. Does this bill in any way give any more power to the President, and does the gentleman know of any way that he gets the power to dispose of a lot of this war equipment?

Mr. FADDIS. This bill, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, gives the President no further power to dispose of any equipment of that kind. It only applies to the equipment that comes under the category of equipment specified in the act of July 2, 1940.

Mr. RICH. We ought not to give him any more power.

Mr. FADDIS. I am glad to reassure the gentleman in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the last deficiency bill was passed by the House a little over a week ago and is over in the Senate and has not yet been reported out so far as I know. The third supplemental defense bill for 1941 was passed by the House last Thursday and that has not yet been reported out in the Senate. I was wondering if the Speaker could give us any information as to the program with reference to these bills and as to what might happen with reference to them the rest of the week or the first of next week.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to make an announcement about that tomorrow, if that is agreeable and will not inconvenience the gentleman from New York.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter to me from the Honorable Charles F. Trivette, of Virgie, Pike County, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made last week on the bill H. R. 10572, the deficiency bill, and to include therein brief excerpts from a report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an article on Railroad Travel, the Safest Method of Modern Transportation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

REPEALING CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4316) to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is identical with a bill which passed the House on Monday by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 686 and 687) be, and they are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. All certificates heretofore issued to seamen under the authority of section 4588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby declared void.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, beginning today and for a week, the newspapers of the United States and those connected with the profession and the business of publishing, both weeklies and dailies, are celebrating Newspaper Week.

Weeklies and dailies and other publications issued regularly at intervals number some 23,000 in the United States. About 400 of these are what are known as metropolitan dailies published in cities of more than 100,000 population. Some seventeen hundred are daily papers published in small towns and there are cities of even as low a population as eighteen hundred that have a daily newspaper.

There are no national newspapers. Once upon a time there was such a paper with a great circulation of weeklies and triweeklies over the United States. The great journalists of the middle nineteenth century have disappeared. The Greeleys, Watersons, the Medills, and the Danas; the Raymonds and those great formers of public opinion prior to and during and after the Civil War, have gone from the newspaper picture. The bulwark of the newspapers in the United States is the community paper. This is the great and powerful press in the United States. There is no outstanding personality in the editorial side of our newspaper today. The public does not know the name of the editor or who writes the editorials or who is responsible for the news in the paper except in a very few instances when the name is published at the head of the editorial column.

The newspaper of yesterday has changed. It is no longer an experimental venture. It is a business as sound as the making of steel. It is no longer an organ of propaganda; it is an established institution, vitally necessary to every community, local and national historian, philosopher, commentator, and above all deals in news.

We have examples of newspapers that are not newspapers. They bear the same relationship to sound newspapers that jazz, played by a Negro saxophone band, does to a Strauss composition by the Chicago symphony orchestra. Screaming sensation, back-alley liaisons, hashish and opium—stimulated situations, Magdalenes weeping over yellow criminals, fiction that permits the eel-like heroine to dance with the devil and slide out of danger in the next chapter, columns of moron piffle written for the brain of 16, inaccuracies that mislead—these may win an audience but it will leave hastily when someone else makes a worse and more daring exhibit of distorted mentality. Instead of a bell on the cash register such newspapers should have a siren. But we have them—a few and the greatest blot on the character of the American people is that they have readers. One does not have to be vulgar to be brilliant nor is stupidity always a sign of moral decency.

The community newspaper is a part of even life itself, not a thing apart like the love of man, to its public. It gets into the family life like the dog and cat or the favorite horse. It has its place with the latest volume from the book club, the Bible, and the letter from the boy in college. Its markets fix the family income, its localized community news tells the daily story of a peoples' history within the horizon in which these friends live. Weekly or daily, its worth is measured by the news it prints and not by the history it recites. From it can be learned how to crochet a dress, what is going on in Singapore, bake a new kind of cake, where the new lamp should be set, what new panacea has been proposed in Washington, what the sermon will be about on Sunday, how Al Capone is faring, and when Mrs. Neighbor will get home from the hospital with the new baby.

Arthur Twining Hadley, former president of Yale, said once that—

> Public sentiment represents each man's share in that political conscience which is as important for the ordering of the affairs of the individual. Public opinion is a judgment formed in accordance with the dictates of this political conscience and representing a theory which a man is prepared to apply against himself as well as against others.

And then President Hadley continues:

> Where it exists such public opinion is not only powerful but all powerful. It can accomplish more than any other coercive agency in the world.

Now, I may say that as a Member of Congress I am confronted with these things. I must realize to the fullest extent my own responsibility. The syndicate writers, with the sophistry of words, and all the others who indulge in something outside of public sentiment which reaches the stage of propaganda, are creating public opinion.

Propaganda is that thing spoken or written which has for its purpose, justifiable or not, the attainment of a definite object in creating public opinion. Its truth or falsity is no concern of the propagandist. There is a milder form of propaganda that is found in a flood of Government press releases, purporting to be reports on ordinary affairs but nevertheless with a most definite objective—to give the public an idea of the overwhelming interest of bureaus and departments in the welfare of the American people. Now, propaganda is differentiated from news acceptable to the newspapers by news being pure at its source. It is a record of fact only and not vitiated by opinion subtle or openly.

This literary propagandic epilepsy finds its way into the newspapers in spite of wastebaskets. The public may be fed arsenic in small doses and live; it may be fed opiates with its morning coffee or its afternoon tea; it may not know it is taking either and will probably deny any effect, but nevertheless it is being changed by its newspaper reading of propaganda, subtly, unconsciously, and thoroughly.

We constantly discuss in Congress and out that constitutional prerogative guaranteed to the American people under the clause of "Freedom of the Press."

This freedom was not obtained by any sudden movement. It has been a long and continuous struggle. The free newspapers with the right to criticize those in authority came into being after a battle by John Wilkes in England during the reign of George III. He was jailed many times. His newspapers suppressed. His type and plant destroyed but he battled on until there was aroused opinions in the minds of the public and those in lesser authority and permitted the newspaper to exist with its right to criticize and its right, much more important and much more valuable to the public conscience, to print the news.

In America, this battle was fought out 205 years ago in a courtroom in New York, where a poor, but stubborn German young man named Peter Zenger, fought for the right to print the news concerning the arrogant William Cosby, Governor of the New York Colony, who had visions of grandeur and hopes of being a dictator. It was a surprise to the court when Andrew Hamilton (no relative of Alexander), known at that time to be the greatest lawyer of the Colonies, had volunteered to defend Peter Zenger. The 80-year-old Hamilton proceeded to deliver one of the greatest courtroom arguments ever heard in America before or since. I recommend to every attorney that he read this argument of Hamilton's. It was printed in pamphlet form and circulated in the Colonies, as well as in Great Britain. This address of Hamilton's had a distinct and definite relationship to the making of the Constitution and the inclusion in the Bill of Rights the freedom of the press as one of its cornerstones.

No country can be free without a free press. No country can know about or understand the movements of the people of any nation without a free press. I only quote but little from Hamilton, but here is the crux of his argument:

> It is the best cause—the cause of liberty.
> I make no doubt but your upright conduct this day will not only entitle you to the love and esteem of your fellow citizens, but every man who prefers freedom to a life of slavery will bless and honor you as men who have baffled the attempts of tyranny and by an impartial and incorrupt verdict have laid a noble foundation for securing to ourselves, our posterity, and our neighbors that to which nature and the laws of our country have given us a right—the liberty both of exposing and opposing arbitrary power (in these parts of the world at least) by speaking and writing truth.

When the jury returned this verdict of not guilty for Peter Zenger, the publisher of the New York Weekly Journal, it did a service to this Nation, greatest since the first settlers came to the rocky shores of New England.

I make no apology for the newspapers. They are just as perfect as is the human race and no more. There is a record of only two persons in either profane or sacred history that so reached perfection as to be translated to Paradise while still living—Enoch and Elijah. I say to you that whenever one of you feels that his newspaper on any day is perfect, there will be a chariot of fire right at the front door to take you without checking the speed limit to the gates of the New Jerusalem.

One-third of the population of the United States, in figures, reads daily newspapers; two-thirds read the weeklies. The most potent power in this Nation for the decline of illiteracy is the newspaper—daily and weekly. It can and does do more than any other instrument to build public sentiment than any other force. It can take a peanut politician out of oblivion and make him a Congressman of the United States. It can take a Negro roustabout from the slums of Detroit and make him a national figure. It can take a gum-chewing girl who does not know the difference between syntax and sandstone and make her a formidable star in the movies. It can turn obscurity into public prominence. It can paint a gangster into a daring bandit and give him a high place in criminal history. It can make a mediocre scion of a degenerate nobility something of world-wide consequence.

Many people want the newspaper to be better than the readers. It often is. But its function is not to serve sinners; its biggest job is to make it easier to be decent. The newspaper is a great phonograph, playing not its own record, but those made by the world. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is an able, distinguished, and brilliant member of the fourth estate. I want to compliment him on the very splendid address he has just made. I think it is one of the most interesting I have ever heard and I hope it will find general circulation and perusal throughout the United States.

Mr. BOLLES. I thank the gentleman for his kind words. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

HOURS OF LABOR IN UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION CONTRACTS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4341) to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

I intend to offer an amendment, which I have taken up with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by United States Maritime Commission contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels shall be suspended: Provided, That the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any such contract shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week and work in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week at not less than 1½ times the basic rate of pay.

SEC. 2. The United States Maritime Commission is hereby authorized to modify its existing contracts for the construction, alteration, or repair of vessels as it may deem necessary to expedite national defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify any contracts between management and labor in shipyards which provide for conditions more favorable to labor than the minimum provisions as to hours per day and hours per week and for overtime provided in this act.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "That during the national emergency, declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist" and insert "That until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the Congress the other day I offered the amendment which the gentleman from Virginia is now offering. Due to the fact that there was a later provision in the bill placing a limitation on the life of the law, it was thought that the amendment which I offered was so worded as to be in conflict with that section. Therefore another amendment was substituted. It is now found, as I understand it, that the original language in the amendment I offered is the best language, and the gentleman is attempting to restore that language. My objection to the language in the bill as presented to the House was that it made reference to the "limited emergency" declared by the President in September 1939, and I feared lest leaving that language in the bill as it was presented, would in some way validate by Congress the so-called limited emergency declared by the President. That declaration was the sole act of the President and has not had official congressional sanction.

I am pleased to withdraw my objection and hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] will be agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. That is entirely correct. This amends the Senate bill which passed the Senate on the same day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, enforced idleness is the economic scourge today of 9,600,000 American workers. It is likewise a scourge of American business and industry, because through the idleness of this great army of unemployed, made idle through no choice of their own, the consuming power of the people is reduced, and this part of the population, in terms of individuals and families, is denied the healthy and normal existence that comes through employment and wages.

In the fact that almost 10,000,000 men and women are listed as without employment is one of the strongest indictments of our time, and upon our resourcefulness as a people. By every standard and comparison, unemployment is the Nation's first and foremost economic problem, involving the security and stability of homes, and the well-being of community life as well.

The moral effects of continued unemployment upon almost 10,000,000 men and women must be as severe and devastating as are the economic effects upon family existence and community well-being. We cannot have so many people without gainful employment without paying a tremendous and paralyzing toll in terms of human wastage; in the skill and talents of men and women to produce, but without the opportunity to do so.

Human wastage is not confined to the drain imposed by long hours of work or of exhausting effort in toil. It measures its greatest loss and its most devastating effects in the idleness of men and women. No man's job is safe so long as 9,600,000 people are looking for work.

The army of unemployed today still stands at the staggering level of one idle person for every four persons gainfully employed in industry. This is a reduction of less than 4,000,000 in unemployment from the all-time peak level of 1933, when the American Federation of Labor reports indicated a total of 13,270,669 persons without jobs. This condition exists today, notwithstanding 7 years of effort, through such agencies as the Emergency Relief Administration and Work Projects Administration, Federal Employment Service, and the huge Public Works Administration's program, to provide jobs and to give work to those who need it.

Through Federal relief and through W. P. A. projects, more than $15,000,000,000 have been spent in one way and another to provide unemployment cures, to put people to work and to eliminate the Nation's No. 1 economic problem of enforced idleness. And yet, in the face of this almost unparalleled expenditure of money to cure idleness, and 7 years of experimentation, the net reduction in unemployment, on a rising tide of industrial activity today, is less than 4,000,000.

Reports of the Federal Security Agency indicate that 1,300,000 applications for jobs were filed with Federal employment offices in June 1940 alone, and that a total of 5,700,000 were registered with this agency alone at the end of that month in search of jobs. In the light of such staggering numbers of unemployed persons, the question is, What have we been doing, if anything at all, to effect a permanent cure of unemployment? What has the New Deal, with all of its expedients and experimentation, accomplished in its attack through the W. P. A. and other agencies set up for this purpose upon the country's No. 1 economic problem of idleness?

In speaking of the figures of his agency for June, Federal Security Administrator McNutt said:

> These figures show little change from previous months, but the total number of registrants was 8.7 percent below June 1939 and 27 percent less than in June 1938.

We should remember that the last 6 months of 1936 and the first 9 months of 1937 marked the highest gain in industrial activity in 10 years, and most pitifully reflected in the figures which Mr. McNutt cites for 1938 and 1939.

Unemployment benefits paid in the first half of 1940, said Mr. McNutt, totaled $283,000,000, an increase of $54,000,000 over the corresponding period of 1939. Clearly the volume of unemployment was not on the decline, notwithstanding the increase in industrial activity and the great expenditure of Federal funds for relief. Its destructive force would seem to be almost as great today as in any of the other 7 years in which the New Deal has wrestled, with such minute result with this scourge upon our economic existence.

Business makes jobs and employers put men in those jobs. Employers make money and industry makes money only as men are put into jobs and are given continuing employment. In this aspect of the matter is the sole permanent cure for enforced idleness, and upon this point the score of the New Deal is near the zero mark. The New Deal has not put men and women back to work, and today the destructive competition among men and women of unemployment—a form of competition more destructive than that which can exist between commodities and manufactured products—still runs its course at almost flood tide.

Temporary spurts in industrial activity caused by the production of the implements of warfare cannot and will not solve the unemployment problem of our country. If the problem in all of its pressing and heartbreaking aspects is to be solved with stability and security in the home life and family existence of the great American army of wage earners, it must be by bringing the real purchasing power of wage earners to its full tide level by the means of unhampered industrial activity. Productive activity must be generated through the flow of goods and services into the channels of consumption, with the wage-earning power of the people adequate and sufficient to absorb these goods and to use them as factors in the accepted standards of living of the American people.

As a great and prosperous Nation, we cannot solve unemployment by diverting billions of dollars of building and construction work to relief work and the payment of "sustenance wages" to the detriment and loss of wage earners, as compared with prevailing rates of pay. And yet today 1,660,000 persons are on the relief rolls of the W. P. A., and, according to the latest report of the Work Projects Administration, 74.3 percent of these persons are engaged on construction projects relating to highways, streets, and bridges, public buildings, construction work of publicly owned or operated public utilities, airports and airways, and sanitary enterprises.

The solution of unemployment is not in the direction of made work. It is not in the payment of sustenance wages, based on bare necessities of life, in competition with the prevailing rates of pay in private enterprise. It is not in the maintenance of vast numbers of people on unemployment doles in lieu of employment at wages commensurate with their skill and talents in the industrial field.

Solution is in enlarging and expanding the field of private employment through encouragement of private enterprise and the promotion of confidence among businessmen in the stability and certainty of the future. It comes in the expenditure of the wage-earned dollar for those things which create the economic security and stability of the family and the home, as well as providing the necessities of daily existence.

In this aspect of the problem, the New Deal has sustained a bitter and devastating defeat, and at the cost of that part of the population least able to resist and survive the shock. This failure has left millions of people bitter and confused, wandering aimlessly, not knowing where to turn, haunted by insecurity and empty pockets and the prey all too frequently of racial hatreds and ruthless leaders.

In dealing with this problem we must substitute social thinking of a high order and give full play to the natural forces of enterprise which are inherent in free opportunity and the rewards of gainful employment. We must employ the sound methods that make for constructive economic results through stability and confidence in the field of business and industry, with the gains in employment which must come with any normal business and industrial expansion.

The New Deal's shame today is in the failure to solve unemployment. Our opportunity, possibly our greatest opportunity, is to open the channels of private employment and to put men and women back into jobs, so that they may live normal and healthy lives, use their talents and skill to their own and the country's greatest advantage, and to bring the benefits and rewards of widespread employment to all of our communities. In no other way can we create a dynamic America. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. SHEPPARD, for 30 days, on account of official business.

CHOCTAW INDIANS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3524) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that a similar bill was previously pocket vetoed by the President and that this bill does make some attempt to comply with the objections of the President.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior on the bill indicates, however, that the bill would not be in accord with the program of the President. It seems to me there is some question as to the actual merit of this legislation, and I believe it should not be allowed to pass the House by unanimous consent but should be given consideration.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill is not identical with the bill which was vetoed by the President. The Committee on Indian Affairs held a lengthy session examining into the merits of this bill and carefully studying the records of the case. The committee unanimously, irrespective of the political party affiliations of its members, at that meeting voted to favorably report this bill.

All this bill does is to give the Mississippi Choctaw Indians an opportunity to have their day in court before the Court of Claims. This is not a yardstick bill, this is a bona fide Court of Claims bill. In view of the records and facts presented and considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I sincerely hope that the gentleman will have faith in the unanimous report of that committee and let this bill be considered so that these Mississippi Choctaw Indians may have an opportunity of presenting their honest claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I do not believe the bill should be allowed to pass by unanimous consent but should be given more consideration by the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. When this bill was before the House approximately 2 years ago the Interior Department did not object to its passage.

They have, however, now filed an objection, but the objection is grounded upon the suggestion embraced in the pocket veto of the President. In other words, the Interior Department does not want to get out of line with the views of the President. A representative of the Interior Department admitted that the bill possesses merit.

Mr. COSTELLO. Apparently the present bill is objected to by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is not in accord with the President's program. Evidently it would meet the same objection of the President, since the bill still provides for a suit against the United States and not for an action to recover an interest in the property of the Choctaw nation.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not believe so. I think the bill would be very readily signed by the President in its present form because interest in this bill is limited to 5 years.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Should the President veto the bill the members of the committee reporting it would uphold the veto. I do not believe, however, that the President will veto this bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. A representative of the Bureau of Indian Affairs representing the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the committee and admitted to members of the committee that it was impossible for them to endorse the bill since the President had vetoed it, but that their report of 2 years ago showed they had no objection. However, since the President vetoed a similar bill the Secretary hesitated to give his endorsement to this one.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is very evident from the opening statement of his letter. Further on in his letter he offers various suggested amendments which apparently the Senate incorporated in the bill, but he concludes with the statement that it would not be in accord with the President's program.

It is my personal conviction that legislation of this importance should not be considered or passed by unanimous consent but should have more deliberate consideration by the House.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. As a matter of fact, these veto messages are prepared by some attorneys in the Department of Justice that do not know any more than some attorneys on the floor of the House. So why should we treat that veto message as a sacred cow not to be touched? The President does not have time to look into these things. The entire policy of the Government with reference to the Indians has not been a fair one, has not been a thing we can be proud of. I hope the gentleman will not object to consideration of this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. I will admit there have been some injustices with regard to the Indians, but on the whole I feel we have been rather generous to them in most instances.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. The House will consider this bill if the gentleman will not object to its consideration. That is the purpose of this request, to permit the House to consider it. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and let the House vote it up or down.

Mr. COSTELLO. Under the present situation it would be tantamount to passing it by unanimous consent, and I do not think the bill should be passed in that manner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 960), extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill just objected to; and I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD two poems written by constituents of mine. The poems are short.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING PARTICIPATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN CELEBRATION OF PAN AMERICAN AVIATION DAY

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 295, authorizing the participation of the United States in the celebration of a Pan American Aviation Day, to be observed on December 17 of each year, the anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to designate December 17 of each year as Pan American Aviation Day and to issue a proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government, Governors of the 48 States, our possessions, and all citizens to participate in the observance of this day to further and stimulate interest in aviation in the American countries as an important stimulus to the further development of more rapid communications and a cultural development between the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this Congress the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization reported quite a number of private bills which were objected to when placed upon the Private Calendar. As a result of that, under the rules of the House the committee again reported these bills, totaling approximately 100, in omnibus bills, which have been on the calendar now for almost 2 years. It seems to be impossible, however, to get disposition of them. I find now that a number of Members of the House and the Senate have been pressing rather hard for some action on these omnibus bills, which I realize full well, through no fault of the House, it is impossible to reach. The reason why some of the bills were objected to, resulting in omnibus bills being reported out of the committee, is because there were a certain number of bills involving individuals who had criminal records.

I am going to propound a unanimous-consent request to the House to recommit the bills, in order that we may report back to the House all bills involving individuals about whom there will be no controversy, in that way segregating the good cases from the bad ones, so that we may give the bills that have some doubt further consideration.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman tell us how many noncontroversial bills there are?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. About 50 or 60 out of 100. Because there may be 10 good bills and 1 bad bill in the omnibus bill, we cannot reach the good ones.

Mr. Speaker, I propound this unanimous-consent request: I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 6183, H. R. 6184, H. R. 6185, H. R. 6186, H. R. 6187, H. R. 6188, H. R. 6189, H. R. 6190, H. R. 6191, H. R. 6192, and H. R. 6193 be recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I ask unanimous consent further that that committee may be permitted to bring back as one bill all of the bills within these omnibus bills that have no controversy or criminal fraud connected therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and I also ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a table with figures obtained from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, the following table, computed from official tables obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture, is one more evidence of the cross-purposes of the New Deal. These payments are not based on size of the farm or the value of the farm. Many millions of people think this money is allocated on a political basis. These funds are surely not being allocated on a common justice or common sense basis, as is shown in the following table:

State	Number farms	Total acres in farms	Average acreage per farm	Total value of farms and buildings	Average value of farm and buildings	Average Agricultural Adjustment Administration payment per farm per year based on total number farms, 1934-39

SENATE

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Master, King of Love, who didst give to us a new commandment that we should love one another, even as Thou didst love us, unworthy though we were: As we enter upon the duties of another day, may it be with a mind forgetful of past ill-will, with a conscience void of offense, with a heart purified and unafraid. Lead us through the mystery of shadowland and, in patient self-denial, direct our goings in the way that leads from gloom to joy and peace. Help us to learn from Thee, O Saviour of mankind, that our blessing lies beyond the testing time of life, our crown of victory beyond the cross. Grant that, as we pray, Thy presence may prevail with power to help us ease the burdens that we share with those who are not always strong, whose lives are overborne with care, until, like Thee, Thou Son of God and Son of Man, we may draw the hearts of men into closer fellowship with each other and with their God, through Thy love which doth constrain us. In Thy holy name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Wednesday, October 2, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bill and joint resolution:

S. 4316. An act to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

S. J. Res. 295. Joint resolution authorizing the participation of the United States in the celebration of a Pan-American Aviation Day, to be observed on December 17 of each year, the anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4341) to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of laws that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 8846. An act to provide for the retirement of certain members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, the United States Park Police force, the White House Police force, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 10339. An act to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LETTER OF APPRECIATION FROM MRS. LUNDEEN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 2, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: Would you kindly express our sincere thanks to my husband's colleagues in the United States Senate for the beautiful floral piece which was sent to him?

We will forever appreciate the thoughtfulness and courtesies that you have all shown to us.

Sincerely,

NORMA WARD (Mrs. Ernest) LUNDEEN.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
October 2, 1940.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GARNER: Due to the extremely heavy schedule which I had previously arranged, it will not be possible for me to serve as a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, which appointment was tendered me a few days ago.

I regret my inability to serve in this important capacity and trust you will understand my reasons therefor.

Respectfully yours,

JOSH LEE,
United States Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to fill the vacancy on the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in that connection let me say that I do not rise to tell the Presiding Officer what I think about that appointment, but I will tell him outside the Senate Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator outside or otherwise. [Laughter.]

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the ninth annual convention of the National Reclamation Association at Great Falls, Mont., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the progressive and orderly expansion of the production of beet sugar within the United States, and also to maintain the beet-sugar industry on a reasonable income basis by quota regulations and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY ON CONTRACTS OF MARITIME COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4341) to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, which was, on page 1, beginning with line 3, to strike out all down to and including the word "exist" in line 4 and insert "That until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. OVERTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF TWO BILLS

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10381) to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States may be indefinitely postponed. The House has passed Senate bill 4316, a similar or companion bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, House bill 10381 is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I make a similar request with reference to the bill (H. R. 10380) to expedite national defense by suspending, during the national emergency, provisions of law that prohibit more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, and ask that it be indefinitely postponed. It is similar to Senate bill 4341, passed by the Senate on September 30, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, House bill 10380 is indefinitely postponed.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN INDIANS AND TRIBES FROM PROVISIONS OF ACT OF JUNE 18, 1934

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2103) to exempt certain Indians and Indian tribes from the provisions of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8930) to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2198) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9654) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2199) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8705) for the relief of Howard Mondt, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2200) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 4395. A bill for the relief of Dr. Morris B. Toubman; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. MURRAY introduced Senate bill 4396, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BROWN:

S. 4397. A bill for the relief of the dependents of Jacob Betzer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4398. A bill authorizing the appointment of John L. Lavan as a commander, Medical Corps, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT—DOCTORS OF MEDICINE AND DENTAL SURGEONS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Selective Training and Service Act. I also request that the bill and a statement by me relative to it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4396) to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Any man selected for training and service under this act (1) who has been awarded a degree of doctor of medicine or doctor of dental surgery by a recognized medical or dental school, (2) who holds a valid license to practice medicine, surgery, or dentistry in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, and is engaged in such practice at the time of his selection, and (3) whose physical and mental fitness for such training and service has been satisfactorily determined, shall, in lieu of induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for such training and service, be commissioned as an officer in the Medical Department Reserve, Officers' Reserve Corps, and ordered into the active military service of the United States as provided in the joint resolution approved August 27, 1940."

SEC. 2. Subsection (d) of section 5 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Medical and dental students at recognized medical and dental schools, and internes and resident physicians, surgeons, and dentists at recognized hospitals, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this act. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any such medical or dental student, interne, or resident physician, surgeon, or dentist who is a member of a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States shall not be ordered or called to active duty or into active service in any of such forces without his consent, except in time of war."

The statement presented by Mr. MURRAY is as follows:

STATEMENT RE AMENDMENT TO SELECTIVE SERVICE TRAINING ACT OF 1940

In the last World War much confusion resulted from the fact that the Selective Service Act of 1917 failed to make provision for the induction of doctors and dentists into the Medical Department Reserve, Officers' Reserve Corps. As a result of that omission in the 1917 act, many dentists and medical men were inducted into the land and naval forces as ordinary soldiers, and the country was deprived of their professional services in the public and private practice of medicine and dentistry in the country, and also deprived of their professional services in the Army, where they were allowed to serve as ordinary soldiers when there was an actual need for their services in their professional capacity.

It will be claimed, of course, that there will be little likelihood that they will be conscripted this time as ordinary soldiers because the local selective service boards will, in the exercise of their discretion, see that they are assigned to the proper division of the Army where their services may be utilized. These draft boards have been given instructions to avoid fanatical diligence in their work and are told to exercise common sense in the performance of their duties, and that if they do so confusion will be avoided. I can see no reason, however, for not making provision in the act itself so as to take care of this important matter and prevent any mistakes in this regard. It is a simple matter to provide in the act exactly the place that doctors and dentists shall occupy in the Army when drafted. A matter of such importance should not be left to the mere judgment or whim of draft boards. There is no excuse for following such a course when a simple provision can take care of the situation. The amendment which I am proposing undertakes to cover this situation.

Again, under the 1917 act, there was no provision to exempt from service medical and dental students in recognized medical and dental schools or internes and resident physicians, surgeons, and dentists serving in recognized hospitals of the country. Obviously, where such exemptions are not provided for, there is a danger of wrecking the national health services of the Nation. The present act contains no such exemption and, therefore, should be amended. At the present moment, there is a serious deficiency of internes and resident physicians, surgeons, and dentists in the hospitals of the Nation. If these men are to be drafted under the present act, it will completely demoralize the hospitals and the health services of the country.

My bill, therefore, proposes to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 by providing an exemption from training and service, but not from registration, for these students, internes, physicians, and dentists at recognized hospitals.

PRINTING OF COMPILATION RELATING TO CARRIERS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 55), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound 3,700 additional copies of Senate Document No. 202, Seventy-sixth Congress, entitled "Compilation of Federal Laws Relating to the Regulation of Carriers Subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, With Digests of Pertinent Decisions of the Federal Courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Text of or References to General Rules and Regulations," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 100 copies for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, and 100 copies for the use of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives.

EXTRACT OF SPEECH OF SENATOR BILBO AT ROLLING GREEN PARK, PA.

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an extract from a speech delivered by Senator BILBO, at Rolling Green Park, Pa., which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT OF JOHN A. M'SPARRAN ON THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement made by John A. McSparran before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary on September 26, 1940, on the third-term issue, which appears in the Appendix.]

LETTERS, TELEGRAMS, AND SPEECH OF SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO RELATING TO WOOL-PRODUCTS LABELING BILL

[Mr. SCHWARTZ asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several telegrams and letters relating to Senate bill 162, the wool-products labeling bill, and also a radio address by Senator JOHNSON of Colorado regarding the same bill, which appear in the Appendix.]

THE THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by John W. Smith, of Brooklyn, N. Y., to the New York Herald Tribune and published on August 4, 1940, under the heading, "To bar a third term," which appears in the Appendix.]

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND THE STATEHOOD OF NEVADA

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by F. Lauriston Bullard, editorial writer, Boston Herald, entitled, "Abraham Lincoln and the Statehood of Nevada," which appears in the Appendix.]

A LOGICAL PLAN FOR PROSPERITY—EDITORIAL FROM THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled, "A Logical Plan for Prosperity," published in the Philadelphia Inquirer of October 3, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE WILLKIE CAMPAIGN—INTERVIEWS WITH HON. E. H. CRUMP, OF TENNESSEE

[Mr. MCKELLAR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD certain newspaper interviews with Hon. E. H. Crump, of Tennessee, on the pending political campaign of Mr. Willkie, which appear in the Appendix.]

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10572, making supplemental appropriations for the national defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—War Department—Expediting production," on page 11, line 8, after the numerals "1941", to strike out "$90,000,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be made available to the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, for the erection, equipment, and operation of a pilot plant or plants for the beneficiation of manganese ores and the production of metallic manganese therefrom by the electrolytic or other process, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere for the preparation of plans and specifications, advertising, and supervision of construction; and for all expenditures requisite for and incident to the exploration of manganiferous deposits in accordance with Public Act No. 117, approved June 7, 1939," and insert "$88,000,000"; so as to read:

For an additional amount for expediting production, including the same objects and subject to the same conditions and limitations specified under this head in the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941, $88,000,000; and, in addition, the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, and with the approval of the President, is authorized to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, for the same purposes to an amount not exceeding $90,000,000.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Wisconsin desired the floor to address the Senate. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

THE DIGNITY OF THE SENATE—REPLY TO SENATOR M'KELLAR

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, for about a week I have been trying to get the floor to reply to certain things that were said on the floor of the Senate. I trust that in my remarks I shall govern myself in accordance with the rules of this body and with the rules which generally govern a gentleman.

Mr. President, some 2,000 years ago a philosopher, looking up into the sky at night, at the "myriad candles of God," asked himself, "What are we here for? What am I here for?" Years ago that question came to me, and I have received many answers; but one of the answers given to me by my mother was, "First learn self-control."

The other evening it was my privilege to see a great picture, and I recommend it to the country—The Ramparts We Watch, meaning the Nation we guard or protect. After I got through with that great experience, I asked myself what lessons I could get from the picture. I enumerated the reactions that came to me after sitting here in Washington and viewing that great picture:

First, America must guard herself emotionally, so that pictures like this and others will teach America to be on guard, but will not unbalance America so that she will feel that to be "on guard" means jumping into the fire. Peace or war hangs in the balance. We must resist hysteria.

Second, this phrase "we watch" or "we guard"—and I repeat the phrase, "The ramparts we watch"—has many connotations:

(a) We must not simply build an adequate navy with an adequate supplemental air arm, an adequate air fleet, and an adequate land force, properly mechanized and trained in new offensive and defensive methods, but

(b) We must see that our military machine does not consume our American values and freedom; that is, we must see that it does not become an octopus and strangle our American freedom.

(c) While we are preparing to repel force with force, we must prepare the soul of America so that our citizens will still love the ideal, the beautiful, and the spiritual and will not become brutalized machines.

(d) We must—and this, I say, came from seeing this picture—we must, in the legislative halls of the Nation, guard our tongues, keep our minds poised, let nothing interfere with our mental equilibrium. In so doing we watch the ramparts. I say to you that unbalanced statesmen lead to unbalanced government. When anger rushes in, reason rushes out.

As I witnessed this great picture, the meaning and significance of the Senate of the United States was reaffirmed to me. The Senate is a forum, not for petty quarrels but where great ideas should blossom forth, where men should become channels for light, not darkness, workers in the vineyards of a greater tomorrow.

As I saw that picture there came to me a story out of the Book of Books, the story of Nehemiah. Senators will remember it was he who went to Jerusalem to repair the walls, and he did not let enemies without and enemies within interfere with the job in front of him, and when they tried to get him down he said, "I am doing a great work, so I cannot come down." It will be remembered that Nehemiah sent a messenger to those who would take him from the job of rebuilding the wall, and he said, "Why should I cease work, leave it, and come down to you?"

This man Nehemiah was a great leader of his time. Would to God we had more like him now. He was the head of a "great crew of men" who "built the walls." Tradition has it that they were ordinary men who became so filled with the greatness of their job, so shot through with the flame of what they had to do, that they became builders, they became operative masons, and they saw to it that nothing could divert them from the job, nothing could divert them from fulfilling the obligation which their great calling imposed upon them.

Tradition has it that one of the master workmen, one who was elected by his fellows, a man of many good parts, but a man who had no control over his temper, a man who saw red when anyone crossed him—tradition has it that Nehemiah had to talk to this man. He was a man from Tanasia.

Nehemiah showed him that the walls around the city were not the real bulwarks; that the walls were but symbols of what the nation had to build; that men had to grow up, cease their petty, childish ways; men had to get rid of bursts of temper, bursts of anger, especially if they wanted to fulfill the leader's part. He was talking to one of the master workmen who was supposed to be building the walls, but who, because of his weakness, was not the builder he should have been.

Tradition has it that Nehemiah showed that he knew what the "fifth column" in his day was. He knew the "fifth column" was the men within, men who were supposed to be leaders but who were so unbalanced that they could not meet the situation head-on and reason their way through it, who could not think straight, who had their thoughts diverted from the job before them, the job of building the bulwarks.

Tradition also has it that Nehemiah anticipated Robert Burns in a well-known ode. It will be remembered Burns said:

O wad some Power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us.

Yes, Mr. President, Nehemiah was right. The walls of Jerusalem then, and the walls of America now, consist of strong souls, clean hearts, wise minds, truthful spirits, poised intellects—not men in leader's place who lose themselves because of fear, not men who have failed to learn self-control, not men who feel that they alone are indispensable, not men who think that they can do no wrong, not men who give away their convictions for expediency, not men who desecrate high office by chicanery and ignoble deeds.

Where soil is, men grow,
Whether to weeds or flowers.

So spake Keats in Endymion.

We can never build the walls of America by having "weedy leaders," men whose minds are filled with the trash of the commonplace, hate, anger, mental unbalance. Such a man is the man of dust. But Longfellow says that—

Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

Such a man has no place in the councils of the Nation or in the Senate of the United States in this critical hour. At least he should not be here.

Shakespeare, thank God, had another idea of man. Listen to this:

What a piece of work is a man. How noble in reason. How infinite in faculty. In form and moving how express and admirable. In action how like an angel. In apprehension how like a god.

Mr. President, today in my remarks I would not divert anyone from the main purpose, the main objective of his being here, that is, to watch the ramparts; to guard the Nation; to rebuild the walls of our country. So I shall not reply in kind to the words of the Senator from Tennessee. I shall not with anger accuse anyone of making false representations, of being dishonest, ignorant, malicious, cowardly. To follow such tactics would not prove a Senator's gentility. It would not add to the dignity of the Senate. Such tactics would show a lack of appreciation of the high responsibilities of the office of a United States Senator and of the obligations of this body—a body "to which," as Webster said, "the country looks with confidence for wise, moderate, patriotic, and healing counsel."

Therefore, I apologize to this honorable body for taking its time in replying to the Senator. Our big job is watching the ramparts. And, Mr. President, I feel like apologizing to the country for the time the Senate has taken in recent months in considering irrelevant matters, personal matters—attacks and defense of Presidential nominees.

It might be well to have a rule that for 3 months previous to election there should be no discussion relating to the nominees of the political parties.

We are a legislative body. Here, we should have our attention directed to repealing outmoded, unworkable legislation, passing constructive laws, and looking after the other activities of the legislative body of the Nation as provided for in the Constitution.

If we followed this course, how much better off this country would be. And here we would then be discussing principles, not personalties.

There have been many exchanges on the floor of the Senate which have not given "light to the people." I think it was Dante who said, "Give the people light and they will find the way."

The other day when, like Don Quixote, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee marshaled his forces, and on the floor of the Senate attacked an enemy that was 5,000 miles away, I came to the defense of Mr. Willkie. In the course of that defense, because it was claimed Mr. Willkie was inconsistent, and so forth, I called attention to the inconsistent stands of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee on the third-term issue and on the Muscle Shoals and T. V. A. issues.

If I had the ability of the distinguished junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] I could show how, Don Quixote-like, the distinguished Senator lowered his lance and charged an enemy that was 5,000 miles away.

To show the fallacy of some of the Senator's argument in relation to Mr. Willkie—and I shall not reply, because much of the charge was met last night by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]—I ask that an editorial column from the Chattanooga Times under date of September 26, 1940, be incorporated in my remarks at this point. It replies to the Senator's attack on the so-called 5,000 percent profit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chattanooga Times of September 26, 1940]

M'KELLAR'S MISTAKE

Tennessee's senior Senator, KENNETH MCKELLAR, on the floor of the United States Senate day before yesterday, accused Wendell Willkie of charging "power patrons of Tennessee a 5,000-percent profit." In the current campaign argument we can find no better example of how, intentionally or unintentionally, truth can be distorted by men in high places.

According to the Associated Press: "Waving both arms, MCKELLAR shouted that the Nashville, Tenn., utility plant, formerly controlled by a utility which was headed by Willkie before he became the Republican candidate, bought power at Muscle Shoals dams for about 2 mills a kilowatt-hour and sold it to Nashville consumers at 10 cents.'

" 'That was a profit of about 5,000 percent,' MCKELLAR boomed."

Senator MCKELLAR long has been an influential figure in Tennessee politics, and his statement doubtless will be believed by those who ardently wish to believe it and will not trouble themselves to examine the facts. More cautious persons will stop to consider this simple truth: The profit in the sale of electrical energy cannot be measured merely by the difference in the cost to the distributor and the selling price to the consumer. Senator MCKELLAR, deliberately or otherwise, ignores the cost of distribution. If a dairyman buys milk from a farmer at the rate of 3½ cents a pint and delivers the same pint of milk to your door, charging 7 cents, he has not made 100 percent profit. The man who drives the milk wagon must be paid and his horse must have his hay.

If one of Mr. Willkie's supporters should charge that the Public Power Board of Chattanooga is making 1,900 percent profit on sale of electricity to domestic consumers, the charge doubtless would be laughed out of court, as it should be. Yet the public power board can buy power at wholesale, from the T. V. A., at the rate of 1½ mills per kilowatt-hour. Residential consumers pay 3 cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 50 kilowatt-hours. Three cents is 1,900 percent greater than 1½ mills, but it would be absurd to infer from those figures that the power board's profit is 1,900 percent, or even 19 percent. It is equally absurd to say that a 5,000-percent profit was charged in Nashville.

We trust that Senator MCKELLAR, on reflection, will change his mind about this, as he has changed his mind about a really important issue in the campaign. On February 10, 1928, when Calvin Coolidge was serving his second term as President, the following resolution was passed by the United States Senate:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

Among the Democrats who voted for the resolution was Tennessee's senior Senator, KENNETH MCKELLAR.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss at any length the various allegations relative to the power issue which have been discussed here on the floor of the Senate. To begin with, it is at least debatable whether such questions should ever be considered in a political way on the floor of the Senate. In all fairness, however, since the matter has been discussed at such great length in recent days, I believe one or two phases of the allegations concerning the power question should be very briefly considered.

To begin with, it has been charged that fantastic profits were realized by a private power company from power purchased at Wilson Dam.

Another allegation which has been heard is that the Republican Presidential nominee "watered" utility stock. Here, again, anyone who is familiar with the facts will recall that Mr. Willkie wrote down his company's capitalization by half a billion dollars as one of his first official acts upon becoming president of the company. I understand, incidentally, that that was done before the holding-company bill was on the books.

Is it not begging the question to charge stock watering to the company in the face of the "watering" which has been done by the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Has not the T. V. A. capitalization been "watered" by charging 60 percent of its multiple purpose cost of $600,000,000 to flood-control and navigation benefits and only 40 percent to power? It appears to me that the "watering" of the Tennessee tax base by this procedure and by Government ownership of property formerly privately owned may not be so much a matter of "watering" as "bleeding."

The editorial I have introduced into the RECORD shows how illogical and inconsistent the first contention is.

Mr. President, I read with considerable interest in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 25 the statements of the senior Senator from Tennessee relative to his stand on public and private ownership of power facilities. Apparently the distinguished Senator's statement was a reply to some remarks I made on the previous day concerning the Senator's attitude on this issue.

Evidently, when I mentioned the Alabama Power Co., I opened up old wounds for the Senator, as is indicated by the extremely intemperate tone of his remarks. I am sincerely sorry for that, because I can assure the distinguished Senator that it was not my purpose to attack his record, as he appears to believe. My purpose was to defend Mr. Willkie, whom the Senator attacked. Mr. Willkie was not present to defend himself, whereas the Senator is present and quite competent to defend himself.

My references to the Senator were quite casual and unpremeditated. They were made to illustrate the incongruity of the Senator, who has himself shifted his opinion on this issue, seeking to indict an alleged inconsistency in Mr. Willkie's attitude.

I applaud the principle, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

It cannot be denied that the senior Senator from Tennessee has at one time supported private monopolistic ownership and at another time public ownership. I do not indict him for this shift in opinion. I merely mentioned it then and mention it again as an illustration.

I will not quarrel with the Senator as to his attitude in connection with the Alabama Power Co. If it is his recollection that he consistently opposed this company, I am perfectly willing to concede his right to believe he did, rather than engage in a prolonged debate on it. But the record will speak for itself.

I submit, however, that this in no way alters my original thesis that the Senator at one time supported private monopoly—and this is illustrated by his acknowledged support of the Ford proposal—and at a subsequent date supported Government ownership.

I do not care how he justifies this shift of opinion or whether or not in his own mind he finds these two positions to be consistent. That is not the question. The question is merely on the matter of fact that he did shift his opinion.

I am extremely sorry that this trivial point should have occupied so much of the Senate's time. I do not believe it merited so much attention, and I for one do not propose to magnify something which I do not think is an issue.

I can overlook the distinguished Senator's vehement comments because they reflect his agitation over a disputed question which has evidently been a source of annoyance to him in years gone by. In all fairness, however, I feel it necessary to point out the fact that the senior Senator from Tennessee did not a week ago last Wednesday nor can he now indicate any single statement made by me in which I in any way misquoted him. If he chooses to question the inferences or the conclusions which I drew from his statements, that is his privilege. But I do not believe he can say I quoted him incorrectly. He could not say that honestly then, nor can he say it today.

The Senator questioned and made a great to do about the sources of those statements. The sources of those statements are not secret, as he seemed to imply. They are a matter of permanent record, incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and designated by pages in my original remarks. The Senator is privileged to go to those records at any time.

The fact that those pages of the RECORD were directed to my attention by someone who has questioned the Senator's consistency on this issue is in no way germane, and in no respect does it affect the accuracy of the quotations as reported in the printed and permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee referred to me as a newcomer. That was another one of the words that was thrown out with anger. I am reminded of a historical incident which occurred in 1740 in the English Parliament, when Mr. Walpole attacked William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, with words somewhat similar to those used here, and I shall, with apologies for any seeming presumptuousness, let Mr. Pitt's words stand as my reply to the Senator's reference to me as a newcomer. I quote Mr. Pitt:

> The atrocious crime of being a young man—

A newcomer in the United States Senate—> which the honorable gentleman has with such spirit and decency charged upon me, I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny, but content myself with wishing that I may be one of those whose follies may cease with their youth, and not of that number who are ignorant in spite of experience.

I continue to quote:

> Whether youth can be imputed to any man as a reproach, I will not assume the province of determining—

I interpolate—whether being a newcomer in the United States Senate can be imputed to anyone as a matter of reproach, I cannot assume the province of determining—> but surely age may become justly contemptible if the opportunities which it brings have passed away without improvement.

Those are the words of the great Pitt.

Amiel, the great philosopher, said:

> To know how to grow old is the master work of wisdom and one of the most difficult chapters in the great art of living.

Yet, Mr. President, the great art of living is a challenge to everyone, whether he live in a hut or in a castle, whether he is a utility magnate or a poor barrister in a country town, whether he sits in the Senate of the United States or in the White House. The art of living is a challenge to every human life. To grow old gracefully, with a smile on your lips, with no hate in your heart, with a knowledge that He who shaped you shaped you with a purpose, with a purpose noble, not ignoble, shaped you with that something in you that impels you forward to accomplish great and splendid things. Ah, that is life—life with flame. The Master Architect gave to each and every one a job to build the bulwarks of America. He made you master workmen of a great temple—America. He made you master masons and builders to lay its stones with the cement of kindness and forgiveness and faith and joy.

Mr. President, I was not present when the distinguished Senator from Tennessee delivered his phillipic, but I wish to say that during the over 20 years he has been in the Senate, and during the little over a year and three-quarters that I have been in the Senate, and ever since the Senate has been in existence, there has been a rule for the government of conduct of Senators, and I read it to the Senate. It is as follows:

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

That is paragraph 2 of rule XIX of the Senate Rules, for the guidance and direction of all Senators, old Senators and newcomers. At least six times this rule was violated by the Senator's remarks. After the distinguished Senator concluded, there was a quorum call. I was not present to hear his remarks. I was at a conference. I reached the Senate Chamber in time to answer the quorum call, and several Senators remarked to me about the speech that had been made. I had not read his speech. I went to the Senator from Tennessee, as I have done to many others, to congratulate him. He alone can tell what my reception was. I know now from reading the speech and from the tone of his remarks and subsequent remarks—I place an emphasis on the words "subsequent remarks"—that the Senator was on fire and had not had time to cool down.

Man has no greater enemy than the consuming passion of anger. A potent friend is poise. A potent friend is calmness. A potent friend is man's faith in his fellow men. Later, after I finally digested the remarks the Senator made a week ago Wednesday, I found he had not disputed the correctness of any one of the quotations or citations, but he had protested against the statement contained in my opening remarks, and this is the statement; this is what caused his heat:

> At one time the Senator appears not to have been so militantly opposed to monopoly. I refer to the RECORD of December 7, 1922, at page 178 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 64, part I, Sixty-seventh Congress, where the Senator did not appear to be opposing the Underwood bill, which proposed to lease the Muscle Shoals Dam to the Alabama Power Co.

Those who did me the honor to listen to my remarks will remember that the Senator interrupted me and said:

> I know the Senator wants to have the RECORD straight.

The RECORD shows that I stated—page 12538—

> So far as the senior Senator from Tennessee is concerned, if I have said anything which does not square with the RECORD, I shall be very happy to retract what has been said. * * * In discussing this matter I did not indulge in any personalities. I quoted from the RECORD. I gave the page, the volume, and the date. If there is any misstatement, we shall have it checked, and if the RECORD does not square with my statement I shall be the first one to clear up any misrepresentation.

Mr. President, that has been a rule of my life. I learned it early. I found that there was great pleasure in being able to say, "I was mistaken, and I beg your pardon." I say that as a Senator, and I repeat, that at any time, any where, whether it is in the Senate of the United States or elsewhere, if I am mistaken I will get a real joy from acknowledging it. I learned that lesson many years ago, and I have not forgotten it.

Mr. President, the language I have quoted, which seems to have aroused the Senator, may not be fully sustained to everyone's satisfaction by the page to which I referred. When I came into the Senate I wanted to say that to the distinguished Senator, but I had no opportunity to do so. But I say now that after reading the speech of the distinguished Senator there came to my mind the words of Shakespeare in Hamlet:

The lady protests too much, methinks.

Then I started to search the RECORD, and I found additional and sustaining evidence for that conclusion. In order that there may be no mistake, because of the claims made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that the quotations from the RECORD that I used were incorrect, I checked every quotation that I used, and I found them all to be correct.

On page 178 of volume 64, part I, Sixty-seventh Congress, there was this colloquy:

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the Government is in control of it today, and it is being rented by the Alabama Power Co. at a nominal sum, is it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; dam No. 2 is being rented to the Alabama Power Co. at a nominal sum.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Next to owning it themselves, I suppose they prefer to rent it from the Government at a nominal figure.

That was the language from which I drew that conclusion. When the colloquy to which I have referred took place Senator Heflin was opposing the Underwood bill and also the Norris bill, and was supporting the Ford proposal. A speech by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] against the Ford offer had been circulated all over the South. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] was opposing the Norris proposal, was noncommittal on the Ford proposal, and appeared to be flirting with the Alabama Power Co. That was my conclusion. The Senator says that conclusion was erroneous. It is his privilege to say so. However, he cannot contend that my statement contains any falsehoods whatsoever. He may not dispute the facts from which I draw my conclusion. To prove the correctness of my conclusion I am restating the record with additional evidence.

Mr. President, in order that I may not have to read all the references and quotations from the statements of the distinguished Senator, I ask that they be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE RECORD OF SENATOR KENNETH D. M'KELLAR RE MUSCLE SHOALS

Henry Ford's offer to lease Muscle Shoals was made in a letter to the Chief of United States Army Engineers, General Lansing H. Beach, dated July 25, 1921, and appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 4285, first session, Sixty-seventh Congress, volume 61, part 5.

Ford offered to lease and operate Muscle Shoals. According to Senator MCKELLAR'S statement in the RECORD, March 3, 1926, page 4918, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, volume 67, part 5:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. About that time Henry Ford came along and made an offer to the Government not to lease it really, because he got absolute fee simple title to all the property except the dam and the navigation rights, and those he got for 100 years. He offered the Government what was tantamount to about $2,000,000 a year for the plant. A great many of us, feeling that Mr. Ford had been independent of all trusts and combinations and was a public-spirited citizen and wanted to help the farmer, joined in an endeavor to arrange that the transfer might be made."

On December 7, 1922, page 178, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, volume 64, Senator MCKELLAR said:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the Government is in control of it today, and it is being rented by the Alabama Power Co. at a nominal sum, is it not?

"Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; Dam No. 2 is being rented to the Alabama Power Co. at a very nominal sum.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Next to owning it themselves, I suppose they prefer to rent it from the Government at a nominal figure."

As I have previously stated, at this juncture Senator Heflin was opposing the Underwood bill and also the Norris bill and was supporting the Ford proposal. A speech by Senator NORRIS against the Ford offer had just been circulated all over the South. Some accused Senator NORRIS of circulating the speech, and some said that Wall Street had done it to defeat the Ford proposal.

The first evidence of Senator MCKELLAR'S support for the Ford proposal was a telegram from Mr. E. B. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn., of March 12, 1924. The telegram appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4151, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, volume 65, part 4, for March 14, 1924, and reads as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 12, 1924.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Count of total and final vote in Banner's referendum on Shoals proposition gave Ford 56,145. Associated Power Companies 49. Government ownership 16. Equal to 864 to 1 for Ford. Approximately 20,000 came from Nashville and Davidson County; 30,000 from other Tennessee counties. Remainder from north Alabama and southwestern Kentucky. There was never a fairer vote cast in Tennessee. Every ballot had printed on it "for" or "against" proposition, requiring names of voters. Everybody was urged to vote, and the vote as cast was honestly counted. May we not ask that you use your best endeavor to secure early action by the Senate on House bill?

E. B. STAHLMAN.

From this date on, Senator MCKELLAR fought for the Ford proposal. He bitterly opposed the Underwood bill and the Norris bill, and kept up his fight until the Ford proposal was withdrawn.

On page 392, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 10, 1924, volume 66, part 1, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, Senator MCKELLAR said:

"* * * I do not believe that the Government ought to be put in business if it is possible to avoid it. * * *"

On page 393, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, same date, Senator MCKELLAR said:

"I am opposed to municipal operation or governmental operation. I would dislike to see that plant go into the hands of the Government for operation, because I do not know what would happen to it. * * * I cannot bring myself, with my rearing and education, along political lines, to believe that Government operation of the plant can be as successful as private operation. * * *"

On page 398, same date, Senator Underwood said:

"I have not been able to find out yet what the Senator from Tennessee is for. He is not for the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska (Norris bill) for a superpower system. * * * The Senator now says he is not for the Alabama Power Co. offer, and I do not know what the Senator from Tennessee is for * * *."

It is to be noted that the Ford offer had been withdrawn in October. On page 389, same date, Senator MCKELLAR said:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of Senators to an offer made for the property by the Alabama Power Co. and others on January 15, 1924, that is so far superior to the offer proposed in the bill or that is to be found in the bill that there is no real comparison. The amount of rental offered and the conditions proposed are all so much more favorable to the Government that I think Senators ought to bear in mind in considering the bill this offer of the Alabama Power Co. and others. I am going to read it for the information of the Senators. I want them to hear it, because it is a much better proposal than is incorporated in the bill.

"Mr. NORRIS. In which bill?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. In the bill of the Senator from Alabama. I want it understood that I am not urging the acceptance of this offer. My purpose in reading it is to show that the offer of the Alabama Power Co. made last January for this property, when there was a competitor making an offer that was being seriously considered, was infinitely better for the American people, both as to the manufacture of fertilizer and in every other respect, than the offer which is proposed in the bill to lease the property."

Page 505, March 12, 1924, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 1:

"Mr. KENDRICK. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he was in favor of the Ford offer?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I was.

"Mr. KENDRICK. In the light of that circumstance, Mr. President, I am unable to see how the Senator can object to the use, rent free, of this property, the title to which under the Ford offer he would transfer outright.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. There is quite a difference between the Ford offer and this, if the Senator has read them both.

"Mr. KENDRICK. The Ford offer simply proposed to pay for this property, as I read the figure, $1,500,000 for about seventy-odd-million dollars of invested capital. This offer just leases the land instead of giving title to it.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. The Ford offer proposed to give $5,000,000 in cash.

"Mr. KENDRICK. Five million dollars with the plant that cost $3,500,000.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. It proposed to give, then, $5,000,000 in cash for this property. I think that was exceedingly cheap, but that is $5,000,000 more than the Alabama Power Co. is offering for the property.

"Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that written in the Norris bill, as passed by the House, there is a provision under which the Government shall expend, under the direction of Mr. Ford, about $3,500,000 that would have been granted to him under that bill. That reduces his actual payment to the Government to about $1,500,000."

On page 509, December 12, 1924, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 1:

"Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is so strong for regulation now that I am prompted to remind him that when one man whose name was Henry Ford had an offer pending for this property there was no provision for any regulation at all and no effort to divorce it from the water-power plant. I think the Senator was for accepting Henry Ford's bid without the crossing of a 't' or the dotting of an 'i.'

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I do not think the Senate ever voted on the Henry Ford offer.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Was not the Senator for it?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. It was reported out of the Senator's committee to which it had been referred.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Was not the Senator for it?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I was very much in favor of Henry Ford getting the plant, and I would like to have had the very regulation the Senator speaks of. I do not think any person or any corporation ought to have that power without national regulation.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Was not the Senator in favor of Henry Ford's offer without any modification?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I do not recall that I was. I have always said there ought to be reasonable regulation.

"Mr. CARAWAY. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he was speaking about the editor of the Banner. I recall that a lot of people were down here spending somebody's money for the Henry Ford offer absolutely without any change.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes, I think so; and not only the editor of the Banner, but about nine-tenths of the people in my State and probably 95 percent of the people in the Senator's State were for the Henry Ford offer.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Therefore, the Senator was for Henry Ford's offer without change, regardless of the fact that it destroyed the water power."

Page 513, December 12, 1924, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 1:

"Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I notice he just said that we ought to advertise before we lease. I happen to have before me, because the Senator challenged me to get the record, a statement made on January 14, 1924, by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, in which he said he wanted Henry Ford to have it.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Will the Senator read what I said?

"Mr. CARAWAY. I shall be delighted, the Senator said: 'Muscle Shoals, under Henry Ford's offer, will probably develop more horsepower than all the horsepower developed by all the nine companies joining in the combination bid.'

"The Senator was opposing other bids. I will just skip now and read further from what the Senator said. 'Mr. Ford is the logical man to have this plant. I am now, as I have always been, since the matter first came up, in favor of leasing it to him.'

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I am.

"Mr. CARAWAY. The funny thing about it is that there were no competitive bids then. Nobody else could bid. The bill itself said, "You will let Henry Ford have it," and if somebody else wanted it, they could not have it. Under the Senator's state of mind then, he wanted no competitive bids. He wanted no guarantees for regulation or control but wanted simply to turn it over in fee simple to one Henry Ford on Henry's own offer."

January 9, 1925, page 1524, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 2:

"Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not criticizing anybody. Many Senators on the floor of the Senate believe in Government operation; I do not.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Neither do I, Mr. President."

January 10, 1925, page 1600, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 2:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

"Mr. SMITH. I yield.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. If this plant should go into the hands of the Alabama Power Co. that would give us another outside source of supply from which to draw our nitrates."

January 12, 1925, page 1671, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part 2 (regarding Underwood bill, Muscle Shoals):

"Mr. HEFLIN. I am consistent, and that is more than my friend from Tennessee can say with regard to this matter. He was for it when he was in the House at that time. He now says that he is sorry that he was for it. He was for the Ford bill when it was here, and he was against the Norris bill. The Ford bill has been withdrawn. The Norris bill is now pending. The Senator has changed from his support of the Ford idea and has gone over and is supporting the Norris idea. So the Senator has changed four times in these 12 years. * * * Not only that, but he comes along now and finds himself very much pleased with the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, because, he says, they have amended it so that fertilizer will be manufactured, as the Ford provision in the bill of my colleague provides.

"Let us see where the Senator from Tennessee now finds himself in that regard. The Senator from Nebraska, day after day, week after week, and month after month has stood on this floor and said that fertilizer cannot be made at Muscle Shoals. * * * The farmers of his State are bound to take note of that. The Senator is supporting a bill [MCKELLAR] the author of which himself declares that in his judgment they will never make an ounce of fertilizer under any bill at Muscle Shoals. * * * It reminds me of the old fellow out in Texas who wrote back to a friend in Tennessee. He said: 'Dear Bill: If you have not started for Texas, don't. This is the most hellacious climate in the world. On yesterday, while driving a yoke of steers across the prairie, one of them had a sunstroke, and while I was skinning him the other one froze to death.' That was a quick change in the weather, Mr. President, but not much quicker than the changes of my friend from Tennessee."

The Underwood bill passed January 14, 1925. Senator NORRIS said on December 7, 1922, page 175:

"When the farmers of America understand the iniquity of this Ford proposition they will rise en masse and condemn it, and they will condemn any man who stands for it."

March 1, 1926, page 4767, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, volume 67, part 5:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. There would have been no possibility of ever getting such a provision through the House if it had been in the remotest way conceived or imagined that the project would ever be turned over to private interests.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Certainly.

"Mr. CARAWAY. Then why was the Senator for Henry Ford's bill?

"Mr. MCKELLAR. That was a proposed law which would defeat this law, and for reasons that were then perfectly good I was for it."

Page 4911, March 3, 1926, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, volume 67, part 5:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Practically everyone who is now trying to give this great power plant away to private interests, in 1916 was here beseeching the Government to build that plant for war purposes in time of war and for the making of fertilizer by the Government in times of peace. They put themselves unwittingly, perhaps, in the remarkable attitude of coming to the Congress urging appropriations in the aggregate of $150,000,000, made up of taxes from all the people, to build that plant, and after we have built it they turn serenely around and say, 'We will give it away to private interests. We did not mean what we said. We told the Congress then that we wanted it for public purposes; that we wanted the Government to control it for national defense, in the first place, and for fertilizer for the benefit of the farmer in times of peace. But we did not mean what we said. What we really meant was that we wanted to inveigle the Congress of the United States into developing this power for the hidden purpose, as it appears, of turning it over to private interests.'

"Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator speaks about an effort to give this project away to private individuals. The Senator himself voted to do that. He supported the Ford bill, with a term of 100 years as to dam No. 2 and dam No. 3, also. * * * I assert again that the Senator from Tennessee supported the Ford offer, which contained a provision for 100 years' lease, and under which Ford could do what he pleased with all the power. The Senator from Tennessee cannot get away with that sort of argument. I will show before this debate is over that he has occupied two separate and distinct positions on the question."

February 25, 1927, page 4743, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and page 4744, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, volume 68, part 5:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. I remember, as I said awhile ago, that in 1915, when I was a Member of the House, the senior Senator from Alabama came to me and urged me to introduce an amendment providing for an appropriation of $20,000,000 to start the great project at Muscle Shoals."

May 27, 1928, page 9723, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventieth Congress, first session, volume 69, part 9, regarding the Norris bill:

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I expect to leave no stone unturned to defeat this bill as long as Cove Creek is in it. Let there be no misunderstanding about that. It is a matter of such vast importance that I propose to leave no stone unturned to defeat the bill. If it is a matter of physical endurance, it is going to be a matter of physical endurance. I am going to use every ounce of energy of which I am possessed to defeat the bill unless Cove Creek is taken out of it."

April 4, 1930, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6495, Seventy-first Congress, second session, volume 72, part 6, Senator VANDENBERG:

"Mr. VANDENBERG. I listened last night to my very able and distinguished friend from Tennessee as he discussed, in glowing optimism, the benefits that this development is to bring to Tennessee. Of course, it was a totally different speech than the one which he delivered a year or two previously, when he was filibustering the Congress in an effort to prevent the development of the Norris program in connection with Muscle Shoals."

ATTITUDE OF SENATOR M'KELLAR RE THIRD TERM

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 10, 1928, page 2831, volume 69, part 3, Seventieth Congress, first session:

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

"Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Does not the Senator think there exists in this country a very strong and deep feeling upon the part of all patriotic citizens that it would not be a wise plan for any President to serve for a longer period of time than that served by the first President, George Washington?

"Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Doubtless there are many who so think.

"Mr. MCKELLAR. Does not the Senator think, instead of there being many, that it is the underlying view of the people of America that General Washington, our great patriot President, and the first one, having voluntarily fixed two terms as proper for him, no other President should serve for a longer time?"

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as I have already said after reading the remarks of the distinguished Senator—and those who heard them know their character, and how they were delivered—there came to my mind the words from Hamlet:

The lady protests too much, methinks.

I went into the RECORD further. The more I read, the more I became convinced that Senator Heflin's statement, Senator Underwood's statement, Senator Caraway's statement, and the statement of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in relation to the stand of the distinguished Senator [Mr. MCKELLAR] indicated a remarkable change of front. That was his privilege. No one blames him for being inconsistent. Emerson says that only fools are consistent. What I cannot understand is why the Senator should take the attitude he took. A little couplet comes to my mind:

Two men looked through prison bars.
One saw mud, the other stars.

That little couplet has in it much of philosophy. One can see what he wants to see. Stars typify the glory of life, which is all around us. Still, some see only mud.

Mr. President, let me read a statement which the Senator probably has forgotten—one of his own. It is found in volume 66, part I, Sixty-eighth Congress, page 389, December 10, 1924:

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of Senators to an offer made for the property by the Alabama Power Co. and others on January 15, 1924, that is as far superior to the offer proposed in the bill or that is to be found in the bill that there is no real comparison. The amount of rental offered and the conditions proposed are all so much more favorable to the Government that I think Senators ought to bear in mind in considering the bill this offer of the Alabama Power Co. and others. I am going to read it for the information of Senators. I want them to hear it, because it is a much better proposal than is incorporated in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. In which bill?

Mr. MCKELLAR. In the bill of the Senator from Alabama. I want it understood that I am not urging the acceptance of this offer. My purpose in reading it is to show that the offer of the Alabama Power Co. made last January for this property, when there was a competitor making an offer that was being seriously considered, was infinitely better for the American people, both as to the manufacture of fertilizer and in every other respect, than the offer which is proposed in the bill to lease the property.

Again, on January 10, 1925, page 1600, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, volume 66, part II:

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. If this plant should go into the hands of the Alabama Power Co. that would give us another outside source of supply from which to withdraw out nitrates.

Yes, the gentleman protests too much, methinks. The Senator from Tennessee voted against giving the Alabama Power Co. these properties. It will be remembered that distinguished Senators who were his colleagues in the Senate at that time were very much confused as to what he stood for. For some one now not to understand his confusing record should hardly be the ground for such a tirade.

Mr. President, I believe in the dignity of the United States Senate. I do not believe that the dignity of this body is enhanced by language which violates the rule of the Senate which I have quoted. Everyone believes that lies and vulgarity should be trampled down whenever found; but one cannot accomplish such a result by sinking to the same level. We in the Senate must by our conduct make sure that the atmosphere of the Senate does not need to be fumigated. Loose statements and falsehoods, like pestilence, should not obtain here.

The theme on which the debate was started was Wendell Willkie. We have gone a long way from that theme. When the distinguished Senator from Tennessee obtained the attention of this body and launched his attack against the man who heads one of the great parties of this Nation, he precipitated this controversy. All the pooh-poohing, and all the superficial attacks such as we have seen on the floor of the Senate can not affect the real issues in this campaign.

Mr. President, Wendell Willkie has instituted a crusade. Those who heard him last night, and heard the 20,000 people in Cleveland go wild, know that he is not to be pooh-poohed. Wendell Willkie has instituted a crusade, an uprising of the people against the kind of government which millions think is not a good kind of government. Mr. Willkie is proving his mettle. He is a fine campaigner, and the people who see him like him. At Coffeyville his speech penetrated to the grass roots. In California he was a great success. In my own State, at a great university, with an audience made up of the most critical listeners to be found, including men and women who were prejudiced against him, he captured his audience. Why? Because he shot straight and talked straight. He speaks with a conviction which does not come from changing his viewpoint or taking a different position from that which he took a few years ago on vital fundamentals. Likewise in New York he was accorded a great reception. Everywhere he goes he is doing a real job. He is getting across to the people the issues of this campaign. As a result of his dynamic appeal, the people are discussing the doctrine of the indispensable man, the third term, and New Deal palliatives; and they are discussing the issue of the job which was promised to be done in 1932 and 1933 and which has not been done.

Mr. President, the American people will not be diverted from these issues by smoke screens on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else, or by any attack upon a great national leader. Such attacks have created throughout the land an impression which in my humble opinion does much damage to the standing of the Senate before the country.

We have had in the White House a man who has designated certain legislation as "must" legislation; a man who has said that the Supreme Court should be "packed"; a man who has attempted a purge of his party and now is willing to violate the third-term tradition. Such a man with such tendencies toward dictatorship should be the last man to be placed in the Presidency again. The people in other lands have felt that the day of legislatures is over. Are we so minded here? If we follow the rule of Webster, if we follow the course of dignity, if we argue issues instead of personalities, if we show that the years that are behind have made us stable men, men of reason, mental equilibrium, and poise, then it can be said that the founding fathers were right when they created this government of checks and balances, this government of executive, legislative, and judicial functions.

Mr. President, the people are realizing that this is their fight, and they are getting into it. The world is full of assaults upon vital principles. It is for us to be undisturbed amid the jarring conflicts of this age. It is for us to keep cool, retaining and exemplifying judgment, common sense, and vision.

God give us men,
Men, who in word and deed,
Reflect poise and clear thinking.

May each of us say sincerely:

Today I am free—and why?
Because I laid away the shell of yesterday,
And with tomorrow's sunrise, I hope
To lay away the shell I grow today.
New sky lines burst upon my view—
I know it is the law of life to grow.
So open wide, ye windows of my soul.
I fear no more—the quest is on,
A hunter for the spiritual goal,
The glory of a God enraptured man.
Gone are the gods of yesterday—
Narrow creed, superstition, hate, and woe!
Gone, with other dreams that limit me.
Today, today, I am free!

SUITS AGAINST OIL COMPANIES

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the first of the present week there were filed in the United States courts by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice suits against a number of oil companies. The news of the filing of those suits was pleasing, I am sure, to every citizen of the United States, and was especially pleasing to me. In connection with the filing of those suits against 22 oil companies, comprising the American Petroleum Institute and some subsidiaries, there is a story and a history in which I feel the American people will have much interest. So I am taking this time to complete the record in order that the Senate and the House of Representatives and the people of the country may know something of the history which culminated in the filing of these suits and the institution of these actions.

For a long time, Mr. President, there were many of us who felt that the large, integrated oil companies were taking advantage of a situation which ought to be corrected, in that they were imposing on the general public a higher level of prices for the petroleum products than was necessary and justifiable, and, in addition to that, were driving out of business the independent retailers and marketers of petroleum products, especially the cooperative institutions.

About 50 years ago there was placed on the statute books legislation to prohibit the use of the rebate and draw-back system to defeat the attempts of the Government to prevent control and price fixing by monopolistic interests; but there was developed a new way by which the same results were attained by some of the companies—by control of the production field, the control of the distribution field, and also the control of the marketing field. It was possible to take losses in the marketing end and recoup from the ownership of the distribution and the production fields.

So, in January 1938, I introduced in the Senate a bill which contemplated a divorcement of the production field from the distribution and marketing fields in petroleum products. A subcommittee was appointed to conduct hearings on that bill. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] was chairman of the subcommittee, and the subcommittee did a very fine work in initiating hearings on this all-important subject.

The late lamented Senator from Idaho, Mr. Borah, was a member of that subcommittee, and after hearings had been started, in March 1938, the Senator from Idaho told me that he was about to introduce a bill to require the divorcement of the pipe-line ownership and pipe-line method of distribution from the production and marketing fields. He asked me to join with him in the introduction of that bill and also to postpone further hearings on my marketing bill until such time as the subcommittee could combine the hearings. This, of course, I was glad to do, and I joined with the Senator in the introduction of the so-called pipe-line divorcement bill.

Shortly after that time the Congress became engaged in considering the repeal of the neutrality legislation, in which all of us were intensely interested, and particularly so the then Senator from Idaho, Mr. Borah. Consequently we postponed hearings, and then the unfortunate death of the Senator from Idaho occurred.

Last spring I alone, of necessity, because of the death of the Senator from Idaho, arranged for hearings on these two measures, when Mr. Thurman Arnold, head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, came up to see me and said that for over a year and a half his Division had been investigating thoroughly this entire field with a view to the compilation of facts and evidence on which they could base suits under the antitrust law. He asked me, as a favor to the Department of Justice, to postpone action and to postpone hearings on the pending legislation until such time as they were ready to file suits, so that parallel action on the legislative and judicial phases of the matter could be carried on.

Mr. President, I took no further action. I waited until August of this year, and no evidence was adduced, no information was received as to the commencement of the suits until about that time there appeared in the public press of the country a statement that the Council of National Defense had requested the Department of Justice to postpone any action with reference to filing the suits requiring divorcement because it would interfere with their cooperation in the defense program of the country.

I addressed a letter at that time to Mr. Thurman Arnold, and I shall read the correspondence in order that it may appear in the RECORD, and at the risk of some tediousness, but I wish the country to know exactly what occurred.

In the letter dated August 14, which I addressed to Mr. Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General, Department of Justice, I said:

> I am somewhat disturbed over the trend of events in connection with the alleged violations of antitrust statutes by some of our oil companies as bearing on the course of legislation which is pending in the Congress in which I have a personal interest as one of the sponsors.
> You will recall that, with Senator Borah, I have introduced in the Senate two proposals requiring the divorcement of the business of marketing petroleum products from the production and distribution field for such products—

I will omit some of the letter, because I shall ask to have it inserted in full in the RECORD. Then I said:

> You requested me to delay hearings on the legislative proposals until such time as you were ready to proceed with the suits you were preparing to file. I recognized the wisdom of your request and acceded to it. I have delayed the hearings up to the present time. I learned indirectly that you are about to abandon the prosecutions contemplated. I am sure you will recognize the unfortunate position in which it places me and the pending legislation. I do not know what reasons impelled your decision to postpone the prosecutions referred to, or the filing of the suits, but from information which I have in my files and information which I am sure you have and have referred to in your talks with me, there is ample justification for immediately filing these suits for determination. The interest of the general public, and particularly the consuming public, have been so seriously jeopardized by the practices of some of these companies that I am confident the Department of Justice would be playing unfairly with the interests of the general public in failing to proceed at the present time.
> Many newspapermen have been besieging me for information as to the reasons why the suits have been postponed or dropped. I have carefully refrained from comment and carefully refrained from giving out information, but I have reached a point where I do not believe that, in fairness to my public duty, I can continue to delay these matters. Unless you are able to give me controlling or satisfactory reasons to justify the neglect to conduct the prosecutions at this time, I shall probably feel impelled to reopen the hearings on the pending legislation, and I do not believe that I would be further justified in refusing to comment on what appears to be an unjustified attitude on the part of the Department of Justice in bringing to the courts the long and carefully prepared facts which you have assembled.
> I am sure you will not consider this personal in any way, but will be fully aware of the difficulty of my position. I hope those responsible in any way for the delay will realize that the action is not compatible with the public interest.

Mr. Thurman Arnold made a personal call at my office bringing the reply and delivered it to me, which I will now read:

> DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: I have received your letter inquiring about the delay in starting the proceedings against the major oil companies which have been under preparation by the Antitrust Division for a number of months.
>
> As a matter of courtesy to the Defense Commission and information to this Department, the matter was referred for study as to possible effects on national defense. Their recommendations will be carefully considered with respect to modifying any of the relief sought in the oil suit if, as a matter of fact, it appears that the interests of national defense are involved. This does not mean a waiver of the antitrust laws. We anticipate no conflict.
> We are convinced that the oil suit will, in a civil proceeding, settle various issues which until now have been the subject of numerous criminal cases, all of which the Department has won.

In this connection I desire to read an excerpt from the comment of a columnist on this matter which appeared at that time. I refer to Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, who said, in part:

> One reason why conscription for military service is encountering an uphill struggle is the feeling that business is not being called upon for corresponding sacrifices. There are multiplying signs that the national policy with regard to business enterprise in its relation to national defense is to become one of extreme solicitude, bordering on pampering.
> On one side it is proposed to compel men to bear arms. At least they will have to take a year of military training. At most they will be called upon to sacrifice their lives.
>
> On the other side, it is not proposed to apply in any way the principle of compulsion to the industrial mechanism which must provide the weapons for these men, or to any other sector of the American economic system. Instead, to some who are dubious about the conscription of manpower, the official approach to business enterprise seems to be a compound of cajolery and bounties.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two letters from which I have just read and the article by Mr.

Ernest K. Lindley be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters and article are as follows:

AUGUST 14, 1940.

HON. THURMAN ARNOLD,
Assistant Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ARNOLD: I am somewhat disturbed over the trend of events in connection with the alleged violations of antitrust statutes by some of our oil companies as bearing on the course of legislation which is pending in the Congress in which I have a personal interest as one of the sponsors.

You will recall that, with Senator Borah, I have introduced in the Senate two proposals requiring the divorcement of the business of marketing petroleum products from the production and distribution field for such products and also for the divorcement of pipeline activities and methods in connection with the producing-oil companies. You will recall that some time early in the spring of this year I had a conversation with you with reference to the studies that have been made by your section of the Department of Justice in connection with this field, and you informed me at that time that the Department was preparing, under your supervision, to institute a number of suits for violations of existing statutes and requiring divestiture in some instances. As a result of our conversation, it seemed wise and mutually beneficial from the standpoint of legislative and also judicial activity to parallel action and conduct hearings on the proposed legislation coincidental with the judicial prosecutions. You requested me to delay hearings on the legislative proposals until such time as you were ready to proceed with the suits you were preparing to file. I recognized the wisdom of your request and acceded to it. I have delayed the hearings up to the present time. I learned indirectly that you are about to abandon the prosecutions contemplated. I am sure you will recognize the unfortunate position in which it places me and the pending legislation. I do not know what reasons impelled your decision to postpone the prosecutions referred to, or the filing of the suits, but from information which I have in my files, and information which I am sure you have and have referred to in your talks with me, there is ample justification for immediately filing these suits for determination. The interests of the general public and particularly the consuming public have been so seriously jeopardized by the practices of some of these companies that I am confident the Department of Justice would be playing unfairly with the interests of the general public in failing to proceed at the present time.

Many newspapermen have been besieging me for information as to the reasons why the suits have been postponed or dropped. I have carefully refrained from comment and carefully refrained from giving out information, but I have reached a point where I do not believe that, in fairness to my public duty, I can continue to delay these matters. Unless you are able to give me controlling or satisfactory reasons to justify the neglect to conduct the prosecutions at this time, I shall probably feel impelled to reopen the hearings on the pending legislation, and I do not believe that I would be further justified in refusing to comment on what appears to be an unjustified attitude on the part of the Department of Justice in bringing to the courts the long and carefully prepared facts which you have assembled.

I am sure you will not consider this personal in any way, but will be fully aware of the difficulty of my position. I hope those responsible in any way for the delay will realize that the action is not compatible with the public interest.

Respectfully submitted.

GUY M. GILLETTE.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, August 16, 1940.

HON. GUY M. GILLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: I have received your letter inquiring about the delay in starting the proceedings against the major oil companies which have been under preparation by the Antitrust Division for a number of months.

As a matter of courtesy to the Defense Commission and information to this Department, the matter was referred for study as to possible effects on national defense. Their recommendations will be carefully considered with respect to modifying any of the relief sought in the oil suit if, as a matter of fact, it appears that the interests of national defense are involved. This does not mean a waiver of the antitrust laws. We anticipate no conflict.

We are convinced that the oil suit will, in a civil proceeding, settle various issues which until now have been the subject of numerous criminal cases, all of which the Department has won.

Sincerely,

THURMAN ARNOLD,
Assistant Attorney General.

NECESSARY SACRIFICES—IS BUSINESS TO BE PAMPERED?

(By Ernest K. Lindley)

One reason why conscription for military service is encountering an uphill struggle is the feeling that business is not being called upon for corresponding sacrifices. There are multiplying signs that the national policy with regard to business enterprise in its relation to national defense is to become one of extreme solicitude, bordering on pampering.

On one side it is proposed to compel men to bear arms. At least, they will have to take a year of military training. At most, they will be called upon to sacrifice their lives.

On the other side, it is not proposed to apply in any way the principle of compulsion to the industrial mechanism which must provide the weapons for these men, or to any other sector of the American economic system. Instead, to some who are dubious about the conscription of manpower, the official approach to business enterprise seems to be a compound of cajolery and bounties.

The two chief exhibits of the present approach to business are (1) taxation and (2) the efforts to throttle certain suits under the antitrust laws.

The tax question falls into two parts: Depreciation and the taxation of profits. It is generally conceded that if private capital is to be induced to invest in new buildings and new tools for the manufacture of munitions, it must be given reasonable assurance of recovering the investment within the period that the orders for munitions probably will occur. Accordingly, the Defense Commission obtained an agreement among all Government agencies that companies making these special investments, useful only for military purposes, should be allowed to write them off in 5 years. This means that they can deduct 20 percent for depreciation each year for 5 years as an item of cost in calculating the profit on which they may be taxed. The understanding is that if orders for military defense purposes do not continue over a 5-year period, these companies can come back and obtain a further readjustment of taxes in their favor.

Until this arrangement is set up by law through Congress, the defense program on the manufacturing side is held up.

This liberal allowance for depreciation supposes, however, that the industries receiving it will make very small profits. Since industries, understandably, do not want to shoulder the risk of loss through failure of Government orders to continue long enough to justify the new investment, they are not entitled to a counterbalancing reward for taking the risk.

When it comes to taxing profits, however, the policy seems to be "go easy." In the view of several influential Members of Congress, the Government tax policy with regard to national defense is, for business, a "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition.

The Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice has pending several suits involving industries of importance to the national defense. But it is feeling the pressure to "lay off," lest it make the industries involved noncooperative with the defense program.

It already has run into difficulty in its suit against a number of the large oil companies. This was to have been filed almost 3 weeks ago. It was not regarded with open hostility by the oil companies, because it was a civil suit. It covered various questions which had been raised already in criminal suits and which would be raised eventually in additional suits if this over-all civil suit were not carried through.

The filing of the suit, however, was deferred on representations from the Defense Commission that it might impair the psychological attitude of the oil-company officials toward the national-defense program. Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General, in charge of antitrust work, has taken the reasonable position that he will not prosecute any practice otherwise in contravention of the antitrust laws which is essential to the national defense. But he balks at being asked to discontinue a suit otherwise justified on the ground that it might instill in the leaders of a particular industry a noncooperative psychology.

When the Defense Commission has completed its study of the specific hearing of the case on national defense, it may agree with Mr. Arnold. It may have to pass similarly on four or five other impending suits.

It seems clear enough that if a specific business practice otherwise illegal is valuable for national-defense purposes it should be openly sanctioned during the period of the emergency.

But the contrast between the wary solicitude for the psychological attitude of business and the approach to the problem of obtaining men to bear arms is griping some of the administration's sturdiest supporters in Congress. It may lead shortly to a real political explosion.

GILLETTE DEMANDS ACTION ON OIL CASES—SENATOR ASKS ARNOLD TO EXPLAIN DELAY IN PROSECUTION

Senator GILLETTE (Democrat), of Iowa, demanded yesterday that Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold give "satisfactory reasons" why the Justice Department has not prosecuted petroleum companies for alleged monopolistic practices.

He told the head of the Department's Antitrust Division in a letter that unless such reasons were given he would not be "further justified in refusing to comment on what appears to be an unjustified attitude on the part of the Department of Justice in bringing to the courts the long and carefully prepared facts which you have assembled."

HEARINGS DELAYED

"I hope those responsible in any way for the delay will realize," he said, "that the action is not compatible with the public interest."

GILLETTE said that at Arnold's request he had brought about delay in the committee hearings on his bills to divorce production, transportation, and distribution of petroleum.

"You informed me," GILLETTE continued, "that the department was preparing, under your supervision, to institute a number of suits for violations of existing statutes and requiring divestiture in some instances * * *.

PUBLIC INTEREST

"You requested me to delay hearings on the legislative proposals until such time as you were ready to proceed with the suits you were preparing to file. I recognized the wisdom of your request and acceded to it. I have delayed the hearings up to the present time.

"I learned indirectly that you are about to abandon the prosecutions contemplated. I am sure you will recognize the unfortunate position in which it places me and the pending legislation."

"The interests of the general public and, particularly, the consuming public have been so seriously jeopardized by the practices of some of these companies," GILLETTE continued, "that I am confident the Department of Justice would be playing unfairly with the general public in failing to proceed at the present time."

Mr. GILLETTE. After I received the letter, personally delivered by Mr. Arnold, I waited for some time to receive a further report from the Department of Justice when they should have heard from the Council of National Defense; but I waited for almost a month. Then I addressed a further letter to the Honorable Robert H. Jackson, United States Attorney General, under date of August 19, 1940. After waiting 8 days I received a letter from the Attorney General advising me that he was still waiting to hear from the Defense Commission. I then waited for a period of 22 days, and under date of September 18 I addressed a further letter to Mr. Jackson, the Attorney General. I shall trespass on the patience of the Senate to read the letter of September 18th, and then I shall insert all three letters in the RECORD.

This letter is dated September 18, after the matter of whether or not the suits would be filed had been held in abeyance for almost 2 months:

SEPTEMBER 18, 1940.

The Honorable ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JACKSON: In the recent weeks I have had some correspondence with your office regarding the commencement of certain suits prepared for filing in the petroleum industry, relative to alledged violations of our antitrust laws.

I believe the last letter mailed to you was during the latter part of August, and which you very courteously acknowledged in your letter of August 27, 1940, stating that you expected prompt action by the Defense Commission with reference to their views in the matter of filing these suits, with the possible effect of such suits on the problems of national defense.

From information received through these letters and other media, I believe the National Council for Defense were disturbed over the possibility that the filing of these antitrust suits might have an unfortunate effect relative to the attempts of the Government to secure the cooperation of these oil companies in the all-important matter of the fuel needs of our armed forces. I do not wish to seem persistent or troublesome, but more than 3 weeks have elapsed since the receipt of your letter and, so far as I am informed, no report has been received from the Defense Commission, although the Commission had the matter under consideration for several weeks prior to the writing of your letter.

Since the receipt of your letter of August 27 ultimo, I requested Mr. Thurman Arnold to give me what information he had available relative to the prospects for filing these suits. Mr. Arnold informed me that suggestions had been made by him for changes in the prayer for relief in the suits, and he has made available to me the suggestions which he has made for these changes. From a copy of these proposals before me, I note that the wish of the plaintiff is to secure three primary objectives:

1. To prevent fixing prices at artificial levels to the consumer.
2. To permit retail dealers to compete without artificial restrictions.
3. To provide a free market for the presently existing independent refiners and for new enterprise in the oil industry.

While these three objectives are what I am trying to secure through the legislative proposals now pending in the Congress and which were introduced by the late Senator Borah and myself, I fully realize that none of us is ready to do or say anything which might jeopardize or delay our national-defense preparation. But I believe that any possibility of such result is removed entirely by the suggestion of Mr. Thurman Arnold that the last paragraph of the prayer in the petitions should state:

"Plaintiff prays for such further and other relief as the court may deem proper and in considering such relief, or in considering any of the specific relief herein prayed for, that the court hear all relevant testimony as to the effect of such relief on the problem of national defense to the end that no combination necessary for national defense be improvidently held to be illegal."

It seems to me that with this provision in the prayer for relief, and with the court fully advised that the plaintiff seeks no relief which at any time in the pendency of the legislation might have a harmful effect on our national-defense preparation, that there should be no further delay in the filing of these suits.

I hope you will know that I fully realize that the decision as to the filing of the suits rests with you entirely and not with me, the Council for National Defense, or anyone else. I have been strongly hoping that the suits might be filed before this. I have in mind the offering of a resolution on the floor of the Senate for inquiry and feel that in fairness to the public interest and my duty to the deceased Senator Borah and myself, I must not let this session of the Congress be adjourned or recessed without some action relative to this legislation. As a recess or adjournment seems probable next week, I felt constrained to write to you once more relative to the matter and again venture to hope that there will be something definite to report to me within the next few days, that I may know whether or not your Department plans to file the petitions and commence the proceedings.

I assure you of my sincere appreciation of your unfailing courtesies.

Very sincerely,

GUY M. GILLETTE.

Mr. President, I ask that the other two letters to which I have just referred be printed in full at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

AUGUST 19, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT H. JACKSON,
United States Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JACKSON: Mr. Thurman Arnold personally brought the letter to me today which had been previously released to the press and which was in answer to my letter of inquiry concerning the filing of certain suits by your Department in the oil industry.

Mr. Arnold told me that, under instructions from you, it was to be made clear to me personally that the letter did not represent an absolute commitment to start suit or not to start suit regardless of the Defense Commission's recommendations. I gather that that issue is still to be met and that you are delaying it until such time as you may have the benefit of the Defense Commission's views with reference to it. Mr. Arnold told me further that in the event the Defense Commission delayed unreasonably, or in the event their recommendation would be against the filing of the suits, you would exercise your independent judgment in the matter.

I assure you it was unnecessary to inform me that you would exercise your independent judgment on the matter. I think I realize fully that there was an element of courtesy due to the Defense Commission which might well in an ordinary case justify delay. In this particular case, however, there was associated with the case a number of elements which were important. The filing of the suits had been delayed over some length of time, and I had been withholding action here in the Congress on the request of Mr. Arnold until such time as the two branches of the Government could in a degree coordinate their activities in the matter. In most circumstances a further delay would not have concerned me greatly, but I have in mind the deep interest that hundreds of thousands of our citizens have in these suits, and also the state of mind of the general public, which is ready and anxious to render every patriotic service and sacrifice in furtherance of the national weal. It seemed to me particularly unfortunate that certain great institutions should be put in a position in the public eye where they might be making the question of dropping or postponing suits against them a condition precedent to their participating in the general national-defense program.

You can understand the intense suspense and disappointment on the part of the independent oil companies with whom I am constantly in touch in receiving the news of the delay in these actions. As they have asserted to me, they felt the Department of Justice was appearing in the public eye to be deferring to the judgment of a group of men who had a deep personal interest in the suspension of the suits, especially in view of the fact that so many of the advisors in the oil section of the defense commission are closely connected with companies deeply affected by the suits.

I can readily see that there could be a change in the relief demanded when the actions are filed, but, frankly, I do not believe it is in the public interest to delay or confuse the actions in any way.

This letter of mine will not be given to the press, and I hope you will keep it confidential, although you may refer to it if you wish, or quote excerpts from it. I assure you I have every confidence in you and your Department, and a deep admiration for Mr. Arnold. Whatever course I take at this end of the line is predicated entirely on that confidence, but with full thought to my obligations in the public interest.

Very sincerely,

GUY M. GILLETTE.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 27, 1940.

Hon. GUY M. GILLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: I have your letter with reference to the commencement of the oil suits, and I am assured that the defense commission will promptly convey whatever information they care to submit in reference to the effect of these cases on the national defense.

I fully understand your position and genuinely appreciate your expression of confidence. I think we will not be long held in suspense.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I also desire to place in the RECORD, without reading and without comment, the statement which was given to the Department of Justice by the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense after they had been considering this matter for a number of weeks. Without making any invidious or unfair attack, I also should like to refer to the fact that of the 11 members of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense who had this matter under consideration, 9 were connected with the Standard Oil Co., or with the Shell Oil Co., and had a personal interest in the subject matter.

I do not mean to suggest that it is improper to have on the Council of National Defense men conversant with the oil industry. It was highly proper. It was very essential to have on the commission men with some knowledge of the industry; but I want the fact to appear that of the 11 men who were considering the effect of these suits, 9 were actual potential defendants if the suits were filed. But their report was made, and I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

UNITED STATES VS. AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE ET AL.—REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMISSION TO THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense has given consideration to the proposed antitrust suit against the American Petroleum Institute and 22 major oil companies, their subsidiaries and affiliates, with a view to determining its probable effect on the defense program.

The Commission appreciates that the decision of whether or not to take action against any particular persons or corporations for violation of the antitrust laws must be made by the Attorney General in the exercise of his sound discretion. It further appreciates that in the work of the Department of Justice generally, and in the interpretation of the antitrust laws and the institution of civil proceedings thereunder in particular, there are involved not only problems of law but also problems of policy, including the harmonization of other aims and purposes of the Nation. This report is submitted in the belief that it will be of assistance with respect to the questions of policy presented.

The Commission's primary function is to assure and facilitate the availability of adequate supplies of all materials necessary for the defense of the Nation at the lowest cost consistent with other necessary objectives. The Commission, therefore, would deplore any condition or action leading to a failure of supply of such materials, whether for a short or long time, and whether partial or complete, or leading, among other things, to a lessening of efficiency, waste of natural resources, or any substantial increase in price to the Government or to consumers.

In appraising the impact of the proposed suit on the defense program the Commission has examined the relief prayed for in the complaint and considered the effect of such relief upon the technical task of supplying petroleum products so vital to our defense forces and industry. Emphasis has been placed upon the anticipated effects of granting the prayer for relief, rather than upon the anticipated effects of filing the proposed complaint, largely because the practical result of the suit can be tested only by the objectives of the Department as stated in its complaint. It is impossible, moreover, to say with assurance how long the trial of the issues raised by the complaint will require, how soon the structural changes sought will be achieved, or even what the character of the defense program will be during that interim period. If the objectives of the suit are consistent with the interests of national defense, no question can be raised by this Commission. Our task is simply to determine so far as practicable whether those objectives in fact substantially impede the defense program.

The Commission states at the outset that, in view of its desire to insure and facilitate adequate supplies at lowest cost, it is opposed to monopolistic or conspiratorial price fixing and to artificial restrictions on supply of materials (except where restrictions on supply are temporarily necessary to promote sound conservation of the Nation's resources under law). Such price fixing and restrictions, always a threat to the national welfare, are particularly dangerous in time of emergency. The Commission does not have information adequate to justify comment upon the various allegations in the draft complaint relating to price fixing and similar abuses in the wholesale and retail distribution of petroleum and petroleum products. But the Commission wishes to assure the Attorney General that it will wholeheartedly approve any appropriate legal action brought to eliminate such restraints on competition, where they are proven to exist.

The other provisions in the draft complaint—primarily the prayer that 22 of the larger integrated oil companies, their subsidiaries and affiliates, be required to divest themselves of their transportation and their marketing facilities—require thorough consideration from the defense viewpoint.

Before considering the effect of such a prayer, we may point out, although we do not propose to emphasize, that the suit has its intangible aspects. Certain demands have been made and others will be made upon the petroleum industry in connection with the defense program. From this industry, and from industry generally, the Government expects cooperation, and, indeed, enthusiasm, in furthering the defense effort. The Commission is loath to believe that the members of the industry, or the members of any other industry, would consciously permit any personal resentment to interfere with the vital purchasing functions and supply needs of the Government. Yet the Commission is aware that any legal action seeking relief as rigorous and comprehensive as the one under consideration, whether based upon the antitrust laws or not, has a tendency to becloud relationships between the Government and industry. Such considerations, however, are speculative and difficult to appraise with certainty.

In considering the effect of the prayer for divestiture by the oil-company defendants of their transportation and marketing functions, the Commission recognizes that, apart from other considerations, the existing organizational structure of the oil industry is well adapted to the defense program. It simplifies problems of supply and facilitates the making of firm and long-range commitments. Divestiture may entail a loss of technical management and efficiency. The readjustments contemplated by the suit, and the process of habituation under a new set-up, will involve complications and delays.

Curbs on capital expansion, certainly during the period when the split-ups are still in contemplation and not yet in effect, must be anticipated. Doubts and uncertainties may arise as to whether a company should undertake capital expansion in properties which may be divested, as to who will be able to afford such expansion (in view of the prospective division of capital resources), and even as to who could appropriately apply for Government assistance in such expansion. Eventually the Government will of course find some way to assure its supply. But time is precious.

The Commission finds it impossible to estimate with precision or exactitude the extent to which obstacles to industrial preparation for national defense are presented by the relief prayed for in the complaint. However, the Commission does not suggest that the proposed suit should be abandoned. The Commission feels it appropriate to point out, nevertheless, that to a greater or less degree certain prayers for relief may hinder the defense program. The Commission cannot undertake to meet the burden of proving, with courtroom evidence and logic, that such hindrances will ensue. But this balancing of national policies and weighing of judgments is peculiarly a matter for determination by executive officers rather than by judicial bodies accustomed to reliance upon legal precedents. And even where the likelihood of interference with the emergency effort cannot be explicitly demonstrated, substantial possibilities should control, especially when these are examined in the light of the rapidly expanding requirements for national defense. Some of the problems presented by the prayer for relief may here be elaborated.

I. DIVORCEMENT OF MARKETING FACILITIES

In certain instances the proposal that the larger oil companies be required to divest themselves of all direct or indirect ownership or control of facilities used in marketing petroleum products may affect the construction of such facilities pursuant to negotiations now under way or in prospect for national-defense purposes. The proposed divestiture would involve not only local bulk plants, storage facilities, and service stations but also trunk marketing facilities such as gasoline pipe lines, barges, tank cars and terminals for petroleum products. At present both the Army and the Navy are interested in having private capital construct pipe lines to transport gasoline to the east coast States without the necessity of the long haul around Florida and up the Atlantic coast, which in time of emergency might be difficult and in any event would require a large convoy service. Moreover, in time of emergency it would be possible to take a part of the burden of the gasoline deliveries to the east coast through these gasoline pipe lines and in turn release tankers for the purpose of handling the essential products such as Navy fuel oil which cannot be handled in crude oil or gasoline pipe lines. These gasoline pipe lines would also afford exceptionally desirable locations for some of the reserve stocks of aviation gasoline for both the Army and Navy since deliveries can be made at low cost and removal can be effected readily even in time of emergency. An initial expenditure of approximately $13,000,000 is involved in the gasoline pipe lines now under consideration and it would be desirable to have private capital construct similar equipment for emergency use in other parts of the country.

With respect to marketing terminals the program of the Army and Navy to care for the greatly increased stocks of aviation gasoline and Navy grade fuel oil has not yet been completely formulated. The Army plans to locate most of its interior reserve storage at points on gasoline pipe lines. Such location of large buried storage facilities would not only be virtually invulnerable but would make it possible to deliver the gasoline to the Army through any of the industry tap points or bulk plants located along the gasoline line or lines to which the Army storage would be connected. In addition, the Navy is giving consideration to the location of some of their reserve storage adjacent to or connected with petroleum products pipe lines at existing industry terminals. This would greatly reduce the investment in docks, lines, utilizing facilities, and so forth, and also minimize the labor required to guard and operate these facilities.

It is clear that substantial additions to the gasoline pipe line and terminal storage capacity of the industry will be necessary under this program. Arrangements and understandings to secure such gasoline pipe lines and storage may have to be discarded and delayed until the ability to perform is clarified, and later new negotiations begun with new parties if the existing companies are required to divest themselves of such facilities. Moreover, we must take note of the fact that the Government may well encounter hesitancies and delays on the part of refiners who are asked to extend their contractual commitments, particularly since substantial investments are necessary to meet anticipated demands and, indeed, are now being requested. Several of the larger oil companies may face financial difficulties due to the impact of the current international conflict on the returns from their foreign properties. And granting the relief prayed for in the draft complaint will of itself diminish the capital resources available for particular products. Even Government financing assistance would undoubtedly be delayed pending determination as to the proper identity of the borrower and terms of the loan.

Another proposal is that companies be prohibited from exchanging gasoline and other petroleum products. As a practical matter this would probably require the scrapping of the Army and Navy plan to insure the ready availability of Navy grade fuel oil and aviation gasoline at terminal storage points and would increase the cost of such products to the Government. In any event this would increase the actual amount of transportation required, which would be highly undesirable in any period of emergency.

II. DIVORCEMENT OF TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES

The draft complaint proposes that the larger oil companies be ordered to divest themselves of all direct ownership in the various media of transportation whereby crude oil is brought from the well to the refinery. These include primarily crude-oil trunk pipe lines and tankers.

Pipe lines today are admittedly utilized as plant facilities of petroleum refineries and afford to refineries of integrated companies the steady supply of crude oil regarded by such companies as essential to low-cost continuous operation. Divestiture of ownership in these facilities might, under certain circumstances, increase the difficulty of obtaining supplies. Such a potentiality would be particularly disadvantageous with respect to particular types of crude oil, used in the manufacture of high-octane aviation gasoline and toluol specified by the Army and the Navy, a shortage of which is indicated by preliminary estimates of experts of the Raw Materials Division of the Commission. Some expert opinion holds that the divestiture of crude-oil pipe lines would lead to increase of cost to the Government, or even to the discontinuance in some instances of transportation of crude oil, where the transportation in and of itself is relatively unprofitable.

It is similarly suggested that divestiture would delay or discourage construction of new connections. All the larger refineries and many of the smaller ones located on the Gulf Coast or in California have some crude oils available to them from their existing crude-oil pipe-line connections which would be useful for the production of these special materials. The curtailment or stoppage of the pipe-line supply of these crude oils would occasion refiners difficulty in meeting their commitments under Government contracts and, consequently, the prospect of pipe-line divestiture might delay capital investment in necessary facilities to manufacture the refined products.

The prospective divestiture not only may complicate refiners' contractual commitments but also may intensify the problem of financing certain additional crude-oil pipe-line construction. In order to safeguard against disruption of transportation in time of emergency, looping of trunk lines and the installation of additional pumping stations is contemplated. Studies to determine the necessary amount of such new construction are now in progress.

The Commission wishes it to be understood that this general outline of problems to be met in the working out of the defense program does not mean that it in any way endorses the continuance of alleged abuses in crude-oil pipe-line operation. On the contrary, as has been indicated generally, if there are abuses, it favors their elimination, particularly if they result from any illegal combination or conspiracy. However, it does not feel qualified to discuss this phase of the proposed suit.

Capital problems are of course also presented by the proposal to divorce tanker facilities. A large proportion of the present tanker capacity of about 4,100,000 dead-weight tons is approaching the end of the 20-year period of useful life. The supply of crude oil to the refineries by tankers must be safeguarded. However, it would appear that there is no absolute shortage of tankers foreseeable at the present time since new tankers already under construction plus tankers now chartered in foreign service which could be put in domestic service would probably meet our needs. The direct needs of the Army and Navy probably would not require a large proportion of the tanker capacity.

In this general regard, you are advised that there is in the process of negotiation under the auspices of the Maritime Commission and the Navy Department an arrangement for allocating equitably as between the various companies the burden of supplying tankers to the Navy in time of emergency. If the suit is filed in the manner proposed, negotiations will have to cease. If effect is given to the proposal in the draft prayer, a new program will have to be devised and negotiated with the possibility of increased cost to the Government.

III. THE AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE

The Commission, in its technical study of defense requirements, does not have to rely on trade associations for information and contact with their respective industries. It is true, of course, that the institute provides information on petroleum statistics which are not now available elsewhere, and arrangements would have to be made to supply this need.

IV. CONSERVATION OF CRUDE PETROLEUM RESOURCES

Military authorities have estimated that during war the requirements for petroleum products would increase about 25 percent above normal peacetime needs. On the basis of the 1939 consumption of crude petroleum of one and one-fourth billion barrels, an emergency would lead to additional needs for somewhat more than 300,000,000 barrels a year. These estimates were made before the adoption of recent plans for expansion of the air force and extended mechanization of the land forces and are constantly being revised upward.

Our present reserves of crude petroleum have been variously estimated but probably approximate something in the neighborhood of 18,000,000,000 barrels. Consequently, there is no immediate problem of an over-all shortage of the basic raw crude though, as has been indicated, there may be problems with respect to certain crudes peculiarly valuable for military or naval use. The expansion, mechanization, and rigorous training of the armed forces would certainly bring about a vast acceleration in the rate of production. If this is not accompanied by sound methods of conservation, a protracted emergency would seriously diminish the oil resources of the country. Sound conservation is of the utmost importance to any adequate defense program.

It must be remembered that the problem of crude reserves is not solely one of the amount of oil in the ground. The effect of increasing production per well would be a lower ultimate recovery. As time goes on, the lifting cost of the crude substantially increases and fewer barrels per day are recovered. Thus, though by simple arithmetic it would appear that the country's reserves are good for more than 10 years under emergency conditions, declining production and higher prices for petroleum products will arrive long before exhaustion of reserves unless the discovery rate is maintained and production is effected with a minimum of waste. The possible adverse effects upon the Government and the consumer are clear.

In recent years, an expanding national demand for petroleum products has been met by the discovery of new sources of petroleum approximately equaling the amount of products consumed per year. It appears vital that this rate of discovery remain unaffected. More and more, the business of prospecting for oil has come to depend on the availability of large capital resources. In the first instance, it seems that reduction of the size of the existing units in the industry will leave less capital available for exploration. Secondly, although the intendment of the draft complaint, and particularly paragraph 17 of the prayer for relief is not clear, the power of the companies named as defendants to develop additional reserves may be inhibited.

In addition, a development widely endorsed by Federal and State conservation authorities has been the organization of a newly developed oil field on a unit basis. The proposed suit would apparently prohibit such activities, many of which are now carried out under the supervision of the Department of the Interior. These unit plans are deemed a major force in conservation since they reduce the number of wells to be drilled, conserve gas or hydrostatic pressure and otherwise conduce toward scientific production. This, of course, means lower investment costs per barrel of ultimate production and insures generally lower production costs and higher ultimate recovery of oil.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I certainly shall not take the time of the Senate to go into the merits of this controversy. The suits have been filed. It is a wonderful thing for the people of the country that our Department of Justice, having considered and weighed all the potentialities of the situation and the report which I have just placed in the RECORD, has decided, within certain limitations, to go ahead with the suits, with no desire to affect in any way the national defense.

I may say, in that connection, that one of the things the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense refer to is that $13,000,000 is about to be spent for the construction of a pipe line on the Atlantic coast; and if these suits are filed, they do not know whether it will be possible to go ahead with the construction of that pipe line and the expenditure of $13,000,000. Imagine the expenditure of $13,000,000 in a defense program being weighed against a $3,000,000,000 industry that we are trying to reach, and the abuses that we are trying to remove from that industry—abuses which the Federal court in Madison, a little over a year ago, took the first long step toward correcting by the decisions and the convictions secured in that court.

On the 28th of September I received a letter from the distinguished Attorney General. Throughout all this controversy, throughout all this discussion, throughout all this correspondence, I desire to say that the Attorney General of the United States and Mr. Thurman Arnold have taken the high position and the high plane of public interest and the obligation under their official positions; and nothing I say here must be construed in any way as criticism of these men, who were trying to carry out as well as they could—and it has been well done—the obligation that they have as representing the consuming public of the United States and all the residents of the United States, including the oil companies.

On the 28th of September the Attorney General addressed to me this letter, which I shall now read:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 28, 1940.

Hon. GUY M. GILLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: After considering your letter of September 18, urging commencement of the suits proposed by the Antitrust Division against the petroleum industry, and after studying the report of the Defense Commission, I beg to answer your letter as follows:

As national defense is the paramount problem facing the American people today, I am accepting the recommendations of the National Defense Advisory Commission and, in accordance therewith, have taken the following steps:

1. The Defense Commission advised me that it would wholeheartedly approve "any appropriate legal action brought to eliminate such restraints on competition where they are proven to exist." In accordance therewith I have authorized the Antitrust Division to commence the proposed civil action so far as it seeks to prevent existing abuses in the oil industry, including price fixing, discriminations, and all practices which tend to restrain or prejudice the independents in the industry or to jeopardize the interests of consumers.

2. The Defense Commission indicated that a court decree of divestiture at this time would create a number of serious problems for the national defense.

Accordingly, this action does not seek at this time to compel the oil companies to get rid of their pipe lines, barges, or other facilities for the transportation and distribution of petroleum. I believe there might be serious consequences from a disruption of these facilities at a time when we have no capital presently willing, so far as I am able to ascertain, to acquire and operate these facilities by themselves.

3. The National Defense Commission, however, referring to the divestiture phase of the case, says "the Commission does not suggest that the proposed suit should be abandoned." It is not being abandoned, and no action is being taken inconsistent with divestiture proceedings, either in a later action or by amendment of proceedings in the existing suit if, at the time of trial, it shall appear that the abuses in the oil industry can be corrected in no other way.

I noted with interest your suggestion that you "must not let this session of the Congress be adjourned or recessed without some action relative to" certain legislation which you have sponsored. I see no reason why the pendency of this action in any form should interfere with or delay legislative consideration of the problems of the oil industry. We know from the history of antitrust cases that many years lapse between commencement of a case and its ultimate decision. Moreover, court decrees are in the main negative affairs forbidding certain acts, combinations, and contracts. They do not necessarily lead to constructive steps in industry. In shaping legislation the Congress can provide a comprehensive and constructive plan.

The statement most significant to me in the report of the Defense Commission has been almost wholly overlooked in the discussion of these cases. It states "though by simple arithmetic it would appear that the country's reserves are good for more than 10 years under emergency conditions, declining production and higher prices for petroleum will arrive long before exhaustion of reserves unless the discovery rate is maintained and production is effected with a minimum of waste." The very fact that in considering national defense we begin to calculate the life of our oil reserves in such small figures is an ominous sign for national defense and for our economic life.

In advocating revision of the antitrust laws over 3 years ago to make them effective and clear, I repeatedly said that, in my opinion, the doctrine of compulsory competition embodied in the antitrust laws is unwisely applied to oil production where the principle of conservation of an exhaustible and irreplaceable national resource should replace the principle of competitive exploitation. The companies seem to recognize this for they have tried to limit depletion by devices of their own, but without representation of the public interest or the consumer welfare, or that of smaller producers. Private conservation plans which restrain or discriminate against independents and disregard consumer interests violate the antitrust laws, but they should not be replaced by a headlong race to exhaust petroleum supplies, but rather by a conservation plan which will be in the public interest.

Only Congress can protect the future economic life of this country by protecting oil reserves in the ground. It has made several efforts to do so, some of which have failed. I believe more comprehensive plans could be devised now which would be successful. Litigation by itself will never completely accomplish the wise utilization of this great asset by this generation or its conservation for the future.

Therefore, I urge that you do not let the pendency of litigations delay or deter the Congress from giving this basic industry consideration in the interests of conservation and orderly utilization of our basic petroleum resources.

With high regards and good wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

I call particular attention to this sentence in the letter:

We know from the history of antitrust cases that many years lapse between commencement of a case and its ultimate decision.

If many years lapse between the commencement of a suit and the decision, what possible immediate effect will it have on the national-defense situation if there is to be no decision in the suits filed before a matter of several years? But the letter of the Attorney General informs me of his decision, after careful consideration of all the elements and factors in the situation, to commence the suits; and they were in fact instituted on Monday of this week.

Mr. President, that is all of the ground that I care to cover at this time. The merits of the controversy will, of course, be determined in the courts of the United States with the pendency of these suits. I desire to make this statement:

Because of the circumstances that have put off this action month after month and month after month, it is too late in this session for us to resume hearings before the subcommittee on the bills which are here pending—the pipe-line-divorcement bill and the marketing-divorcement bill. They will, of course, die with the passing of the present Congress; but it is my intention in January, when the next Congress assembles, to reintroduce those measures substantially as they are at this time.

I wish to give notice that as soon as they are introduced I shall have them rereferred, if possible, if I can secure the action in the Committee on the Judiciary, to the same subcommittee, to resume the hearings where they were left off by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, and have this all-important work carried on.

I want to make one further remark in connection with the matter. There have appeared in the public press lately a number of articles indicating that this whole matter was to be referred to a supervisory body composed of representatives of the companies, and some of the officials of the United States Government, that Secretary Ickes, of the Department of the Interior, was meeting with representatives of some of the oil companies to pave the way for such a supervisory body.

I do not know whether or not that report is true. The only authority I have for it is a number of excerpts and clippings which were sent to me reciting that such is the plan. But I wish to give notice now that no supervisory body composed of the Secretary of the Interior, or any other official, and Mr. Teagle or anyone else representing the oil companies, shall supersede the legislative rights of the American Congress to go into this whole field. When this proposed legislation is reintroduced, if such a body is contemplated or appointed, it will not deter or delay, so far as I am able to secure action, proper action by the Senate of the United States.

EXEMPTION OF INTERBANK DEPOSITS

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, on June 14 this year the Senate passed a bill exempting, in the calculation of Federal deposit insurance charges against a bank, what are known as interbank deposits. The bill went to the House, and I understand there is now pending before the House an amendment to the Senate bill. I was informed earlier in the day that it had passed the House, but that report was wrong.

The amendment would greatly affect the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. It would increase the membership on the board controlling the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from three to four. It would increase the amount of deposit insured from $5,000 to $10,000. It would reduce the insurance premium rate from one-twelfth of 1 percent to one-fourteenth of 1 percent. It also provides for the construction of a building for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, that is a very important amendment. It makes fundamental changes in the make-up of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

In the ordinary course the bill would be sent to conference after it was returned to the Senate. I will not be here tomorrow, and thought perhaps the matter might be taken up. I believe the bill should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and not sent to conference, in the usual manner, because it is entirely too important a matter to be handled in the ordinary way.

I hope that members of the Committee on Banking and Currency will look into this piece of legislation, and I suggest that it at least be referred to the committee for study, and not passed through the adoption of a conference report.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator states that the bill has passed the House.

Mr. BROWN. It has not. I informed the Senator earlier in the day that it had, and I had gotten information to that effect. It is on the House Calendar, and ready for action at the present time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, as the author of the Senate bill, I do not believe legislation of the importance of the provisions proposed to be added by the House should be considered as an amendment to the bill passed by the Senate, which was introduced by me. So far as I am concerned, I would advocate sending the bill to the committee, where it could be given the consideration which three or four of the provisions deserve, and I do not believe it should be sent to conference.

Mr. BROWN. I think the banking fraternity generally is in favor of this reduction in rate, but I do not believe it should be made, if it is to be made at all, until we have heard from the general public, the depositing public, who are interested in the safety and security of the fund back of the deposit insurance.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10572) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think we should not proceed with this bill, involved as it is, with so few Senators present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Ashurst	Ellender	King	Shipstead
Austin	George	McKellar	Smathers
Bailey	Gerry	McNary	Stewart
Bankhead	Gibson	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gillette	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Green	Murray	Townsend
Burke	Guffey	Norris	Truman
Byrnes	Gurney	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Overton	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Pepper	Van Nuys
Chavez	Hayden	Pittman	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Radcliffe	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Reed	Wheeler
Connally	Holt	Russell	White
Danaher	Hughes	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations on page 11, lines 8 to 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Navy Department—Naval Establishment, office of the Secretary", at top of page 15, to insert:

Not to exceed $5,000 of the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, 1941", shall be available in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the payment of the services of experts now engaged on a survey and study of the methods of transacting the business of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

BUREAU OF SHIPS

Maintenance, Bureau of Ships: For the same objects specified under the appropriations or portions of appropriations transferred to and consolidated under this head in accordance with section 1 (h) of the act approved June 20, 1940 (Public, No. 644, 76th Cong.), $11,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts", on page 16, after line 3, to insert:

Reserve material, Navy: For an additional amount for reserve material, Navy, including the same objects specified under this head in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1940 and in title III of the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1941, $700,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Yards and Docks—Public Works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 16, line 15, after the word "respectively", to strike out "$6,500,000" and insert "$9,500,000", so as to read:

Toward the following public-works and public-utilities projects, including the purchase of necessary land, at a cost not to exceed the amount stated for each project, respectively, $9,500,000, which amount, together with unexpended balances of appropriations herein and heretofore made under this head, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund:

Third naval district: Graving drydock and accessory construction, New York Harbor, $10,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 17, to insert:

Naval Air Station, Corpus Christi, Tex.: Additional facilities, including the acquisition of land, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have been interested in an appropriation, in addition to that provided for in a recent appropriation bill, for facilities for the drydock at South Boston, and I expected to offer an amendment. The item unfortunately has not to date the approval of the Budget Bureau, and, therefore, would not be in order under the rules of the Senate. In this connection I ask that a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., October 2, 1940.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate:

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Referring to our recent conversation relative to the improvements of the drydock facilities at South Boston, I have investigated the present status of this project and find it to be as follows:

The total estimated cost of the dock improvements is $2,545,000. These funds are, as you know, already available. The work now under way consists of the construction of quay walls, pier, an assembly shop building, latrine, galley, storage structure, distributing systems, and miscellaneous improvements to existing structures. The work is now 40 percent completed. The scheduled date for completion in its entirety is October 1941, but at our present rate we will complete the work in May or June of 1941.

Under the circumstances, there would appear to be no great need for immediate action in obtaining additional funds for the extension of facilities at South Boston. As I stated to you, we have presented to the Bureau of the Budget a project for an appropriation of $5,000,000 in our next budget. I have received an unofficial statement from the Bureau of the Budget that this project would be looked on with favor. In the normal course of events, the project will have been approved by the Congress and the funds made available in March or April of 1941, and this means that the work now under way will be extended without interruption and very little time will be lost.

Consideration should be given, also, to the fact that, in accordance with this schedule, the facilities will be available for taking care of the big outfitting load at South Boston.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my personal thanks for the many courtesies and the very helpful cooperation which I have always received from you and your committee in connection with the development of the naval shore establishment.

Sincerely yours,

B. MOREELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 10572) was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3778) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, Mr. CREAL, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5937. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co.;

H. R. 9851. An act authorizing special arrangements in the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska; and

H. R. 10122. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869).

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 253. An act to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 1160. An act for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien;

S. 3550. An act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes;

S. 3636. An act to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes;

S. 3868. An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration;

S. 4258. An act to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, N. Y.;

S. 4353. An act to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1999. An act to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations;

H. R. 2728. An act to add certain lands to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif.;

SUPPLEMENTAL CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS, 1941

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10539, making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General appropriations—legislative," on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE

For payment to Norma Ward Lundeen, widow of Ernest Lundeen, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

So much as may be necessary of the appropriation "Clerical Assistance to Senators, 1941" is hereby made available to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay 2 additional clerks at $1,500 per annum each, 1 for each Senator from the State of Wisconsin, from the date the Census Bureau officially announces the population of said State to exceed 3,000,000 to June 30, 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 13, to insert:

For an amount required to increase the compensation of the clerk of the Finance Committee of the Senate $1,000 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

Beginning with the first day of the month next following the enactment of this act, the compensation of the assistant superintendents of the Senate press gallery shall be at the respective rates of $3,000 and $1,920 per annum, and the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1941 hereby is amended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1940, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to insert:

For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for the Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to insert:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

Senate Office Building: For painting the Senate cabinet shop, located in the Senate Office Building, under the office of the Sergeant at Arms, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 6, to insert:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Books for the adult blind: For an additional sum required to enable the Librarian of Congress to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931 (2 U. S. C. 135a), as amended, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Security Agency—Public Health Service," on page 7, after line 24, to insert:

Miscellaneous and contingent expenses: Not to exceed $10,000 of the amount appropriated for "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, Public Health Service, 1941" in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1941, may be transferred to the appropriation "Miscellaneous and contingent expenses, Public Health Service, 1941."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 5, to insert:

Emergency health and sanitation activities: For all necessary expenses to enable the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to assist State and local health authorities in health and sanitation activities in areas adjoining military and naval reservations, areas where there are concentrations of military or naval forces, and areas adjoining Government and private industrial plants having to do with national defense, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles and motortrucks; stationery; services; supplies and materials; equipment; travel; printing and binding; and items otherwise properly chargeable to the appropriation for miscellaneous and contingent expenses of the Public Health Service, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Education", on page 9, line 25, after the word "registers", to strike out "$30,000,000' and insert "$26,000,000", so as to read:

Education and training of defense workers: For payment to States, subdivisions thereof, or other public authorities operating public educational facilities, and where hereinafter authorized to engineering schools and universities, through certification from time to time made by the United States Commissioner of Education (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner") to the Secretary of the Treasury of the name of such agency or the name of such engineering school or university and the officer thereof to whom payment is to be made, and the amount to be paid, such payment to be made prior to audit and settlement by the General Accounting Office, for the furtherance of the education and training of defense workers, as follows:

(1) For the cost of vocational courses of less than college grade, provided by such agencies in vocational schools pursuant to plans submitted by such agencies and approved by the Commissioner, which plans shall include courses supplementary to employment in occupations essential to the national defense and preemployment refresher courses for workers preparing for such occupations selected from the public employment officer registers, $26,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado about the amendments on pages 9, 10, and 11, particularly as to the plan and purpose of the appropriations.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator refers to the appropriations under the Office of Education?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. The purpose of the appropriations is to provide a fund for distribution by the Office of Education to State, county, and municipal schools in order to carry on vocational education. The actual work is carried on by the State school authorities, and Federal funds are provided through the Office of Education.

Mr. WALSH. Do the proposed appropriations represent an increase over present funds?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. The regular appropriation went through in an earlier bill, and this is a supplemental and increased appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. How large is the increase?

Mr. ADAMS. The previous appropriation was $15,000,000, and this appropriation is $30,000,000, plus an item of seven and a quarter million, which is a cooperative appropriation between the N. Y. A. and the Office of Education.

Mr. WALSH. What I wish to inquire about especially is what new activities or undertakings are to follow as the result of the increased appropriation in addition to what has already been done for vocational education?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that the same blanket covers this as seems to cover all other appropriations. It is based upon the claim of national defense. It is necessary to give more boys and girls training, because they may have an opportunity to contribute to the national-defense activities.

Mr. WALSH. It is not military training?

Mr. ADAMS. No; school training. To a large extent it is mechanical training.

Mr. WALSH. The purpose is to broaden and increase the vocational training which has been provided for in the past in the expectation and hope that education along mechanical lines, let us say, will be of assistance in providing persons for trades and occupations in after life which will be helpful to the national defense?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct. As the Senator knows, the national-defense angle appears everywhere.

Mr. WALSH. I realize that.

Mr. ADAMS. I say that without making any personal comment about it.

Mr. WALSH. I recognize the importance of the words "national defense" at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the question involved in any of these appropriations whether or not the N. Y. A. is to set up independent educational facilities of its own?

Mr. ADAMS. That question arose in the committee. There was an appropriation aggregating $40,000,000, of which seven and a quarter million was in cooperation with the Office of Education. From some of the testimony which came to us from the N. Y. A. authorities it seemed to the committee that the N. Y. A., under the authorization contained in the bill, might contemplate doing something outside the program of the Congress for the N. Y. A., and in conflict with the understanding between the Office of Education and the N. Y. A., by setting up independent schools. The Senate committee endeavored to meet that situation by an amendment which is found on page 13, which provides, in connection with that appropriation, that all amounts to be expended by the National Youth Administration shall be under the control and supervision of State boards for vocational education of the several States and shall be paid for out of appropriations made to the Office of Education and expended by the States pursuant to plans submitted by State boards for vocational education and approved by the Commissioner of Education as provided for under the heading "Office of Education." In other words, the amendment takes away from the N. Y. A. the authority—if it had any—to establish independent competitive schools.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is a complete and commendable answer to my inquiry.

Mr. ADAMS. We had a great many communications from educational boards and the heads of State educational institutions which led to that amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the RECORD should show that the Office of Education and the Director of the N. Y. A. have arrived at an agreement which, according to my understanding of the testimony, is satisfactory to the Office of Education and to the N. Y. A.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the agreement between the two organizations, so that it may be in the RECORD for reference.

There being no objection, the agreement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFINITION OF THE RESPECTIVE FUNCTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES OFFICE OF EDUCATION AND THE NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

This statement was agreed to in Washington, D. C., July 27, 1940, by Aubrey Williams, Federal Administrator of the National Youth Administration; J. W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education; and a group of chief State school officers and State directors of vocational education.

J. W. STUDEBAKER.

The sole purpose of the United States Office of Education is to "promote the cause of education throughout the country" and thus to "aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems",[1] including "cooperation with the States in the promotion of vocational education."[2] In securing the establishment of policies and in the operation of procedures to achieve this purpose, the Office necessarily works regularly and officially with and through State departments of education, institutions of higher learning, and local school systems. In general, its methods involve (1) cooperative relationships with State educational systems and agencies, especially through grants-in-aid of various forms of vocational education and for the operation of land-grant colleges and universities; (2) research and the dissemination of its findings; (3) leadership and clearinghouse functions concerning education in general performed through national and State conferences, educational planning, publications, and public addresses; and (4) experimentation and demonstrations to discover more effective educational policies and practices.

Through the years, therefore, the United States Office of Education has naturally and necessarily established its contacts with the schools and colleges in the States. To avoid overlapping and confusion of functions and duplication of effort, and to secure economy and efficiency in the operation of policies requiring Federal-State relationships with the school systems in the States, it is essential that the responsibility for Federal policies designed to stimulate or to support expansions or modifications of educational services to the youth of the country be placed in the United States Office of Education.

The purpose of the National Youth Administration is to furnish employment to needy youth. Incidental to and as a part of such employment, there is necessarily an element of training. But the operation of schools and training programs as such is not a function of the National Youth Administration. To several hundred thousand young people in high schools and colleges, the employment provided by the National Youth Administration furnishes a means of enabling the students to remain in school or college. For out-of-school young people of the ages 17 to 25, employment will be provided on work projects, to enable each person employed to earn a subsistence wage, or about $18 per month. In general young people employed by the National Youth Administration are expected to work an average of 15 hours a week. The national program is administered by a staff in Washington which operates through State organizations established for the special purpose of administering the program of the National Youth Administration.

Since any sound program for the development of youth should be designed to eliminate idleness among young people, and to substitute therefor the productive use of their time either in full-time productive work or in full-time education, or in a combination of both, it is the general objective of the national program of work and education for youth sponsored by the National Youth Administration and the United States Office of Education, respectively, to engage the time of each young person employed by the National Youth Administration during at least 30 hours each week.

Briefly, then, the function of the United States Office of Education is to secure the development and operation of educational or training programs for all youth, and the function of the National Youth Administration is to organize and administer programs of work for needy or selected youth.

In view of these clearly defined and mutually exclusive functions of the two agencies, it is agreed that:

1. It is the function of the United States Office of Education to exercise leadership in developing and in administering federally financed programs of education, including emergency-training programs to be conducted cooperatively by the Federal Government, the States, and the local communities, in schools and colleges. The Office, in accordance with its long-time policy, will develop and administer such programs through the established channels of educational administration.

2. It is the function of the National Youth Administration to provide and administer the funds with which to support programs of student work for young people who will be enrolled full time in schools or colleges, and also employment on work projects for other young people, all of whom will be provided with related or necessary instruction under the direction of Federal, State, and local educational authorities.

3. In establishing and carrying forward Federal-State relations while performing the functions as indicated under paragraph 1 above, the United States Office of Education is the Federal agency responsible for dealing directly with State educational systems and institutions.

4. In performing its functions as specified in paragraph 2 above, the Federal office of the National Youth Administration will be responsible for dealing directly with its authorized agents in the State.

5. In working out policies for the development of their respective programs, neither the United States Office of Education nor the National Youth Administration will seek to secure appropriations with which to support activities in the States which are not strictly in accordance with the respective functions of these agencies as indicated above.

6. It is understood that insofar as the Federal Government participates in the support of educational services in the States for young people employed by the National Youth Administration and involving personnel, supplies, equipment, and other operating costs, such support will be limited to the funds made available to the United States Office of Education and allotted by it to the States.

7. The United States Commissioner of Education and the Federal Administrator of the National Youth Administration assume the responsibility for securing the acceptance of this definition of functions by the officials of State departments of education and the State administrators of the National Youth Administration respectively.

8. In planning projects the State Youth Administrator shall work out jointly with the State department of education the nature of and plan for the work including the location of the project. The State department of education shall be responsible for developing a program of education suited to the needs of the youth employed on such projects. In any situation in which the State department of education decides that it is not feasible to furnish instruction in addition to that which is incidental to and a part of the work and is given during the work period, the specific situation in question shall be referred to a committee of three persons, selected jointly by the State director of vocational education and the State administrator of the National Youth Administration. This committee shall decide whether such additional instruction is to be provided and whether the State department of education or the National Youth Administration shall provide it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Did the committee believe that it was the function of the Bureau of Education and the N. Y. A. to take charge of educational activities and facilities, and that the committee had nothing to do other than to approve any agreement which they might enter into? I am wondering where the authority exists for these large expenditures for education, which may encroach upon the activities, functions, and powers of States and their political subdivisions.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not in a position to answer as to what was in the minds of other members of the committee. I can say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, I have always been unwilling to have a Federal agency trespass upon the domain of the control of education by the States; but this is done pursuant to acts of Congress heretofore passed, and we have endeavored by the amendment, which I read in part to the Senator from Michigan, to assure control of educational processes by the State educational authorities, so that the Federal Government would be assisting, and not controlling, State education.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether or not any restrictions are contained in the bill in regard to the activities of or the sphere in which the N. Y. A. organization shall operate; or may it operate as it sees fit?

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will refer to the amendment which begins at the bottom of page 13 and continues at the top of page 14 I think he will find a limitation which meets his objections.

Mr. KING. What amount has been added by the bill to the appropriations heretofore authorized by Congress for the Bureau of Education and for the youth movement?

Mr. ADAMS. Seventy million dollars.

Mr. KING. Added to what has heretofore been appropriated for the coming year?

Mr. ADAMS. For the current fiscal year the N. Y. A. has an appropriation of $102,000,000. The Office of Education has $15,000,000. The bill adds $70,000,000.

Mr. KING. Is that conceived to be a part of the national-defense program?

[1] Excerpt from act of 39th Cong., 2d sess., approved by President Andrew Johnson, March 2, 1867.

[2] Excerpt from Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act passed by Congress February 23, 1917.

Mr. ADAMS. When the Senator asks, "Is that conceived to be a part of the national-defense program?" to whom does he refer?

Mr. KING. To the committee which reported the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer for the committee. I can answer as to what the committee did. I cannot answer as to what the committee thought.

Mr. KING. I understood that the bill was a measure devoted to national defense.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to make a correction. The clerk of the committee advises me that I have made an error in my figures. Instead of $70,000,000, $92,000,000 has been added.

Mr. KING. That is unimportant, in view of the enormous appropriations which we make from day to day. I was about to say from week to week, or from month to month, but it becomes almost from hour to hour. The point I am trying to bring out is that I understood that the bill was to deal with the question of national defense.

Mr. ADAMS. Not this bill. I will say that the national-defense thread is carried through all the testimony as one of the supporting elements, but this is not primarily a national-defense bill. It is a supplemental appropriation bill for civil functions.

Mr. KING. It has more or less to do with the activities of the military arm of the Government, has it not?

Mr. ADAMS. Very little.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to yield as soon as the Senator from Utah shall have concluded.

Mr. KING. As I understand, whatever the purpose of the bill is, it increases the appropriations for the Bureau of Education and for the youth movement to the extent of $92,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct as to the figure.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator have in his mind the total appropriation for these two organizations for the coming year?

Mr. ADAMS. For the two the figures are $102,000,000 for the N. Y. A. and $15,000,000 for the Office of Education, and the addition of $92,000,000 will make the total about $209,000,000.

Mr. KING. That would be the aggregate appropriation for those two organizations?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; which I think is entirely adequate.

Mr. KING. Many believe that it is entirely too much, because it looks as though we are attempting to place our educational system more or less under the control of the Federal Government, to which I am very much opposed.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is not going to engage in any controversy with me about that.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if it is not true that practically every single agent of the Government who has appeared before the Appropriations Committee asking for increased appropriations within the last 2 or 3 years has asked for the increase on the ground of national defense, even if it is a grazing appropriation or anything else?

Mr. ADAMS. I should not want quite to agree with that. I will state to the Senator that, while I am a great believer and advocate and supporter of national defense, I think it has been overplayed somewhat. Almost all officials of the Government feel that their particular function contributes to the national defense. I think they are honest about it, but I sometimes think they exaggerate their own importance in the scheme of national defense.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee which was last stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 6, after the word "Commissioner", to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$8,000,000", so as to read:

(2) For the purchase, rental, or other acquisition of new or used equipment when needed by agencies in providing courses pursuant to a plan approved under (1) of this heading when such acquisitions are in accord with detailed proposals submitted by such agencies and approved by the Commissioner, $8,000,000: Provided, That the proposals approved by the Commissioner shall include provisions governing the holding of title to and the use of the equipment to be acquired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 15, after the figures "$7,500,000", to strike out the semicolon and "and for the purposes of the National Youth Administration Appropriation Act, 1941, such courses and instruction may be regarded as work on a 'public project'", and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the amount allotted to any agency shall be available for expenditure for purchase or rental of additional equipment and rental of additional space found by the Commissioner to be necessary for carrying out the approved plan", so as to read:

(5) For the cost of vocational courses and related or other necessary instruction provided by such agencies for young people employed on work projects of the National Youth Administration, such courses and instruction to be provided pursuant to plans submitted by such agencies and approved by the Commissioner, $7,500,000: Provided, That the amount allotted to any agency shall be available for expenditure for purchase or rental of additional equipment and rental of additional space found by the Commissioner to be necessary for carrying out the approved plan.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think an explanation should be made in connection with this amendment striking out the House provision. As it came from the House, it seemed to us to permit the furnishing of education for a young man as "a project" so that he would be paid for going to school. We did not think that when the Government endeavors to aid a young man to obtain vocational education it should be made a project. The original N. Y. A. theory was that in the case of young men who wanted to go to school, who had need for school, but were unable to finance themselves, the N. Y. A. would find employment for them, so that they would earn sufficient money to carry themselves through school. The average amount which the N. Y. A. was providing for the young men was about $20 a month. For the $20 a month the young man performed certain work which took a part of his time, and during the other part of his time he went to school. It never occurred to Congress that we were to pay any young man for going to school. So we are striking from the bill the provision which would make going to school a project, so the young man would not have to do any work, but would merely have to go to school and be paid for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Youth Administration", on page 13, line 21, after the numerals "1941", to insert a comma and "except (a) that all training or educational programs for youth employed by the National Youth Administration on work projects shall be under the control and supervision of the State boards for vocational education of the several States and shall be paid for out of appropriations made to the Office of Education and expended by the States pursuant to plans submitted by State boards for vocational education and approved by the Commissioner of Education as provided for in this act under the heading, 'Office of Education', paragraph (5), and"; and on page 14, line 11, after the word "act", to strike out the colon and "Provided, That the proviso appearing in paragraph 4 of such act as to the distribution of funds among the several States shall not apply to such sum of $30,535,375", so as to read:

For additional amounts for the National Youth Administration to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the National Youth Administration Appropriation Act, 1941, except (a) that all training or educational programs for youth employed by the National Youth Administration on work projects shall be under the control and supervision of the State boards for vocational education of the several States and shall be paid for out of appropriations made to the Office of Education and expended by the States pursuant to plans submitted by State boards for vocational education and approved by the Commissioner of Education as provided for in this act under the heading, "Office of Education", paragraph (5), and except as hereinafter provided, for the following purposes:

For the purposes and objects specified in paragraph 1 (b) of such act, $30,535,375, of which $50,000 shall be available to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission for the purposes of paragraph 18 of such act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Works Agency—Public Buildings Administration", on page 14, after line 21, to insert:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia: For an additional amount for administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, maintained and operated by the Public Buildings Administration, Federal Works Agency, including the same objects specified under this heading in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941, $2,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there is a typographical error in the committee amendment on line 4, page 15. It is a very easy type of error to make in these days of liberal figures, but the printer put in an extra cipher in line 4. The figures should read "$200,000" and not "$2,000,000." I ask permission to correct that error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the correction proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be made, and, without objection, the committee amendment, as corrected, is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 19, to insert:

Navy Department Building, Washington, D. C.: For the construction of an additional wing on the Navy Department Building and an additional story on wing No. 1 thereof, under the provisions of the Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926, as amended, including administrative expenses in connection therewith, $590,000: Provided, That the contract or contracts for such project may be entered into without advertising.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the proviso on page 17, which reads:

Provided, That the contract or contracts for such project may be entered into without advertising.

Does this mean without competitive bidding?

Mr. ADAMS. That is what it would mean.

Mr. WALSH. So that this construction work will be done by negotiated contracts?

Mr. ADAMS. That would be the result. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this same provision is made in lines 5, 6, and 7, page 16, in reference to Federal office buildings, and in lines 18 and 19 in reference to certain other buildings. Whether it is sound or not, the justification submitted is that it is a matter of emergency, and that advertising would involve probably an extra several weeks' delay.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that I have ever done anything that has caused me more annoyance, though I felt it my duty to do it, than to provide for the making of negotiated contracts to speed up our defense. It has resulted in an army of contractors seeking various kinds of influence for the purpose of getting contracts. I am of the opinion that negotiated contracts ought not to be used except when there is a real emergency.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator wishes to make a motion to strike out these provisions from the bill, he will get one vote in addition to his.

Mr. WALSH. If the Department feels there is a real emergency, and it is very necessary to have the building constructed at once because of lack of quarters, I should not be opposed to that; but I am concerned about letting down the bars to the extent of having all Government work during this period performed under negotiated contracts. We should adhere to the competitive-bidding system as much as possible.

Mr. ADAMS. I am entirely in accord with the Senator, but my own judgment as to the imminence of emergency and the presence of a crisis does not conform with the view of a majority of the Senate. So I have restrained myself, but I will be glad to support the Senator if he wants to make a motion.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose every Senator has had the experience I have had—that when provision has been made for negotiated contracts it has thrown open the floodgates for the use of influence on the part of those who very naturally and properly seek contracts which are so easy to handle and so profitable to the contractor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Navy Department is housed in the Munitions Building. Of course, as we all know, the Department is obliged to have additional space. The testimony before the committee was that it was absolutely necessary that they have more space, and I think the place provided is the most available to afford the additional space. The officials of the Navy Department say they need it, that they need it right now, that they have not the necessary room, and it is absolutely necessary for this construction work to be done.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that contracts ought to be let through public bidding; we all feel that way; but the peculiar circumstances that surrounded this particular matter caused the committee to agree that the building might be constructed in this way. I do not think it is even a permanent building. I think the old building ought to be removed as soon as possible, but according to the testimony offered, there was nothing else to be done.

Mr. WALSH. I did not rise to question the amendment or to object to it, but I thought it was an appropriate time for the Senate to indicate to the departments of the Government that the negotiated-contract system ought to be restricted to cases of absolute necessity. I rose more for the purpose of sounding a note of warning that they should employ negotiated contracts for public purposes only when it is impossible to get hasty action through competitive bidding.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator has done so. I agree with him entirely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield if I have the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Assuming that the Senator made out a case of emergency in connection with the Navy Department, what about the fact that on page 16 of the bill there are authorized two Federal office buildings for general use and the contracts are permitted to be made without advertising. It seems to be not merely an emergency formula at the moment, but to be the new standard practice.

Mr. McKELLAR. It certainly is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator approve of that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say that I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is a very influential member of the committee and I am not. I wish he would give me some guidance out of this wilderness.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is not much guidance at the present time, because the departments undertake to make an emergency out of everything and the cost-plus-fixed-fee system of contracts has been adopted by them and is being used.

It is but fair to say that a great many think the Government will thereby save money, rather than to have competitive bidding. I do not believe so. I believe in competitive bidding and have always believed in it, but in the emergency it is to be dispensed with, and has been dispensed with.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are these two general Federal office buildings emergency projects?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am frank to say that matter was not brought to the direct attention of the committee, because there was no amendment offered in regard to that item.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Colorado what is to be the use of the two general Federal office buildings covered by lines 2 to 7 on page 16?

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, the one provided for beginning in line 8 is definitely described as a central heating plant. The other two buildings are general buildings, and provision for them, as the Senator will note, was made originally by the other House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the emergency in connection with their construction?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that in the report of the House committee, apparently it was intended "to care for the greatly augmented forces required for the War and Navy Departments," and then they add "and other agencies." That clause is just as definite to me as it is to the Senator from Michigan. The original request was for eight and a half million dollars for a building; and that was then divided by the House committee into two buildings of an aggregate cost of $6,400,000, which were to be for the use primarily of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am trying to get at is that this new process of permitting contracts without advertising does not seem to be confined solely to imminent emergencies. It seems to be a new standard practice. Is not that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to have occurred rather more often than I personally would wish. In the House report the committee attempted to justify that provision as to the heating plant by saying:

> This course will expedite the provision of the space urgently needed in these low-cost buildings and in the case of the heating plant will accelerate its utilization for next winter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, it would expedite matters still further if the departments did not even bother to come to Congress for the appropriation. Something besides expedition is involved, however.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator knows that we still have, on the part of departments, the embarrassment of the Constitution, which requires appropriations. We have ways of going around that constitutional provision; but they have not been made use of, as yet, in these matters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Both of these were House provisions; and, as I recall, no evidence was given and no question was raised as to either one of those provisions before the Senate committee, either the one beginning on line 2 or the one beginning on line 8.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator object if I should offer an amendment to strike out the provisos in both instances?

Mr. ADAMS. I should not object if the Senator should obtain unanimous consent to offer the amendment. We have a unanimous-consent agreement that committee amendments shall be first considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment striking out the proviso beginning in line 5 and ending with the word "advertising" in line 7 of page 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, line 5, it is proposed to strike out:

> Provided, That the contract or contracts for either or both of such projects may be entered into without advertising.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the offering of the amendment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a question. I have heard a great deal of discussion about this being a new method, and I wonder if it is.

I notice that the text of the bill refers to the act of 1926. That act is devoted in large part to the erection of public buildings in the District of Columbia. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he does not understand that that act gave the same authority which is contained in these provisos by the following language—and I am reading from page 631 of volume 44 of Public Laws:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to carry on the construction work herein authorized by contract, or otherwise, as he deems most advantageous to the United States.

I ask the question. I am not very familiar with this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator asks me the question, I believe that under the law as it is now, buildings such as those mentioned here must be submitted to competitive bidding. Otherwise, there would have been no necessity of the House putting in those two provisos. I am frank to say that they were not called to the attention of our committee; and it seems to me, in the interest of having proper legislation, that the two provisos ought to be stricken out. That is why I ask unanimous consent to strike out the first proviso in line 5, ending in line 7; and, if that is done, I shall offer an amendment to strike out the second proviso in line 17.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask a further question before the request of the Senator from Tennessee is acted upon? Is there not some Senator here who knows definitely the reason for waiving the advertising for bids in this case?

Mr. McKELLAR. That matter was not brought before our committee. It will be before the conference committee if my amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was about to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to give us any light he can give on the question whether it is necessary to waive a requirement of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in my opinion the Navy Department—and I think the same statement applies to the War Department—is unable to negotiate any contract without advertising, and without giving the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. That is the general law so far as the Navy is concerned. In the legislation passed this year that requirement was waived, so as to permit negotiated contracts to be made under certain circumstances and in cases of emergency; so the bar of compelling competitive bidding, and compelling the award of the contract to the lowest bidder, has been lifted so far as the Navy is concerned during the present emergency. It is limited, however, to the present emergency.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask another question. If we should accept the bill as proposed, would the Navy Department construct this building, or would it be constructed under the provisions of the Public Building Act approved May 25, 1926, as amended?

Mr. WALSH. The Navy Department does all of its own building. It contracts for it, makes the specifications, and disburses all the funds for building under the Navy Department.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Referring to the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] with reference to negotiated contracts, I think we all realize that in the case of the larger contracts it is almost necessary to authorize the various departments to negotiate them. Otherwise there would be almost interminable delay in advertising, preparing specifications, and all that, and then letting the contract to the lowest responsible bidder.

I realize that in normal times it is always advisable to have competitive bidding on contracts; but under the circumstances which now prevail it has seemed wise to authorize negotiated contracts, especially in the case of the larger contracts, involving millions of dollars and materials going into various equipments of the Army and Navy and the defense program. I fully appreciate, however, what the Senator says about the terrific inconvenience that has been brought to the shoulders of Senators by individual contractors within our own States, who seem to have an idea that all we have to do is to call up some department and ask that a contract be awarded to that particular firm and it will be done.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if he were chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee he would not be invited to do what he has stated. He would be told that he could do it if he wanted to.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. I have had instances of that sort. Of course, we have to steel ourselves against criticism when we are unwilling to become special pleaders in Washington for contractors within our own States. Personally, I have refused to become any such special pleader; and I should hate to think that any Senator could call up any department and ask that a contract be awarded to some constituent of his and that it would be done. Certainly the award of such a contract would not be on a scientific basis.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator understands that those appeals are made to him and to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] because of their prominence, and that some of the rest of us are never even honored, or dishonored, with those requests.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have a suspicion that if I were to examine the Senator's mail I should be able to dispute the suggestion that he has not been called on to do the same thing. All Senators have; and it is a perfectly natural thing, because our friends back home who constitute the firms which are in the contracting business do not know anybody in Washington except us. They have no direct contact with the War Department or the Navy Department or any other department, or with the Council of National Defense; and the natural thing for them to do is to write to us, and of course, all our inclinations and our natural desires would be to help them, if possible.

It would be an utterly impossible situation if these contracts were to be let upon any political basis or through any political influence of any sort, and, while it is inconvenient to have to be sought by our friends to get contracts for them, I think we must assume the responsibility of saying that these things are not political, and that in certain cases negotiated contracts are necessary in order that interminable delay may be avoided.

I wish to reiterate and emphasize what the Senator from Tennessee has said with regard to the buildings on Constitution Avenue. During the World War many temporary buildings were erected in many sections of Washington, most of which have been torn down. When the Munitions Building and the Navy Building were erected on Constitution Avenue, buildings which really obstruct the view of the Lincoln Memorial until one gets beyond them, and which are a horrible eyesore in the Potomac Park development, they were constructed of concrete and steel, and are more permanent in their structure than various other buildings which were built of stucco and wood, most of which have been torn down. For a long time I have hoped that we might finally eliminate those buildings on the south side of Constitution Avenue near the Washington monument.

I am for almost anything that will give the same amount of space in any other section of Washington. When those buildings were erected, 20 or 25 years ago, there was more empty space, more vacant lots, and more vacant territory, in other parts of the city, where the buildings could have been constructed, than the Government could possibly have occupied, but for some reason they were erected on Constitution Avenue, in a part of Potomac Park, and built of permanent materials, which makes it difficult to persuade Congress to eliminate them.

I share the views of the Senator from Tennessee on that subject, and I hope that ultimately we may be able to remove those buildings, so that they will not interfere with the development of that part of the District of Columbia, and that they may be put elsewhere.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Senator from Kentucky knows that there is a plan to remove those buildings, and to erect, on the present site of the Naval Hospital, a new series of buildings to house the Army and the Navy activities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, and that can be done when the Naval Hospital is finally moved to the site on the road to Rockville, where the new Naval Hospital is now under process of construction. I think that should be done as soon as possible.

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to note, also, that the Senator feels as I do with reference to the care and caution which should be exercised by the departments in substituting negotiated contracts for competitive bidding.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a brief statement?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think that if we will just stop and reflect for a moment we can see a very good reason why these contracts are being let on the suggested basis.

It is obvious that the administration is trying to keep prices down. It is trying to keep down the price of steel, the price of cement, and the prices of all things which go into the building of the structures which must be erected under the national-defense program. Yet the responsible authorities are not sure that prices may be kept stable.

We are spending this year many billion dollars. In all times in the past when vast sums have been expended, prices have tended to rise, and it is now thought by many that prices will rise.

I believe it is impossible to secure responsible contractors who will make bids for the construction of large buildings on the present basis of prices. The contractors do not know how much they will have to pay for brick, cement, labor, or anything else 6 months or 12 months from now, and because of this condition, and the departments' desire to employ the negotiated-contract system, as contractors will not bid on a reasonable basis at this time, but must bid on a basis which will take care of any eventuality. With the possibility that prices may rise 15 or 20 percent, they must now bid sufficiently high to cover any increase in the next 6, 9, or 12 months.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, is he aware of the fact that there is another problem which confronts the Government, that is, the difficulty of getting material? For example, I happen to know of a specific contract which calls for the use of structural steel, and it was not obtainable in time to perform the contract within the time limit. Therefore the parties had to amend the contract in order to be able to make progress, under the conditions of today.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at the present time the officials are having trouble in securing lumber with which to construct the necessary housing facilities to take care of our increasing Army. The responsible authorities believe that they can make the contracts on what might be termed a cost-plus basis, and get the buildings completed quicker and for less money than they could by asking for bids and letting contracts, for the obvious reason that the contractors will want to bid high enough so as to protect themselves against what may happen. It is for that reason, I understand, that they believe it is better business to employ the negotiated-contract method. They are of opinion that they will get better buildings and get them more quickly, and really get them for less money.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I have been much impressed by the various arguments which have been submitted as to why we should depart from a perfectly sound principle and practice, but I do not want the matter to be passed without registering my protest against the abandonment of a practice which is sound, which serves the public interest, and in the absence of which we necessarily run into all kinds of trouble.

Mr. President, it is not a question of whether Senators are disturbed by the demands made by their constituents. That, I think, is negligible. It is not a question of whether some contractor or manufacturer in any one State is importuning the Senator from that State to get him a contract. That seems to me to be not at all involved in the matter. It may be a matter of some inconvenience and some little worry, at times, but it is not fundamental. What the Senator from Oklahoma says, of course, is true in all periods such as the present. Yet, I dare say, that if there ever was a time when we could not relax a sound rule, it is exactly in this kind of time.

I wish now to make another statement, because this matter is not new to me. I have been worrying about it for some time, and have been making some investigations into it.

There has been under way a definite program to employ negotiated contracts as to standard articles which are purchased by the Army and by the Navy.

There has been a definite purpose to resort to the negotiated contract, to abandon the method of requesting bids for ordnance in the War and Navy Departments, and other departments of the Government, for things which are standardized, and as to which the Regular Army and Navy set-up has had abundant experience for years and years and years, and as to which, I think I may say, there has been no profiteering.

Anyone familiar with the textile business can find contract after contract negotiated by responsible merchants and manufacturers to supply the needs of the War and Navy Departments at no profit at all, because it was in the interest of the industry to have the orders so that the manufacturers might take care of their large organizations.

There is another reason why there is a desire to get away from public bidding, and the other reason is the very reason why this rule should not be relaxed. When we get rid of public bidding, someone, some individual, some little bureau, some little agent, has the power to deny business to a legitimate concern, to a respectable business, to honest contractors and honest manufacturers. Some little bureau, some one little agent—because finally and at last it all comes down to one or two men back of the scenes controlling it all—has the power to discriminate between States and has the power to discriminate between sections.

This question has been one of controversy, as some of us happen to know, in the Council of National Defense. The primary purpose is to go to the negotiated contract in order to avoid public bidding, to avoid asking for bids, for one purpose; that is, for the purpose of enabling the official to say to the manufacturer or to the merchant, "We do not like the methods you are employing with respect to labor, or something else, and we will not negotiate a contract with you." It does not make any difference whether or not the concern is complying with the labor laws; it does not make any difference whether the concern is complying with the hour and wage law; that does not make any difference, for if we put the matter into the hands of the officials in any single procurement branch of the Government, they will have the power to deny a contract because the contractor is not favoring the right kind of a labor organization within his plant.

Mr. President, I am speaking plainly about this matter, but I wish to register my protest against the abandonment of a perfectly sound principle which should not be relaxed in an hour when we are throwing billions of dollars into the market to purchase countless kinds of commodities.

It is perfectly easy to say, "You have a mill here which is organized, but the American Federation of Labor is the recognized agent with whom you are contracting." Someone may want a contract with a mill which is employing C. I. O. agents as the representatives of labor.

When competitive bidding is broken down, when the Government ceases to invite bids, and when the departments are given a free hand to negotiate all contracts, we simply invite sectional discrimination, State discrimination, discrimination between industries, and discrimination for reasons not sanctioned by the Congress, and which Congress would not sanction.

Mr. President, if we would take the time to note the real reasons which lie back of many things that are requested of us, I am satisfied the Congress would not care to accede to the requests. Oh, I know very well that there are many things that cannot very well be done by means of public bidding. I know that such a course may result in some delay. I know that we are now in a period when prices may rise. I realize all that, but I know very well it is possible in any contracts to take care of any abnormal rise in labor or material prices. I know very well that any careful contractor will do so.

Invitation to the public to make bids is a procedure which ought not to be abandoned, because it is sound, and it eliminates certain opportunities for discrimination and partiality. In the handling of public funds there ought not to be any encouragement lent to discrimination and partiality. I do not mean to say that in the particular cases in question any such reason exists, or that it exists in any particular case, but in many of the appropriations we have thus far made I think I have noticed other provisions for the purchasing of materials or for the letting of contracts without competitive bidding or without any invitation to bid.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Colorado has the floor. I am trespassing on his time.

Mr. ADAMS. We passed an excess-profits tax measure. Of course, a Senator can hardly be excused for not having mastered all its details, but I have been busy with some other matters, and I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia whether in that bill Congress repealed the provisions placing some limitations on profits made under any of these Government contracts? I know that question was under consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. They were not repealed but they were suspended. All the profit limitations under the Vinson-Trammell Act, as amended, were suspended in the excess-profits tax measure for a specified time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not think the issue raised by the Senator from Georgia can be overemphasized. There is already complaint from contractors throughout the country that when specifications for new work have been published they find that the contract has already been made, before publication. At least they have made statements to me to that effect. If that be so, it seems to me to be very dangerous to permit such a course to be continued, and I, at least, think the Congress ought to know something about it, if the executive branch does not.

Mr. President, we are now entering upon a great program involving tremendous expenditures, and unless someone keeps an eye on the expenditures we may have a repetition of the cost-plus scandals of the last war.

There has also been complaint not only of favoritism but of secrecy, and that only certain favored people can get the necessary information. For instance, reference has been made to a very prominent man in political circles having received contracts for architectural work amounting to approximately a million dollars in the very first few days of this great expenditure program. At least it has so been stated in the press. I hope something will be done, if not by the executive department, at least by the Senate or the House, to make sure that there will not be a repetition of the scandals of the last World War.

Mr. President, something has been said about a great number of buildings being placed in downtown Washington. I do not know what can be done about it, but I want to protest against the concentration of buildings in the center of the metropolitan area of Washington. We are building up a congested district. We are adding to the congestion of traffic.

In some cities there may be some reason for it, but the whole State of Virginia, the whole State of Maryland, surround the city of Washington. There is plenty of room to scatter out the city and make it a beautiful city, instead of making a congested metropolitan area in which are crowded Federal buildings, resulting in hundreds of thousands of workers coming out of the buildings and into a congested space between the hours of 4 and 6 in the evening. The traffic congestion is already so bad it is almost impossible at certain times to drive through the downtown areas. A pedestrian is about as safe in the congestion of traffic there as would be a jackrabbit chased by a dozen greyhounds.

Mr. President, that is a matter concerning which we ought to look to the future. So far as the city of Washington is concerned, we have already gone so far in building as to show that we have not had foresight enough to prevent a beautiful city, such as Washington is, becoming the congested mess that it is downtown.

I believe the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should take cognizance of the kind of planning that is being followed here, and if possible prevent this city from becoming a congested mass, which will spoil the beauty of the city, and make it almost impossible to get home at night, or to get downtown in the morning.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the Committee on Appropriations 2 or 3 years ago took one step to protect against that danger. There was a plan to erect a great building across from the Senate Office Building, but the Committee on Appropriations decided there were enough people going in and out of that building, without bringing three or four thousand more people into the immediate neighborhood. So something has been done by the Committee on Appropriations to protect the Senator and his associates.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to ask the Senator about a matter which has no relationship to the bill now under immediate discussion. There is a bill now on the calendar, which we hope to take up following the disposition of the pending measure. That bill relates to housing, particularly military housing. It was discussed last Monday on the call of the calendar for over an hour, and then objected to. If that bill, which provides for an authorization, had passed the Senate, it might have been possible for the bill now under consideration to have contained some appropriation for the beginning of that particular work. If the bill passes today, which I hope it may, authorizing the construction of certain housing facilities, what will be the possibility or probability with respect to getting any appropriations made at this session to begin the work provided for in the bill to which I refer? Would the departments involved have the authority to go ahead and contract for the construction of houses?

For instance, at Radford, Va., where recent developments have compelled an increase to be made in the plant and the facilities for turning out the product which is manufactured there, there is a shortage of housing facilities. The Du Pont Co. has made a contract with the War Department for the construction of a powder plant in Indiana costing $25,000,000, and it has been found necessary to increase the allotment for that purpose to $41,000,000, or some such sum, because of the explosion which took place recently in New Jersey. There are no housing facilities at Charlestown, Ind., which even approximate adequate facilities for housing the men who will be compelled to work there. When the pending bill is enacted, which may be the last deficiency bill at this particular time, and assuming that the Senate and the House agree on the bill providing for housing, which is largely military, and which is in charge of the Senator from Texas, and which we hope to have taken up next, what will be the situation with respect to going ahead with that work? Will it be possible for the Government to enter into contracts under the authorization with the expectation that a later appropriation will be brought in?

Mr. ADAMS. I can say "No," not unless there is an appropriation. Of course the Senator knows there is a very large sum of money at the disposal of the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, there was, but there is not now, because out of the $200,000,000, $100,000,000 was to be expended in cash and the other $100,000,000 was in authorizations. My information is that that authority has been wellnigh exhausted.

Mr. ADAMS. We are putting $29,000,000 back into the President's fund in the bills we are passing today.

Mr. BARKLEY. What does the Senator mean by "putting it back"?

Mr. ADAMS. I mean that the President expended $29,000,000 for certain purposes, and the pending bill appropriates $29,000,000 to replenish his fund to that extent.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I have in mind is the necessity or desirability of avoiding any delay in beginning the projects which will be authorized by the bill which we hope to pass today.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, the Senator knows that there are certain very large housing appropriations which are not very narrowly confined. I think there was an item of some $330,000,000 in a measure which passed a few days ago which had a housing aspect. We had one-hundred-and-twenty-million-odd dollars in another bill. There is a very large available fund.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; but none of the other appropriations are for the same purposes as those covered in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I think part of the money would be available, under the language of the appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably it would not be fruitful to enter into an argument over the question now, because there is no item in this bill about it; but there is great anxiety about starting the work under a bill which I hope will soon be passed; and I am wondering whether or not any delay will be brought about because of the failure of the Senate to pass the bill a few days ago. If it had been passed, it would have authorized at least an initial appropriation in the pending bill to begin the work.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The $29,000,000 which was expended from the President's fund and which is being replaced by this bill, was expended on an urgent recommendation made by the Chief of Staff. In certain military camps it was necessary to have water, sewerage, and things of that kind. Normally such things would be provided. Merely to save time, the Chief of Staff obtained the money from the President, so that the National Guard could go to camp. We are replacing that money, which was expended on account of an emergency. With respect to the $100,000,000 which the President has in contractual authority, I doubt if that has been utilized. He may have used the cash.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the cash has been almost completely exhausted.

Mr. HAYDEN. The situation about which the Senator is talking might be met out of the $100,000,000 of contractual authority if Congress were not to be in session again until the end of the year. The President might possibly utilize that authorization, and on proper representation to Congress we could hereafter restore the contractual authority for some other purpose. I do not think we are getting into a hopeless situation. Let me further point out that undoubtedly we shall be back in 5 or 6 weeks, and it will be possible to care for the situation at that time.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I am specifically inquiring about is this: Assume that the bill which has already passed the House, and which we hope to take up and pass today or tomorrow, becomes a law. May the President, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Defense Council, as the case may be, go ahead and make contracts?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not unless the legislation should authorize it.

Mr. BARKLEY. There must be an actual appropriation, or the bill itself must authorize the contract?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 5, after the numerals "$6,400,000", it is proposed to strike out "Provided, That the contract or contracts for either or both of such projects may be entered into without advertising", and on page 16, line 17, after the numerals "$3,900,000", it is proposed to strike out "Provided, That the contract or contracts for such project may be entered into without advertising."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee desire to amend the committee amendment to the same effect?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; because I think the matter ought to go to conference. We do not want to strike it out in the committee amendment, because it is a Senate amendment, which will go to conference anyway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Labor Relations Board", on page 17, line 22, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$123,000"; in line 23, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$27,000"; and in line 24, after the word "Salaries", to strike out "and expenses", so as to read:

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for all printing and binding for the National Labor Relations Board in Washington and elsewhere, $123,000, and in addition thereto the sum of $27,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Salaries, National Labor Relations Board, 1941" and made available for printing and binding for the fiscal year 1941.

INFLUENCES TO BRING THE UNITED STATES INTO WAR

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I hesitate to speak at this time, but an appointment compels me to leave the Chamber. I have waited for some time in order not to interfere with the appropriation bill. I wish to make a few comments about another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for that purpose?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield. May I make a confidential inquiry as to how long the Senator expects to take?

Mr. HOLT. I do not think I shall consume very much time. I hope not, at any rate.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not mean to put any limitation on the Senator.

Mr. HOLT. I realize that. I dislike to interrupt the discussion of the appropriation bill, but I have waited for some time.

Mr. President, I was quite shocked to read in a magazine article by a commentator very friendly to the President, and who supports the President, that:

Both President and Mrs. Roosevelt are deeply interested in the general idea of some eventual alliance—

Speaking of England—and have had several private discussions with Clarence Streit, author of Union Now.

Note that the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have had several private discussions with Clarence Streit about an eventual alliance with Great Britain. In the same discussion it is said that nothing will be done before the election. That is not surprising. But I feel that the people of this country ought to know something about the background of Union Now.

It is one of the many groups and associations in this country based on the idea of involving the United States in the war. I say on the floor of the Senate that millions of dollars are being spent in this country, under various so-called patriotic titles, to involve the United States in the war. I wish briefly to discuss Union Now and its background, as well as the background of Clarence Streit, who has a very definite and well-known connection with Great Britain and the League of Nations. I shall not go into great detail and delay the Senate, but I wish to put in the RECORD a brief story of Mr. Clarence Streit's Union Now. We have seen advertisements in the newspapers about it. Who are some of the sponsors of Union Now?

One of them is John L. Balderston. John L. Balderston, as will be recalled, is the man who was recently discussed on the floor of the Senate as coming to the United States from Great Britain for the purpose of selling England's cause to the United States, because he is an American citizen. John L. Balderston is described in the English Who's Who. It speaks about his connections in Great Britain, and gives his address as 38 Trevor Square, SW. 7, London. Because I do not wish unduly to delay the Senate this afternoon, I refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 26, in which Mr. Balderston is discussed in more detail than I shall discuss him this afternoon.

Who else is a sponsor of Union Now? Stringfellow Barr. Who is Mr. Stringfellow Barr? He was one of the men who signed the manifesto asking for the United States of America to declare war. He is one of the sponsors of Union Now, the director of which, according to Mr. Lindley, has had several private discussions with the President of the United States and his wife. They are very favorable, or at least interested, in that movement.

Who else is interested in Union Now? I find the name of Mr. Robert McElroy. Who is Mr. Robert McElroy? Is he just an innocent United States citizen who is interested in Union Now? No. Mr. Robert McElroy was educational director of the National Security League, that infamous organization which helped to propagandize America in the last World War. (See exhibit B.) His record was investigated by the House of Representatives. As a result of Mr. McElroy's work preceding the World War, he was named as a professor at Oxford University. He was awarded an honorary degree of master of arts at Oxford in 1925. He was awarded an honorary degree of doctor of literature at Oxon in 1934. This is the man, an Oxford professor, who is coming back to the United States to tell us that we should have Union Now. In the English Who's Who, on page 2005, where Mr. Robert McElroy's name is shown, it will be found that he does not even claim a residence in the United States. Where does he claim residence? Let us look. His address is 78 Banbury Road, Oxford, not in the United States of America, but in England. His telephone number is 1328. He is coming over here now asking for Union Now.

Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the Senate. After the names of each of these individuals I shall place in the RECORD more information than I have time to give now.

(See exhibit A.)

Who else is a sponsor of Union Now? Lewis Mumford: He is another of the 30 signers who asked for a declaration of war. He was a journalist in England, editor of the Social Review in London in 1920. The English Who's Who, in its biography of Lewis Mumford, says this:

Disciple and colleague of late Prof. Sir Patrick Geddes.

It lists his recreations. His recreations are "rambling and swimming." Rambling and swimming are Mr. Mumford's recreations, as well as getting America involved in the war. That is very good—rambling around over the country and swimming through the maze of international complications. I want the Senate to know these individuals and their backgrounds, so that it may know the background of Union Now with respect to which the President and his wife have had several conferences.

Who is another sponsor of Union Now? Endicott Peabody. Who is Endicott Peabody? He recently retired as the head of Groton. He is the man who, the President of the United States said, had more influence over him than any other man he had dealt with in school or public life. Endicott Peabody was educated in England, imbued with the idea of English aristocracy. Groton is based on the English school methods.

Anybody who knows Groton is aware what it will do to a boy. The President went to Groton. We know the background of Mr. Endicott Peabody.

(Note exhibit A.)

Who else is in this Union Now movement, according to their own statement? Robert E. Sherwood, who, the President publicly proclaimed, was doing a great job for America. Do you know, Mr. President, in 1939, in the English Who's Who there is found on page 2898 a biography of Mr. Robert E. Sherwood, and he does not even give an American address? What does he give as his address—where he is today? No. He gives his address as Great Enton, Witley, Surrey, England. His record was discussed by me on the floor July 11.

I am referring now to men who are asking for Union Now under the guise of doing it to preserve the American way.

Who is another one of the sponsors? Betty Gram Swing, wife of Raymond Gram Swing. Many Members of the Senate may not realize it, but Raymond Gram Swing was an employee until he recently took this contract of the Canadian Broadcasting System and a regular commentator for the British Broadcasting Co. My purpose is to show the English connections of those in Union Now.

Whom else do we find? We find Juliet Rublee, the wife of George Rublee, who has been tied with British interests for years.

Whom else do we find in Union Now? We find Arthur U. Pope. Arthur U. Pope is given quite a long biography in the English Who's Who. What is his address? Is it in the United States of America? No. According to the English Who's Who on page 2563 it is, "Care Oxford University Press, Amen House, Warwick Square, E. C. 4, London, England."

One would think that these are innocent Americans, scholarly Americans, who are interested in helping America, but when we come to look into their history we find it goes right back to the English influence and its control.

Whom else do we find? We find the name of L. A. Post, who was a Rhodes scholar in 1916. We find Edwin P. Hubble, who was a Rhodes scholar in 1913, and in 1934 was given an honorary degree of doctor of science by Oxford University. He also is a fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society of England.

If there were but one or two individuals with English connections, it would not arouse much question, but when the sponsors are almost wholly composed of those who believe in internationalism and intervention, one does wonder.

This does not condemn all Rhodes scholars, but it shows that Cecil Rhodes knew that his plan would influence some to aid in the building of the English Empire and help in bringing the United States back under the English Crown.

Clarence Streit has been close to the League of Nations work. America has expressed itself on this before and would give the same answer again if it is submitted to them. They also do not desire the Rhodes idea of our country being a part of the English Empire.

Why do I mention these matters about Oxford and Rhodes scholarships? Because many of us realize that the wills of Cecil Rhodes—he wrote six of them—were specifically drafted to bring about unity between the United States and Great Britain and complete control of the world by Great Britain and the British influence. He made six wills, but what was in his first will? It set out a secret society to carry out a scheme. A system of emigration was to be perfected for colonizing all lands where the means of livelihood were attainable by ability and labor and enterprise.

The whole continent of Africa was to be settled by Britain, also the whole continent of South America, the Holy Land, the Valley of the Euphrates, the islands of Cyprus and Candia, the islands of the Pacific not heretofore possessed by Great Britain, the Malay archipelago, the seaboards of China and Japan, and finally the United States of America. That was set out in his first will. As I have said, he wrote five other wills. They were changed, but through the six wills written by Cecil Rhodes, empire builder of the British Empire, is the scheme that, sooner or later, the United States of America and Great Britain will once again be together. We see that movement starting here in America, and we see it developing through Rhodes scholars.

Who was the secretary of the Rhodes Trust? It was none other than Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador to the United States of America. What did the Round Table in London say about that in September when he was to be named Ambassador? May I quote it? It says:

> The designation of the Marquess of Lothian as new British Ambassador here evoked a warm response in many circles where Lord Lothian is well known.

This is from a London publication.

> Not for many years, it was universally commented, has there been the prospect of a British Ambassador here with such wide knowledge to the United States. Newspapermen, in particular, looked forward to the change because for some time past the British Embassy has maintained an aloofness which has discouraged contact, while Lord Lothian is already an old friend to many in the press corps here. On his many visits to Washington, Lord Lothian usually made it a point to visit Capitol Hill.

I will read that again.

> On his many visits to Washington, Lord Lothian usually made it a point to visit Capitol Hill, and he has plenty of friends in the Senate, among them many isolationists.
> To some perceptive observers, Lord Lothian's coming is particularly significant because he understands so well the viewpoint of all the member nations of the British commonwealth.
>
> His continuing interest in Americans and their ideas (wrote the New York Times) has been vouchsafed by his work as secretary of the Rhodes Trust, which administers the Rhodes scholarships, and as editor of the Round Table, a periodical which has had as one of its purposes the fostering of a clearer understanding and a closer harmony of interest among the English-speaking peoples. He will now have an opportunity to pursue this aim on a much grander scale—

How well they knew—

> at a time when there is no more important mission in the world than to place the relations of Great Britain and the United States on the basis of complete frankness and mutual confidence.

So commented the English-published Round Table about the coming of Lord Lothian, who has been secretary since 1925 of the Rhodes scholarships.

Who was one of his close friends? Dr. Frank Aydelotte, president of Swarthmore College, who is one of the leading lights of the William Allen White committee. He is the American representative of the Rhodes scholarships. Then note the other organizations such as the William Allen White committee, Bundles for Britain—but the trouble is they want to send bundles of American boys. Other organizations have been set up, many of them with administration backing and administration help. Then add the influence of the Rhodes scholars, as Cecil Rhodes knew the value of creating good will in America, and you will realize part of the English propaganda.

I do not want to delay the Senate; but I know that when we trace back many of these organizations that are for so-called patriotic purposes we find the forces of England. If they were German, if they were Italian, if they were Russian, they would be called subversive; but if they are English they can go to the White House and get a nice audience from the President.

When I say that I do not uphold German propaganda, I do not uphold Italian propaganda, I do not uphold Russian propaganda; but I say it is time in America that we in Congress investigate all types of propaganda, be it German, be it Italian, be it Russian, or be it English. Let the American people have the truth about these foreign interests that are trying to involve America.

Mr. President, what do you think would happen if such an organization as that I mentioned should be set up under German sponsorship in America? Immediately the interventionist press would come forward, immediately the Department of Justice would get ready, and then they would say, "Look at the terrible subversive group in America!"

When Englishmen, on the pay roll of English institutions and on the pay roll of English corporations, come over here and try to involve the United States in war to its final destruction, why is there not a word said about it? Other Senators know why and I know why. It is because there is pressure brought from the higher officials in this land not to allow an exposure of British propaganda in America.

When I say that I again wish to make it perfectly clear that I want a disclosure of all types of propaganda. Why should we sit in the dark and allow these men to come over here to propagandize us for war? Why should nothing be said about Sir George Paish, who, I understand, is still in this country? Why is there nothing said about Noel Coward, who works in and out of New York society and does a wonderful job in behalf of involvement of the United States in the quarrels of Great Britain? We have never heard anything from the Department of Justice about Mr. Noel Coward. We hear nothing about the English lecturers who are coming over here speaking to America in order to involve us in war. No; there has been no investigation of that. Why? Because the President of the United States will not allow an investigation.

Mr. Hoover himself, of the Department of Justice, was quoted as discussing propaganda with a newspaperman in an interview. He told about the German propaganda and the Italian propaganda and the Russian propaganda in America. The newspaperman said, "What about the British propaganda?" Mr. Hoover is supposed to have said, according to this report: "Yes; we know it exists, but what?"—in other words, that he could not expose it.

Is not that a sad commentary on America? Have we reached a point where we dare not expose propaganda which ultimately means the death of American boys? If we go to war, we shall go to war on the side of Great Britain. That is the way American boys will die. Do not fool yourselves! Soon after the election you will find the speed of the drift toward war greater than it is today, just as it was said by the commentators, speaking of Union Now, that President Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt were very much impressed with it, and had secret conferences with Clarence Streit, but they would not do anything about it before election.

That is a sad commentary on what is going on in America today. I know it is not popular to raise one's voice against those things, such as exposing British propaganda, which, if successful, will mean the destruction of America. I know that when I rise on the floor of the Senate and call a spade a spade, and tell the truth, I shall be labeled "pro-German" when I am really pro-American. When I say these things, it is not a question of how I stand on the war; I say them because I want my country to stay out of it. I am just as convinced as I ever could be in talking to you here this afternoon that if we continue on the path on which we are going, we shall be in the war before 12 months shall have elapsed, and perhaps much sooner.

Oh, it is said, "You have said that before," that these were steps to war; and so they were. Every step has been progressive down that path, pushed on by English finance and by so-called patriotic Americans.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In line with this propaganda, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, after the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia, a newspaper release issued by the Department of Justice, and an article by Boake Carter, dealing with the muckraking post-mortem character assassination which appeared after the death of my colleague, the late Senator Lundeen. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] at one time characterized it as the most amazing post-mortem character assassination that had come to his attention.

I happen to have a copy of the article printed in the Philadelphia Record. It is one of the most malicious, one of the most scandalous reflections on the character of a man who is dead that I have seen in my life. That article maligned the Senate of the United States; it maligned the character of my State; it maligned every Member of the Senate of the United States.

I ask that the statement and article to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD after the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to appear at the end of Mr. HOLT'S remarks.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I intend to discuss that subject later on the floor of the Senate. There is no more low, dirty, contemptible attack than that committed by the Washington Merry-Go-Round in attacking our colleague who is dead and who could not defend himself. I refer to the attack made on the late Senator Lundeen because he dared to raise his voice against involvement of America in war, questioning the patriotism of a man who offered his services to his country and served in the Spanish-American War, and calling him unpatriotic, as it did. He is smeared because he dared to tell the truth. But I do not care to comment more on that subject at this time. I intend to discuss it later on the floor of the Senate. Matters are reaching such a point in America that if anyone dares raise his voice against involvement in the present war he is to be smeared, he is to be destroyed by public opinion, with the cooperation of English control with the administration as it shows itself in publications.

These things may seem like idle thoughts to you; but time after time, as we watch, we can detect the sly, slick move toward involvement in war.

I was recently sent an article published in Home Movies for September, about the distribution of a film in the schools of the United States. It is entitled "Our Constitution," by H. G. Hilton, of the Oklahoma public-school system. After it describes the film that was to be shown, what does it say? Let me read it to you:

> The unfair attitude of the British Government in that time—
>
> Speaking about the American Revolution—
> The unfair attitude of the British Government in that time was played down, emphasis being placed on the fact that the trouble lay with the ruler, George III, rather than with the English people. This was important in the formation of correct attitude toward the British Empire today.

Get that! A man of the Oklahoma public-school system saying that "the unfair attitude of the British Government" during the Revolutionary period "was played down" in a film in our school system, "emphasis being placed on the fact that the trouble lay with the ruler, George III, rather than with the English people. This was important in the formation of correct attitude toward the British Empire today."

"Correct attitude toward the British Empire"—in other words, breaking down the idea that we had a revolution against England because it was desired to involve us as England's partner in this war. We see that thought being developed throughout the country. I am afraid, however, we are not seeing it soon enough. American boys will pay for our failure to investigate propaganda. We shall not die as the result of it. American boys will die as the penalty for our failure to expose these war propagandists.

I make the statement here that pressure has been put on the United States Senate from somewhere to prevent an investigation of propaganda by the United States Senate. Why has not the committee reported the resolution to investigate all propaganda on the part of all nations to involve us in war? Only $25,000 was asked to do it.

Why has the resolution stayed in the committee for 1 year and no report been made on it? Are they afraid to have an investigation? Why should not the American people know who is trying to involve us in war? Why should not the facts be known? Where did the pressure come from?

The American people have a right to know the facts. They have a right to know why a committee of the United States Senate has not been created to investigate propaganda such as that which I have discussed in Union Now; and I shall later discuss the William Allen White committee. I want the American people to have the facts; and the facts will prove that the administration has prohibited investigations and promoted the idea of involvement, because in so doing it has created a hysteria which has a political advantage.

In other words, the more we are involved, the more political value it has to scare people into line.

That is the dastardly part of this propaganda. If it were conscientious, I would have more respect for it; but when it is involved in politics it should be condemned by any man who has a clear thought in his mind. Let the American people have the facts, and they will see. America is in danger, not alone from the propaganda organizations of the totalitarian governments, but from British propaganda, which comes right into the official life of Washington and right into the financial control of the United States. When that is known, if it ever be known, I have no fear of our involvement in war.

JOHN BALDERSTON

Director of Information for Great Britain, United States Government Committee for Public Information, 1918–19; chairman, New Outlook, Ltd. (London publication) 1921–23; editor, The Outlook, 1920–24; chief correspondent for New York World in London 1923–31. Author of the successful plays, Berkeley Square (1926–27) and Farewell Performances (1936) in London. Addresses: 38 Trevor Square SW. 7. (Source of above information: English Who's Who.)

References to Mr. Balderston have been made in the informative article of Charles G. Ross on the William Allen White committee in the St. Louis Post Dispatch of September 22, 1940. Signer of June 9 manifesto asking for declaration of war against Germany; prepares White (William Allen White committee) letters for newspapers in the propaganda drive; advocates giving Great Britain our bomb sight, flying boats, flying fortresses, and all other material requested.

Mr. Ross states:

"That he (Balderston) is in touch with officials of the British Embassy is no secret and has no special significance."

ROBERT M'ELROY

Professor of American History at Oxford University since 1925; educated at Oxford; member of executive committee of National Military Training Camps Association (note the record of this association in debate on conscription in the Senate); educational director, National Security League, 1917 (note discussion of the National Security League in CONGRESSONAL RECORD, July 8, 1940). Sir George Watson lecturer, London, Cambridge, Manchester, Leeds, Edinburgh, and Bristol (all English), 1926; Fellow of Queens College, Oxford, 1926; member of governing board since 1927; lecturer at Rugby, Charterhouse, Winchester, Stowe, and other English public schools, 1926–30; address, 78 Banbury Road, Oxford; telephone, 1328. (Source of above information English Who's Who.)

It may also be noted that this is the same Professor McElroy, of whom the Daily Cardinal, of the University of Wisconsin, said: "We remember him (Dr. McElroy). We remember his pitiful attempt to make a loyalty speech on April 6 when 1,000 shivering, rain-soaked cadets were forced to listen for 2 hours to his endless dissertation on Nietzche's German theory of the superman. The clinic treated 300 cases of grippe contracted at that meeting, and two persons died of pneumonia." The Cardinal stated that the students got restless, and then Dr. McElroy said to them, "I think you are a bunch of damned traitors," and referred to the students as Prussians. It is shown that he has a much higher regard for the college students of Great Britain than he had of the students of Wisconsin.

LEWIS MUMFORD

Associate editor, Fortnightly Dial, 1919; acting editor, Sociological Review (London), 1920; lecturer in Geneva School of International Studies (check League of Nations background). (Source of information: English Who's Who.) Mr. Mumford also signed the manifesto of June 9 demanding an immediate declaration of war against Germany, and stated: "Therefore, all disposable air, naval, military, and material resources of the United States should be made available at once to help maintain our common front."

RAYMOND GRAM SWING

London correspondent, Philadelphia Public Ledger and New York Evening Post, 1924–34; New York correspondent, London News Chronicle, 1936–37; commentator on American affairs for British Broadcasting Corporation since 1935; commentator for Canadian Broadcasting Corporation since 1938. Foreign correspondent since 1920; correspondent, League of Nations since 1929; Rhodes scholar, Oxford University, 1920–21; home, 45 Bis Florissant, Geneva. (Source: Who's Who In America.)

STRINGFELLOW BARR

Rhodes scholar, Oxford University, 1919–21; received A. B., A. M., Oxford University. (Source: Who's Who In America.) Mr. Barr was also a signer of the June 9 manifesto asking for a declaration of war against Germany, referred to in reference to Lewis Mumford.

ENDICOTT PEABODY

Graduate Cheltenham College, England, 1876; LL. B., Trinity College (University of Cambridge), 1880; LL. M., Trinity College, 1884. The following discussion of Dr. Peabody's methods at Groton were written by a Groton scholar:

"For Groton puts its mark on its students more than St. Paul's, more than St. Mark's, more than Andover or The Hill. It is quite possibly the most snobbish educational institution this side of Winchester. The boys wear patent-leather pumps (kept in the basement 'boot room') and stiff collars to supper every evening. They bear names like Higginson, Whitney, Roosevelt, Havemeyer, Schermerhorn, Harriman, Morgan. They attend the most elegant of Episcopal services in the loveliest of school chapels. Yet life is far from luxurious at Groton, especially among the younger boys. These must live in cubicles—i. e., little curtained booths—must scamper down the hall on frosty mornings to wash in a tin basin filled from a tap, must live in mortal awe of all upper classmen. Hidden away, far from any sizable town, the school itself is not outstandingly elegant in architecture (except for the Gothic chapel). Up to a few years ago the boys were transported to and from the railway station in huge horse-drawn barges."

The snobbish Bostonian simplicity, like almost everything else at Groton, is a reflection of the personality of Dr. Endicott Peabody, the school's headmaster. He founded the school in 1884, and, thanks to an amazing vigor of character and physique, he has remained the dominant force at Groton ever since. Though the boys call him "Peebo" behind his back, the wildest of them is awed when he confronts the rector's majestic 6 feet 2, when he hears the rector deliver a dignified reproof, or when he listens to the rector preach in his powerful Boston-Cantabrigian voice. Born and bred in Boston, educated in England at Cambridge, where they still remember him as a great oarsman, Dr. Peabody spent a year or two in the untamed West before he founded Groton. When he founded Groton he made no bones about its being a school for young aristocrats. He himself was an aristocrat; he believed in the aristocratic virtues, and he was no more intimidated by popular ideas about "democracy" than he had been by the two-gun ideas of the western frontier.

There are many customs like "Google," for Groton in its short history has already acquired the quaint usages of the British schools after which it is more or less frankly patterned. Classes are called "forms"; boys enter as young as 12; chief school honor is to be chosen a prefect, with authority over the rest of the school; there is much playing of fives, a British form of handball. Until lately the rector himself used to play a good game, plunging about the court and bellowing until the whole campus resounded. On Hallowe'en there is much ingenious baffling of new boys, and on Memorial Day the whole school puts on white-duck trousers and canvas leggings to march through the town.

EXHIBIT B

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE

Report of the House of Representatives committee:

"The National Security League and like organizations in their political activities constitute a serious menace to representative government. Ordinarily their real purpose is concealed, and their appeal is made to the public on some principle in harmony with dominant sentiment. Usually, as in this instance, they have access to almost unlimited wealth and borrow respectability by the use, in honorary positions, of the names of men of national prominence. If their real purpose were apparent, the danger would be relieved.

"Men in public life are given by them to understand that they must be subservient to the demands of such institutions; and, upon their failure to do so, they will be held up to public scorn and humiliation by false accusations. Under such circumstances the best-intentioned candidate for office realizes that he has one of two alternatives—he must be either subservient to the demands of these camouflaged organizations or be put on the defensive by false charges. Such activities on the part of organizations similar to the National Security League have a tendency to compel obedience to the wishes of special interests rather than obedience to a real concern for the welfare of the people. This condition is not at all fanciful, since its baneful effects have been fully demonstrated by the activities of the National Security League.

"The fight made by the National Security League upon the loyalty of men of the highest patriotism was so glaringly unjust and so patently false that it failed of its purpose.

"But the failure was due to an error of judgment on the part of the league, and not because of the lack of vicious purpose.

"In times of war, organizations avowing patriotism, such as the National Security League did, will receive many adherents, and for that reason the league secured a membership of nearly 90,000 people throughout the United States. It was the duty of the league, therefore, to exercise the greatest care and caution in its publicity matter, where the good names of men were involved.

"Section I of the Federal act, generally known as the Corrupt Practices Act, approved June 25, 1910, is as follows:

" 'The term "political committee," under the provisions of the act, shall include national committees of all political parties, the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States, influence the result, or attempt to influence the result, of an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected.'

"Sections 5 and 6 of the act, as amended by an act approved August 19, 1911, require that such political committees as are defined in section 1 shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C. certain itemized statements which shall be verified by oath.

"In the judgment of your committee the National Security League has violated the provisions of that act, the penalty for which is a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment not longer than 1 year, or both."

At the request of Mr. SHIPSTEAD the following statement and article were ordered printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of Mr. HOLT's remarks:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson today issued the following statement concerning newspaper reports of an alleged investigation by the Department of Justice into the affairs of the late Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota:

"I wish to deny emphatically recently published press reports to the effect that the late Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, at the time of his death in an airplane accident on August 21, was under investigation by the Department of Justice. No inquiry into the affairs of Senator Lundeen has ever been instituted or contemplated, either by the Federal Bureau of Investigation or by any other agency of the Department of Justice, and any statement or report to the contrary is untrue."

BUT, SAYS BOAKE CARTER—CLEARING A NAME—UNJUSTIFIED ATTACK—MEN CAN STILL THINK

In the years that this column has been in existence its writer has abided by a general rule to refrain from bickering with fellow columnists.

But today this column departs from the general rule to defend the name of a dead man that has been foully smeared.

The late Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, who died in a commercial airline crash recently, declared to his friends shortly before his death that he wouldn't be surprised if, because of his grim adherence to his convictions, he wouldn't some time suffer the same fate that befell Huey Long.

But I'm quite sure that Senator Lundeen never expected to have his character assassinated after his death.

A few days ago a Washington-written column carried a statement to the effect that Lundeen was under investigation at the time of his death by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for alleged pro-Nazi activities. Said that column: "A G-man, a Department of Justice attorney, and an F. B. I. secretary were on the plane with him and all were killed."

The article then proceeded to assert that suspicion was directed to Lundeen after "many mysterious visits to his office" by George Sylvester Viereck, "famous German propagandist * * * and self-avowed friend of Adolf Hitler's Germany."

The article said that Viereck wrote Lundeen's speeches for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; that the visitor gave gifts of candy to the Lundeen stenogs. "Justice Department agents were attempting to find out the extent to which Berlin was definitely hooked up with members of this (isolationist) congressional bloc when Lundeen's plane crashed," the article continued.

Shocked to the core on reading the article, I set about checking immediately. Since Lundeen was my friend—I am proud to be able to say that—and since I knew his hatred of Hitlerism, but knew also of his determination to battle doggedly against those elements which desire to drive this country into a foreign war, it was impossible for me to believe the truth of what I read.

By the end of a day's telephoning, I gathered the facts. I set them down here. I hope they help to clear as fine and decent an American as ever sat in the United States Senate.

Attorney General Jackson denied categorically that the Department of Justice was investigating Lundeen.

From the office of J. Edgar Hoover, director of the F. B. I., I got the following: That the "G-man" on the plane was en route to his first assignment in the Chicago field office, after his initial training period of 7 weeks. He had sought permission to stop off at Pittsburgh to see his sick father before going on to Chicago. He had no more to do with Lundeen than did the cow that jumped over the moon.

The F. B. I. secretary was not a secretary, but a typist, setting out on her annual leave, bound for Cleveland, where she had planned to spend the week end with a girl friend.

The Department of Justice attorney was a lawyer from the tax division, without connection whatsoever with the F. B. I. and unknown to them as an identity until she died.

I was told I was the first newspaperman to check with the Bureau for confirmation or nonconfirmation of facts. I was further told that the director, the F. B. I. itself, and the Department of Justice hoped the foregoing facts in this column would be publicized widely to square Lundeen's name with the public, to square the F. B. I.

"Smears like this one on Lundeen," I was informed from Mr. Hoover's office, "are totally unfair to the F. B. I. We are not a Gestapo nor an Ogpu. We are not engaged in spying on Senators or Congressmen and we don't intend to. We are doing more right now, as a matter of fact, to prove the Americanism of many unjustly maligned people in these days of hysteria, than to prove their un-Americanism. Senator Lundeen was not under investigation, and it is a gross slander on him to say he was. The smear he received, putting us inferentially behind the eight ball, is typical of the type of Communist tactics we have had to contend with in our work."

A long-distance telephone call to New York, to find George Sylvester Viereck came next.

"Certainly," he said to me, "I have been in the Senator's office. And why not? We knew each other for 25 years. Yes; he called me occasionally for certification of something he was writing, just as he called his other friends, or the War Department, or the Navy Department, or anyone for information, viewpoints, or opinions.

"When in Washington, I dropped in to see him. His office force sometimes worked until early morning. Often I'd ask the girls to run through miles of corridors to the Library, or somewhere else, to get material. And to thank them, I once bought them a box of chocolates!

"If the fact that I knew the Kaiser once, wrote a book about him 25 years ago, disagreed with the interventionists, and gave a box of candy to the girls in the Senator's office for running errands for me, adds up to make both Lundeen and myself Nazis—then the art of character assassination is growing filthier than I imagined."

Finally, a call to Miss Cummings, Lundeen's secretary, now gathering the loose ends of the Senator's affairs in the National Capital.

"I only hope," said she, "that you will point out what a miserable and despicable lie it was—about a man who never hurt a soul in his life and loved this country as much as any man in America—and suffered for it, too!"

These, then, are the facts. They are not presented to bicker with other writers, but solely to clear the name of a fine Senator, now unable to defend himself. Also to dispel the unjust inference that the F. B. I. is just another Gestapo.

Many men may still hold an honest difference of opinion in America. It is not manly to blast a man's reputation when he's dead, or honest to smear him with whole untruths. But it is damnable to add to the public unrest muck that belongs, not on a news page, but more appropriately in the men's room.

Mr. KING. I came into the Chamber a few minutes ago during the address of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT]. I only heard the concluding part of his speech. It is not my purpose to reply to his address or to detain the Senate but for a few moments.

The American people do not desire war or that this Republic shall become a belligerent or take part in a conflict so tragic and so far reaching in its effects. However, an overwhelming majority of the American people are interested in the maintenance of democratic governments and look with profound concern upon military movements in various parts of the world aimed at the destruction of democratic governments. In my opinion the American people are opposed to the philosophy and the policies of totalitarian states; they see in them the aim and purpose to destroy democracy and to so regiment individuals as that they shall become part of a powerful, destructive, and oppressive machine. They see in the totalitarian states no moral or spiritual principles which are essential to the maintenance of democracy and the development of that high degree of individualism essential to a progressive civilization.

In my opinion the American people are willing to make many sacrifices to avoid war. They know what war means and are not oblivious to the tragedies which result from international conflicts. They do not forget the World War and the tragedies which it brought to the world. While they desire that this Republic shall escape the great conflagration now raging throughout the world, they are, as I have indicated, deeply concerned over the results of this conflict which embraces a large part of the world within its destructive operations.

But as I have indicated, they cannot close their eyes to this world conflict and to the forces which are operating therein and which may draw the United States within their orbit.

While our citizens desire that this Republic escape the tragedies which are being brought to many peoples throughout the world, they realize that there are some things dearer than life itself; these are liberty, justice, and preservation of those high moral and spiritual standards which constitute the foundations upon which rests an enduring civilization.

When the principles upon which this Government rests find expression in the lives and conduct of other peoples, the destruction of democracy, of liberal governments in any part of the world have repercussions in all parts of the world. When powerful nations devoted to tyranny and to the destruction of justice, liberty, individualism, and morality, and the spiritual things of life, achieve success in their work of devastation, and evince a purpose to bring all liberal and democratic nations within their power and within the orbit of their malign and evil purposes, then peoples who love liberty and the way of life which calls for peace, happiness, and justice, cannot be otherwise than deeply concerned.

It is natural, indeed proper, that in such a situation their sympathies and their prayers should go out in behalf of the downtrodden and the oppressed, of those whose temples of justice and liberty are being destroyed. Indeed, it is natural and conformable to the highest form of human conduct, to manifest that sympathy and concern in a material way, such as may arrest the devastating forces of war and oppression.

As I have indicated, the American people desire peace; they would be glad to aid in every proper way the extension of the principles of justice and the policies which make for peace and liberty for all peoples.

In my opinion they sympathize with the nations which have recently been the victims of ruthless aggression. They look with deep regret upon the destruction of Czechoslovakia and Holland and Belgium and France and Norway, as well as the savage assault upon Finland. When they learn of the tragedies and the sorrows which have come to the peoples of these countries, when they learn of the frightful effects of this modern war, of the destruction of cities, the bombing of towns and villages, the slaughter of helpless men, women, and children, of the attacks upon ships carrying helpless children to lands across the mighty deep, they would be less than human if they did not, deep down in their hearts, experience profound grief, and a rising spirit of indignation and anger.

Several years ago I paid visits to Europe and to the Orient and I thought that I perceived manifestations of a profound revolutionary movement which would shake the foundations of many governments. During the past few years there has been increasing evidence of a rise of totalitarian states, actuated by a purpose to change the forms of governments, and to establish oppressive and tyrannous systems for the control of the lives and conduct of individuals, groups, and peoples.

More than 2 years ago I stated that some democratic governments would be assailed and destroyed, and that an oppressive and barbarous dictatorship would be imposed upon many countries and upon millions of human beings. I stated that in my opinion an understanding had been reached between Hitler, Stalin, and Mussolini, under the terms of which democratic nations were to be overthrown and freedom and liberty denied to millions of people. I indicated that in my opinion there was an understanding that practically the entire world was to be divided among the three powers mentioned, with Japan as a silent partner participating in a world division. Intervening years have justified the views which I then entertained. Japan is now cooperating with Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini, and is manifesting a belligerent and warlike spirit which indicates her purpose to actively participate in the overthrow of democratic governments and in the division of this little globe of ours.

I admit that my sympathies are with Great Britain. The British people are fighting not only for the preservation of the British Empire but for the protection of democratic nations and the preservation of justice and liberty throughout the world. I have approved the policy of the present administration in dealing with international affairs. I approved of the statement of the President when he indicated that France had received a stab in the back from a friend. I approve of the efforts which President Roosevelt has made for world peace. I sincerely hope that the mad ambitions of Hitler and his associates will be frustrated and that the peoples of the world may be permitted to return to the paths of peace and freedom.

But we cannot be blind to the fact that if Great Britain shall be destroyed by the Nazi government and those collaborating with it, this Republic, and indeed the Western Hemisphere, will not be immune from attack. Indeed, there are evidences indicating that if Great Britain is brought under the iron heel of the Nazi government and its associates, this Republic will not escape the wrath of the victors.

Manifestly the American people are concerned in the attitude of the Nazi government and its associates. If this were not true, we would not be appropriating billions and indeed tens of billions of dollars for military preparations. Our Government is not arming against France or the victims of Nazi aggression. It is arming to protect itself from attacks of foes beyond the seas. Heretofore we have been content with a one-ocean navy. Now we feel compelled to build a two-ocean navy. Certainly there would be no justification for the enormous expenditures being made by our Government for military purposes, if it were not for the belief or the fear that the totalitarian powers may direct their engines of destruction against this Republic and the Western Hemisphere.

In my opinion Great Britain is, as I have stated, a rampart for the protection of democratic nations, and of liberty and justice in all parts of the world. And because of that belief my sympathies are with Great Britain, and my sincere desire is that she will survive the cruel and barbarous assaults now being dealt against her.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is an item in the bill, which was passed upon earlier in the day, concerning some necessary work by the Coast Guard. Admiral Waesche, at my request, has sent me a letter stating the views of the Coordinator of Shipbuilding, showing the vital necessity of this work.

I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks, and I hope that should the matter come up for discussion the conferees will refer to the letter, because it shows the vital necessity of the work provided for in the provision of the bill adopted by the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES COAST GUARD,
Washington, October 2, 1940.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In order to supplement and to confirm the testimony given during the hearings before the Senate Appropriations Committee on the Coast Guard item of $812,000 for the construction of two shipways at the Coast Guard Depot, Curtis Bay, South Baltimore, Md., contained in the First Supplemental Civil Functions Appropriation Act, 1941, I conferred this date with the Coordinator of Shipbuilding (Chairman of the Maritime Commission), with a view of obtaining his independent judgment as to the availability of shipways throughout the country at present and in the near future.

The Coordinator of Shipbuilding stated that during the next several years the facilities for building ships in this country would become more and more acute so that the Coast Guard undoubtedly would have more and more difficulty in getting its vessels built by commercial yards and that construction in navy yards is entirely out of the question. He also stated that, while there were a few shipways vacant now, contracts that will be let during the next 6 months to a year would unquestionably fill up these additional ways and that he felt it was a good business proposition at this time for the Federal Government to provide the two shipways at the Coast Guard Depot and that, unless these were furnished, the Coast Guard would, during the next several years, have great difficulty in getting its vessels built, and possibly would not be able to get any commercial firms to handle them.

I am forwarding this additional information relative to this particular item, which is included in the supplemental appropriations for the Coast Guard contained in the First Supplemental Civil Functions Appropriation Act, 1941, as it was not available at the time of the hearing on this Coast Guard item before the Senate Appropriations Committee on September 25, 1940.

Very truly yours,

R. R. WAESCHE,
Rear Admiral, United States Coast Guard, Commandant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The amendment was, under the heading "National Labor Relations Board", on page 17, line 22, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$123,000"; in line 23, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$27,000"; and in line 24, after the word "Salaries", to strike out "and Expenses", so as to read:

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for all printing and binding for the National Labor Relations Board in Washington and elsewhere, $123,000, and in addition thereto the sum of $27,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Salaries, National Labor Relations Board, 1941," and made available for printing and binding for the fiscal year 1941.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 4, after the word "Salaries", to strike out "and Expenses", and in line 9, after the word "Service", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That not to exceed $3,200 may be expended in performing those functions necessary to keep records and to make a report to Congress and to the President thereon as required by section 3 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act", so as to read:

After the date of the enactment of this act, none of the appropriation "Salaries, National Labor Relations Board, 1941", shall be obligated for carrying on any of the functions or duties assigned prior to June 29, 1940, to the Division of Economic Research or for carrying on any of the functions or duties assigned on or after such date to the Division of Technical Service: Provided, That not to exceed $3,200 may be expended in performing those functions necessary to keep records and to make a report to Congress and to the President thereon as required by section 3 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, in charge of the bill. The committee has amended the bill as it passed the House by the provision that not to exceed $3,200 may be expended in performing the functions necessary to keep records and to make a report to Congress and to the President with reference to the activities of the National Labor Relations Board.

I desire to ascertain from the Senator whether the purpose of the amendment is to limit all of the expenditures which may be made by the Board in the preparation of its report and the keeping of its records during the year.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the situation as it developed before the committee was that the House had been determined to eliminate the Division of Economic Research and the Division of Technical Service, and the House had inserted a very flat provision that none of the appropriations should be used for carrying on any of the functions assigned to those two divisions. The members of the Labor Relations Board said to us that among the functions which had been performed by these services were the keeping of certain case statistics and the making of annual reports, and that they feared that the language which the House had inserted would prevent the use of the funds which they had for doing those things. So the Senate committee, believing that it was conforming with the desires of the Labor Relations Board in that respect, added the $3,200 for that purpose.

In the testimony of Mrs. Stern, who I think is secretary of the Board, which appears at page 319 of the hearings, an estimate was submitted to us in these terms:

Professional personnel for the keeping of case statistics for the purposes of the annual report amounts to $3,200 on an annual basis.

It was in line with that suggestion that we did this. We were giving to the National Labor Relations Board a release from the binding effect of the House provision as they related the matter to us.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is what the committee intended, I have no objection to it, if it merely refers to the professional services to be rendered in connection with the keeping of the case statistics, namely, a qualified statistician for this particular job. That does not include ordinary stenographic assistance, for example.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator will see that originally it was stated in the paragraph that none of these appropriations shall be obligated for carrying on any of the functions of just these two divisions, the Division of Economic Research, and the Division of Technical Service. What we inserted was a provision that not to exceed this amount might be expended for the performance of those functions, that is, the functions which had been performed by these two particular divisions of the Labor Relations Board. That is what the committee meant to do.

Mr. WAGNER. Did the committee mean to limit the amount to be expended to $3,200 for all of the statistics which would have to be collected for preparing the reports and for the printing of the reports?

Mr. ADAMS. Of course not.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I wanted to make clear.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand, the complaint of the House was very positive and definite against the Division of Economic Research and the Division of Technical Service. We have no information as to why they took that position. We do know that the House was very much set against these two divisions of the Labor Relations Board.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that.

Mr. ADAMS. When they were taken out, the Labor Relations Board said, "If you take them out in this flat, arbitrary way, there are certain things which they have done for us which we will not be able to do." So we thought that for these things which these two divisions only had done, not the preparation of case records, of course, the $3,200, more than they otherwise would have, would be available.

Mr. WAGNER. A large part of the reports to Congress and to the President deals with discussion of cases which have been before the Board, and instead of giving the entire decision or record, a short synopsis is prepared which is part of the report. The attorneys in charge of these cases prepare the records for the report. These reports are of great importance to employers and employees in operating under the law. The committee did not intend by this amendment to provide that that type of service could not be rendered?

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; we were trying to broaden the limitation put on by the House, because, as the Senator knows, we have heretofore expanded the amount of money available for printing and binding, and for services in connection with briefs and records, as requested by the Labor Relations Board.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite satisfied with the explanation. I have another question I should like to pose, which relates to the intent of Congress. The House provision, which has not been changed by the committee except as just expressed by the Senator, is that no funds shall be obligated for carrying on any of the functions or duties assigned to the Division of Economic Research.

The particular research bureau in question is of great assistance to the Board in the preparation of its cases. For instance, when a complaint is filed with the Board, the question arises whether the particular industry is engaged in interstate commerce. If it be not engaged in interstate commerce, the Board has no jurisdiction over it at all. All that is a matter to be determined through a determination of the kind of manufacturing the particular factory is engaged in, where the product goes, whether it goes into interstate commerce or stays within the State. The Senator from Colorado is as familiar as I am with all those duties. Someone must perform those duties for the Board, otherwise it will not be in a position to determine whether it has jurisdiction or not. That function, in many difficult cases, has heretofore been vested in the Economic Research Division.

Let me refer to another matter. Take the Republic Steel case.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to say that if he has any idea that the language of the bill would prevent the carrying on of those functions by the National Labor Relations Board, I am very sure that any amendment which he would see fit to draft so as to carry those functions on, would be agreeable to the committee and, I think, to the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senate committee is in accord with what the Senator has in mind. We were only trying to avoid conflict with the House so far as we could, and at the same time we tried to help the Board in carrying out its functions. If the Senator has doubts about the matter, if he will get out his pencil and draw up an amendment, we shall be glad to have it.

Mr. WAGNER. How does the Senator himself feel about it? He has the advantage of being the chairman of the subcommittee which has had these matters in charge. I thought the language was much more restrictive than either the House or the Senate committee intended. I am sure the Senate committee did not intend to deprive the Board of the information that has heretofore been furnished it by this research bureau.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will draft a provision saying that "nothing herein contained shall prevent" just what he has on his mind, we shall not have any trouble about it.

Mr. WAGNER. That is very fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York want to amend the amendment, or does he wish to offer a separate amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. It has been suggested by the Senator in charge of the bill that, so far as he is concerned, he is willing to accept any amendment to carry out what I have just suggested, but I wish to have time to prepare it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed, then, with the committee amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Chair if we may return to that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture", on page 21, after line 18, to insert:

FOREST SERVICE

Reconstruction and repair of roads and other improvements, national forests in Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee: For reconstruction of roads, trails, bridges, and other improvements in the national forests in Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee damaged or destroyed by floods in August 1940, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator in charge of the bill that on page 22 there appears the item:

Washington National Airport: For the construction, with or without advertising, of five hangars—

And so forth. That brings up the same question as the one that was discussed awhile ago with reference to the provision on page 16 in the matter of other buildings. So the Chair, in his capacity of Senator, asks unanimous consent that the language be amended at this point by striking out the words "with or without advertising."

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Presiding Officer is in a position to do almost anything he pleases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair will not accept that statement.

Mr. ADAMS. I mean whether he is in the chair or on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, under the heading "Department of Commerce Administrator of Civil Aeronautics," on page 22, line 3, after the word "construction", the comma will be stricken, as well as "with or without advertising," so the paragraph will read:

Washington National Airport: For the construction of five hangars at the Washington National Airport, Arlington County, Va., including a roadway service underpass and other necessary appurtenances, $2,700,000—

And so forth. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading, "Department of Commerce, Administrator of Civil Aeronautics", on page 22, after line 17, to insert:

For all necessary expenses incident to the care, operation, maintenance, and protection of the Washington National Airport in accordance with the act of June 29, 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase, operation, and maintenance of one motor-propelled ambulance, one fire-and-crash truck, and one rescue-fire-and-crash motorboat; purchase (including exchange), operation, and maintenance of two passenger-carrying motor vehicles; purchase of equipment, materials, and supplies, including $700 for the purchase, cleaning, and repair of uniforms for the guards, $152,200, and, in addition, the sum of $103,450 is transferred to this appropriation from the appropriation "Maintenance and Operation of Air Navigation Facilities," contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941: Provided, That $15,000 of this appropriation shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia, employed in connection with the completion of the construction of said airport, without regard to the Civil Service Act and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 11, to strike out:

Development of landing areas: For the construction, improvement, and repair of airports and other landing areas in the United States and its Territories and possessions, determined by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to be necessary for national defense or for the training of airplane pilots, including areas essential for safe approaches and including the acquisition of land, $30,000,000 of which $3,000,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses, including the objects specified in section 204 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and including engineering services and supervision of construction and, in addition to such sum of $30,000,000, the Administrator, with the approval of such Secretary, is authorized to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, for the above purposes in the amount of $50,000,000: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in, or authorized to be obligated by, this paragraph shall be expended or obligated for the purchase of land or construction of buildings unless such purchase or construction is certified by the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy to be essential for military purposes: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be construed as precluding the use of other appropriations available for any of the purposes for which this appropriation is made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee to make a statement with respect to the elimination of the item for the development of landing areas. A reading of the item which is stricken out indicates that it provides for an appropriation of $30,000,000 for the acquisition of landing areas, and the acquisition of land, and the construction of approaches and the like. It authorizes contracts in the amount of $30,000,000, and an authorization of $50,000,000, or a total of $80,000,000 for the development of landing areas. Then I find this provision:

That none of the funds appropriated in, or authorized to be obligated by, this paragraph shall be expended or obligated for the purchase of land or construction of buildings unless such purchase or construction is certified by the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy to be essential for military purposes.

Mr. President, at the hearings of the Appropriations Committee, testimony was submitted, it appears, by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hinckley, indicating that this appropriation is sought because the Army and the Navy have agreed with the Civil Aeronautics Authority that there should be immediately a development of airports throughout the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming and to other Senators that by this provision not only the committee but every Senator has been put upon a very hot spot because of propaganda. The Assistant Secretary of Commerce came before the committee in support of this appropriation. The committee, without exception, so far as I know, concluded that it ought not to be included in the bill in this form at this time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am a member of the committee, but I was detained——

Mr. ADAMS. I am speaking of those who attended——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was detained from the meeting of the committee because of the fact that it was necessary for me to be on the floor in connection with the truth-in-fabric bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Had the Senator been there I assume he would have agreed with the other members of the committee, because he is always one of our agreeable and gracious members.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is very kind.

Mr. ADAMS. The practical situation was presented in this way: Airports, of course, are desirable. There is no Senator and no Representative who does not appreciate the desirability and the necessity of developing airfields and airports. The matter was presented in such a way, however, that the committee doubted the wisdom of putting the provision into the bill at this time for several reasons. In the first place, it involves a complete departure from the program for the establishment of airports which has been in effect up to this time.

Airports in this country have been largely municipal. There are some State airports. The work upon the airports to a very great extent has been conducted by the P. W. A. and more largely by W. P. A. One hundred and thirty million dollars has been spent from those two funds upon airports.

A large amount of W. P. A. labor has been available for the construction of airports. The major part of this provision and contract authorization of $50,000,000 will result in the elimination of W. P. A. labor. It means that W. P. A. labor which has been employed upon airports would have to be taken care of elsewhere. The local communities are now contributing approximately 25 percent of the cost of the airports, and the Government is contributing the remainder through W. P. A. or through P. W. A. The adoption of the provision in question means that the communities would no longer contribute to and perhaps no longer control their airports. Not one member of the Army or Navy appeared before the committee in support of the program in the bill, which involves $80,000,000, and which inaugurates a program admitted to cost $600,000,000, and which would probably cost more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me ask the Senator if the committee asked any member of the Army or Navy to appear.

Mr. ADAMS. Representatives of the Army and the Navy had repeatedly been before the committee. We asked those who proposed the appropriation to come in and justify it. They did not suggest bringing in representatives of the Army and Navy. We asked them to come in and explain why the appropriation should be in the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator imply a desire to have the Senate gain the impression that the Army and Navy are not in favor of the construction of landing fields, as provided by the proposed appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. The committee was not advised as to the attitude of the Army or the Navy on the project. This is a new departure in the construction and control of airports. They would be constructed and controlled by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The Army and Navy would not have any hand in their construction or control. As I say, the Senator and the Senate must not understand that the committee is in any way opposed to the construction of airports.

Let me go a step further. There was submitted to the committee a carefully prepared list—we will call it a program; some would call it propaganda, but I shall not—in behalf of this project. It was a volume showing that the Civil Aeronautics Authority proposed to construct 4,000 airports in the United States. A map was submitted to us, designed, of course, to stimulate Senators and Representatives to support the measure, because prospective airports were sprinkled over the map until they made the United States look as though it had the chicken-pox. [Laughter.] Four thousand airports in the United States were proposed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator does not imply that they are additional airports, does he?

Mr. ADAMS. Very largely. They are airports upon which moneys are proposed to be spent by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. That is perfectly proper. But what followed? In my State, in New York State, and in other States over the country lists of the airports to be constructed under the bill have appeared in the newspapers. The headlines in my State recited that 45 airports were to be constructed out of this appropriation. In the State of Wyoming, 50 airports are proposed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Wyoming is more strategically located than is Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. It is wonderfully located.

The proposed appropriation is $80,000,000. That would not construct 10 percent of the proposed airports, and yet the people of the country have been led to think that 4,000 airports would be constructed if the appropriation were made.

Let me tell Senators the other side of it. If the appropriation is not made, Senators will be told, "If you had voted for the appropriation we should have obtained our airports." If Senators vote for the appropriation, out of the 50 airports proposed for Wyoming probably 4 would be established. Then the people would want to know, "What did you do with the money for the other 46 airports?" In other words, those who prepared the program and permitted it to become public put Senators on the spot, whether they vote for it or against it. The result has been most unfair to the Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have tried to find out how this information came to be spread throughout the country by Associated Press dispatches, so that newspapers in every State have carried bold headlines about the number of airports to be constructed in the several States, specifically naming the airports and the amounts of money. These are the facts, as best I can determine them:

The report which the Senator has before him, and the map, were prepared for the use of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. The report was not released to the press. When the hearings were held before the House Committee on Appropriations, reference was made to the report; and when the hearings were printed, representatives of the press in the House saw a reference to a report, and wanted to see the report. Not having been made public by the Authority, it was actually obtained from the House Committee on Appropriations, and very properly so, because if the House Committee on Appropriations had attempted to suppress it, it would have been the subject of even greater comment.

What the Civil Aeronautics Authority was seeking to do was to point out to the Congress a broad program which might take 5, 6, or 10 years to carry out. The money proposed to be appropriated in this bill would be a start. It would fit into a broad general program.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is quite correct about the report which was submitted to the committee. I was present when the report on the civil-aeronautics program was brought to the Appropriations Committee. This document showed a prospective program to cost something like $526,000,000, if I correctly remember. Mr. Hinckley, who testified with respect to it, explicitly stated that the intention with respect to this appropriation was to expend the money only on airports which would be given priority by a special board to be set up, consisting of representatives of the Army, the Navy, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me resume the floor, if I may. I do not want to get into the middle of a controversy between the two distinguished Senators.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no controversy.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to say two things.

It does not make any difference, in its effect upon Members of Congress, how the report got out. Every Member of Congress is seriously embarrassed over the fact that it got out. We are to have a priority board. Who is to appoint the priority board? Is Congress to have anything to say about it? No. Is the President to have anything to say about it? No. Mr. Hinckley is to appoint the priority board.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield in a moment.

Fifty airports are proposed for the State of Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming has not a particle of assurance that a single one of those airports would be constructed under this appropriation; but the people of Wyoming would hold the Senator responsible for obtaining 50 airports. Four thousand airports are to be scattered throughout the land. There is an average of probably 10 in every congressional district. Accidentally, the airports cover the congressional districts very widely.

The report may have leaked out, as has been stated, but the headlines say, "Forty Colorado airports slated to get United States funds." This country is made up of people who read headlines. The people in my State feel that they are to get 40 airports. If the appropriation should be made, they would get about 4. The smaller communities, which think they are to get airports, and think we are appropriating the money, will be disappointed. They will be outraged at the Government and at the Congress. We are absolutely taking out of the control of Congress the entire airport development of the country and putting it into the hands of an appointive board in Washington.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Obviously, it would have been a perfectly simple matter for the Senate Committee on Appropriations to have brought in an amendment to the language which is proposed to be stricken out, by which it should be provided that the airports should be selected by a board to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. if necessary.

There is no need for us to surrender control of the selection. If the Senator will recall, when Mr. Hinckley was before the Appropriations Committee the Senator from Wyoming raised that very question.

I am not here to legislate on the basis of the embarrassment which I may or may not suffer because the Associated Press may have secured from the House Committee and distributed to the country, without the authority of the Civil Aeronautics Authority or without the authority of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, a report on a program which was confidentially laid before the committee. As I see it, the point is whether or not the Congress of the United States will make available the sum of $80,000,000 for the construction and improvement of landing fields, and whether or not such a program is necessary in the national defense. My own belief is that it is necessary in the national defense. If the conditions which exist in Europe demonstrate a single thing, it is that modern warfare is fought in the air, and that an essential step in defending our institutions is to provide all the necessary facilities for air defense.

Mr. ADAMS. But there is not a word in the testimony to show the necessity for national-defense purposes of 50 airports in the State of Wyoming. I am desperately interested in Wyoming, but to say. that 50 airports in the State of Wyoming are necessary for national defense is going rather far.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, there is nothing in the testimony to indicate that——

Mr. ADAMS. That is what I said.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And there is nothing in the provision which came over from the House to indicate that the appropriation of $80,000,000 was for the construction of all the airports included in this program but for the construction of those which a board selected by the Army and Navy and the Civil Aeronautics Authority might determine upon.

Mr. ADAMS. No; they are not to be selected in that way; they are to be selected by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. We can change that in 10 minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. We are talking about the bill as it is before the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the only information I have is a press release, which states:

> Airport locations probably will be decided by some sort of a joint board to be set up by the President, representing the War, Navy, and Commerce Departments.

That statement indicates just what kind of a board will be set up. When it is to be set up has not been determined upon, but the general idea is that it will be a board appointed by the President.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not seem to be able to make clear to at least one of the Senators that what we were concerned with was the establishment of a sound policy for the construction and location of airports and that we were not willing that one agency of the Government should on its own account proceed to take over the whole thing—military, naval, and commercial—and put out the W. P. A. help and put out the P. W. A. help.

That is not all. One might think from some of the things that have been said that no money had been appropriated by Congress for airports. Congress has appropriated many million dollars for airports. For Texas, I think, we appropriated some twenty-odd-million dollars very recently. There is an airport in New York that cost $45,000,000. There was one dedicated the other day nearby that cost thirteen and a half million dollars. How many airports will $80,000,000 construct?

Mr. HILL and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Please let me finish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not decline, but I am yielding a little time to myself.

What I am trying to point out is that under this program it is suggested to the country that it will provide 4,000 airports so that every town of 2,000 people and many of less than that will be given by the Government an airport and the Government will assume the whole cost. I wonder whether or not the Federal Government should stand all the cost of the establishment of every airport in the United States, most of them to be only used for commercial purposes?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield in a moment or two.

The appropriation is $80,000,000. We are now talking about four classes of airfields. The first-class airports are merely of dirt or sod. The second class are to cost something over $100,000. In the third class the cost will run from $200,000 to $500,000. Then there is the fourth class, the cost running over a million dollars. There are 4 or 5 fourth-class airports in the country; one at New York, one at Cleveland, one at Chicago, one at Salt Lake, and one other. The one in New York cost $45,000,000; the one in Washington, which has not reached the status of fourth class, cost thirteen and a half million dollars. How far will this sum of money go? The effort is being made to persuade the people of the United States that they will get 4,000 airports out of a fund that will give them but a few hundred.

When an agency of the Government puts out a program of this kind, inevitably it is given publicity in the press. Take a New York newspaper with the heading "One hundred and sixteen airfields listed in State defense plan." It will be found that all the other States have, in some mysterious way, obtained a list of the airfields they would get out of this appropriation; and most of the Senators have had telegrams and letters requesting them to make sure that the money is obtained.

Nobody is opposed to airports; nobody is opposed to reasonable appropriations of Federal money for airports, but the committee felt in the case of this supplemental deficiency bill, on the eve of the recess of Congress, we ought to take the time to sit down and study it, call in the Army, call in the Navy, call in the Civil Aeronautics Authority and call in others interested in aviation, and lay down a program which is sound and which will carry the thing through. As the matter was presented to the committee they were not opposed but felt it ought to be postponed.

Mind you, Mr. President, there is nothing in this bill that prevents this money being spent on private airports, it is not limited merely to military and naval airports, but may be expended at any place where pilots can be trained, for that is the definition in the bill. Of course, it is easy to answer that by saying it can be changed by amendment. Of course, it can; but we thought that the simple method was to take it out for further consideration by the Congress.

We are not dealing with a trifling matter; we are dealing with a program the cost of which will run not only into the hundreds of millions of dollars but into the billions of dollars, and we did not feel, merely upon the report of one subordinate in one department, that Congress should change the whole policy as to the establishment of airports in the United States.

Mr. HILL and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama; then I will yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator says, no plan has been worked out. Mr. Hinckley, in his press release of September 30, referred to his proposal as a Nation-wide survey. That means he has not even obtained the basic facts. Yet there are some cities in the United States that have gone to great sacrifice to provide their own airports. Many of them have bonded themselves, have piled up indebtedness on their citizens, and mortgaged the property of their citizens to build airports. Now, without any consideration for those cities, are we going to tax them to build airports for other cities that have made no effort whatever to build their own airports? All that is involved in this question and ought to be carefully thought out before any action is taken. Some of the cities, as I have said, have made sacrifices in order to build airports, while others, perhaps, have done nothing whatever or certainly they have made no sacrifices looking to the building of airports. All those questions ought to be gone into and carefully weighed before we launch on a great program for airports.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I may add to what the Senator from Alabama has said, that under the wording of this provision not only could moneys be spent for the improvement of airports but they could be spent for the acquisition of land. The entire sum could, in the discretion of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, be expended for the acquisition of lands for airports that are not strictly for military purposes. Certainly before we launch on a program that will run into the billions of dollars, including the acquisition of land, some fair formula should be evolved and enacted into law by the Congress to insure that those cities and communities that have heretofore spent local funds for the acquisition of land for the building of airports should not be discriminated against in such a comprehensive and expensive program.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I promised to yield to the Senator from Vermont, who has been very tolerant with me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to relieve the Senator from Colorado by referring to a particular airport, namely, the Washington National Airport, to which he alluded a moment ago. The Senator said that it had cost already, although it has not been completed, $13,500,000, and I notice that there is an additional appropriation in this bill of $2,700,000 in some other item, which would make a total of $16,200,000. I wonder if the testimony before the committee revealed from what source the $16,500,000 expended on the Washington National Airport came?

Mr. ADAMS. A very considerable amount came from the W. P. A., and some came from appropriations.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not ask for the information in detail.

Mr. ADAMS. I have it available, but I will say that some of the money has not yet been actually expended, but contracts have been let for the work. So some of the thirteen and a half million dollars is on hand, but is obligated to be expended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am willing to have the figures placed in the RECORD, to save the Senator some time in looking them up.

Mr. ADAMS. They are in either the House hearings or the Senate hearings, for I have seen them within 2 days.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I have unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD, and, together with those figures, the estimate which was furnished to the Senate by the report of the commission to locate a national airport for the District of Columbia—a commission consisting of three Senators, three Representatives, and three members appointed by the President of the United States? I should like to have the RECORD show the difference between the estimate and the cost, up to date, of this airport.

I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as to the figures, they appear at page 101 of the House hearings on the pending bill. I can submit them so that they will go into the RECORD. They show a number of items, and show the grand total to be $13,663,089. That is the grand total that they give. Then they give the summary of expenses. The Work Projects Administration put in $3,586,561. The Public Works Administration put in $8,747,500. The Civil Aeronautics Authority put in $175,000; and there were some others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has asked to have inserted in the RECORD certain figures. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will provide later the estimate by the commission appointed to select a site.

The matter referred to by Mr. ADAMS is as follows:

[From p. 101 of House committee hearings]

Washington National Airport—Summary—Estimates of cost, costs incurred, and funds required as of July 31, 1940

EXHIBIT A—ESTIMATE OF COSTS

I. Initial development:
Land	$252,000
Hydraulic fill	3,177,229
Dry excavation and backfill	950,433
Landscaping and fine grading	429,500
Drainage	641,000
Sewers, services, and utilities	318,000
Relocation of Mount Vernon Memorial Highway	593,720
Paving (runways, taxiways, aprons, and roads)	1,000,000
Field lighting	220,000
Buildings and structures: Terminal building, heating plant, hangar (1), fire-pump station, miscellaneous structures	2,440,000
Seaplane base (temporary facilities for light planes only)	15,000
Contingencies	213,851
Engineering, supervision, and overhead	662,356
Total	10,913,089
II. Supplemental development:
Additional hangars (5)	2,500,000
Service roadway underpass	50,000
Plans, specifications, engineering, supervision, and contingencies	200,000
Total	2,750,000
Grand total [1]	13,663,089

EXHIBIT B.—SUMMARY OF COSTS INCURRED AS OF JULY 31, 1940

Agency	Funds
	Public Works Administration	Civil Aeronautics Authority	Work Projects Administration	Total
Civil Aeronautics	$324,260	$4,039		$328,299
Corps of Engineers	4,900,000		$1,226,291	6,126,291
Public Buildings Administration	495,000			495,000
Public Roads Administration	38,720			38,720
U. S. Quartermaster Corps	15,068			15,068
Total	5,773,048	4,039	1,226,291	7,003,378

EXHIBIT C.—SUMMARY OF FUNDS AVAILABLE AND REQUESTED

	Funds available				Funds requested	Total funds required
	Public Works Administration	Civil Aeronautics Authority	Work Projects Administration	Total
I. Initial development	$8,747,500	$175,000	$3,586,561	$12,509,061
Less estimated balance of Work Projects Administration funds to remain unexpended			1,595,972	1,595,972
Net amount available for construction	8,747,500	175,000	1,990,589	10,913,089		$10,913,08
II. Supplemental funds requested (H. Doc. 872)					$2,750,000	2,750,000
Total estimated funds required	8,747,500	175,000	1,990,589	10,913,089	2,750,000	[1]13,663,908

[1] For landing area, terminal building, heating plant, and 6 hangars.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me say, before I conclude, that the commission did not recommend the Gravelly Point location which is being developed, but recommended another location. I have always been curious to know by what authority the construction was done at Gravelly Point, and by what authority this $13,000,000 is now being expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate pardon the Chair for a moment? The Chair hopes the Senator from Vermont will have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of his statement, the fact that the chairman of that commission was General Westover, the greatest flyer in the Army or in our Government, and whose untimely death we so much deplore.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I am now ready to supplement my request made during the colloquy with the Senator from Colorado. I want the RECORD to show that the members of the District Airport Commission were the following: Senators King, Copeland, and Austin; Representatives Norton (Mrs.), Nichols, and W. Sterling Cole; Frederic A. Delano, chairman of National Capital Park and Planning Commission; Col. Dan I. Sultan, District Engineer Commissioner; Brig. Gen. Oscar Westover, Chief of the Army Air Corps.

Senator KING, chairman, and Representative NICHOLS, secretary.

The comparative estimated costs of site for a Washington airport includes Gravelly Point. I point out that the estimate for 266 acres of development was $2,300,000, and the estimate for total development of 566 acres was $5,000,000. The estimates were made as to Gravelly Point and the Washington-Hoover site by the United States Engineer's office and published in hearings before the subcommittee on Parks and Highways of the Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate, Seventy-second Congress, second session, on Senate bill 5635 and Senate bill 5401, to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, January 16 and 17, 1933.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in conjunction with this estimate two reports, one by the subcommittee of the commission dated December 7, 1936, recommending the site at Camp Springs, in Maryland, and the other the report of the Joint Commission on Airports, Congress of the United States. I should like to have the whole of both reports appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparative estimated costs of sites for a Washington airport

NOTE.—Estimates on Marlboro Road, Suitland, Camp Springs, Hybla Valley, Fort Hunt, Silver Hill, and Forrestville sites were prepared by office of the Quartermaster General and office of the Chief of the Air Corps.

Estimates on Gravelly Point and Washington-Hoover sites were prepared by U. S. Engineer office, and published in Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Parks and Highways of the Committee on the District of Columbia, U. S. Senate, 72d Cong., 2d sess, on S. 5365 and S. 5401, bills to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, Jan. 16, 17, 1933.

DECEMBER 7, 1936.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
Chairman of the District of Columbia Airport Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The subcommittee of the District of Columbia Airport Commission submits the following report on a location suitable for the national capital airport, the manner in which the investigation was conducted, and the recommendations resulting therefrom.

Primarily the problem was one of aviation operating technique, with a background of engineering development. The United States Army Air Corps was therefore charged with the initial investigation. That agency set up three essential requirements which were interlocking and based upon present equipment and contemplated development. These were:

1. A relatively flat area sufficiently large to accommodate present-day transport airplanes with ample safety.

2. Available adjacent areas to permit expansion of runways as engineering development makes possible the larger ships which are now being projected.

3. The safety of operation under all meterological conditions. This last is unquestionably the most important, since it involves both the previous requirements and also scheduled aircraft operation.

Past hearings on the national capital airport and available meteorological data were studied; conferences were arranged with the office of the district engineer and with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which made available the investigation that body had conducted some years ago of 48 sites in the vicinity of Washington. The views then of all persons and agencies interested in this project, and the contributing factors involved, were given full consideration. A photographic mosaic map covering an area of 36 miles in diameter was constructed, photographs of all of the sites were prepared, together with special photographs, as required for a complete study.

As a result of this preliminary study, all but 8 of the 48 sites previously considered by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission were rejected as being undesirable for one or more reasons. One previously unconsidered site was included, thus making a total of 9 sites that warranted further study.

These sites were then carefully studied, both from the ground and from the air, and results were incorporated in the airdrome evaluation chart attached as enclosure 1, which indicated that only seven sites could logically be considered if the requirements were rigidly adhered to. However, since the two low-rated sites had been the subject of much discussion in the past it was decided to retain them in the approved group for further study.

The Quartermaster General was then requested to prepare estimates for developing the following sites based on runway lay-outs prepared by the Air Corps:

Suitland, Md., No. 8.
Oakland, Md., No. 9.
Forestville, Md., No. 10.
Silver Hill, Md., No. 11.
Camp Springs, Md., No. 12.
Hybla Valley, Va., No. 21.
Fort Hunt, Va., No. 49.

NOTE.—Site numbers refer to the original National Capital Park and Planning Commission study.

These estimates were based on the cost for similar developments, evaluating the land at a relatively high cost per acre. The cost of the land was based on offers of real estate which had been received by the subcommittee during the course of its investigation. The above-mentioned estimates were then combined (enclosure 2) with those for Gravelly Point and Washington-Hoover, which had been previously submitted in hearings by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the National Airport Corporation, owners of Washington-Hoover Airport.

At the conclusion of this further study, the following seven sites remained as worthy of consideration:

Suitland, Md., No. 8.
Oakland, Md., No. 9.
Forestville, Md., No. 10.
Silver Hill, Md., No. 11.
Camp Springs, Md., No. 12.
Hybla Valley, Va., No. 21.
Fort Hunt, Va., No. 49.

Of these, Fort Hunt, on the west side of the Potomac, and Camp Springs, in Maryland on the east side of the Potomac, offered the greatest advantages from the standpoint of development and expansion.

The Fort Hunt site, however, lies so close to the river that, while no accurate information is available, it is reasonable to expect that it will be subject to river fog. The land is held at such a high figure that this may preclude further consideration of this site.

The Camp Springs site is unquestionably the most desirable. Its initial area is sufficient; it has possibilities of almost unlimited expansion, drainage will be no problem, and it will require less grading than any of the other areas. It is the most sparsely settled of all the sites investigated, and thus its adoption will effect the minimum discomfort to established residents; it will not require the rerouting of existing roads. It will provide more work for a larger number of relief workers in clearing the site, and the cost of the land will indubitably be less than elsewhere.

The subcommittee, therefore, strongly recommends that the airport for the National Capital be located at Camp Springs, Md.

Should the commission as a whole agree with this recommendation, or elect to choose any of the other six suggested sites, it is urgently recommended that all discussion and any selection be kept secret for the following reasons:

As stated before, the subcommittee received a number of offers of parcels of real estate during the course of its study. In almost every instance it was felt that the price per acre was exorbitant, and that this price was exorbitant because the owner or his agent felt that he or they had a piece of property which was desirable for airport usage, and on this basis were in a position to dictate terms. If options can be secured prior to the disclosure of the Commission's recommendations, it is believed that the desirable land can be secured in competition and at a lower figure.

The subcommittee is continuing its investigations insofar as they involve expected financial returns from a first-class airport, and when sufficient data is assembled upon which the Commission may make a reasonable deduction as to the amount of return that the National Capital Airport may be expected to produce, this study will be forwarded for consideration.

Yours very truly,

O. WESTOVER,
Major General, Air Corps, Chairman, Subcommittee of the District of Columbia Airport Commission.

AIRPORTS, NATIONAL CAPITAL

The Joint Commission on Airports, created under authority of Public Resolution 106, Seventieth Congress, approved March 4, 1929, presents the following report:

Organizing at once upon the approval of the resolution, the Commission immediately began its study of the problem in hand with the view of formulating recommendations to Congress for providing the National Capital and the District of Columbia with suitable airport facilities. The Commission unanimously took the position that these facilities should be not only sufficient for present and anticipated needs so as to serve Washington's maximum aviation requirements, but should also ultimately be of an extent and completeness to reflect a creditable leadership on the part of the Capital in the development of this science. The Commission readily recognized the prospective strategic importance of Washington as a focal point for far-flung air lines, and the Board was keenly alive to the fact that as prompt action as possible on its part was essential in view of the phenomenally rapid growth of aviation and the desirability of putting the Nation's Capital on the airways map with the least possible delay by the establishment of an adequate commercial airport.

In its quest for expert opinion and advice bearing on its problem the Commission not only consulted with officials of various governmental departments concerned, including the government of the District of Columbia, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, but proceeded in April 1929 to conduct a series of public hearings which brought together a notable coterie of foremost airport engineers and aeronautical experts, and noted Government and air-mail flyers. Their testimony was embodied in a volume of nearly 200 pages constituting a valuable compendium of information on the subject of municipal airports.

Among the outstanding features of this evidence, stressed by substantially all of the experts, and emphasized particularly by Colonel Lindbergh, was the fundamental principle that the relative success of an airport is dependent to a large extent upon its proximity to and accessibility from the center of the municipality which it serves. "One of the most important things in relation to the modern airport," said Colonel Lindbergh, "is its distance from the city. If it requires an hour or an hour and a half or more to go from the airport to Washington, and vice versa, that takes away to a large extent any advantage from flying from a city such as New York or Philadelphia to the Capital, inasmuch as the time required to go to and from the airport adds so much to the flying time that there is very little advantage over rail travel. * * * I think distance from the city would be of primary importance."

The joint commission early found itself confronted with no inconsiderable undertaking in making a survey of suggested sites for an airport in the vicinity of the Capital. These sites numbered more than a score, many of them presenting advantages of one kind or another, but comparatively few of them obviously suited to the needs of the Capital, as measured by the various factors entering into the equation. These included distance from the civic and business center of the city, accessibility by highways and means of overland transportation, contour of ground, drainage, atmospheric conditions, prevailing wind directions, cost of land, and probable expense of grading and development, etc. The commission addressed itself to this task earnestly and painstakingly with technical and engineering assistance, and studied the problem from all angles.

Out of the mass of information assembled from the statements of leading aviators and engineers and the studies conducted by the commission there emerged the conviction on the part of that body that the Capital City's airport needs embraced a comprehensive plan that would provide, in the final picture, a close-in landing field and port, as a loading and unloading terminal, and one or more auxiliary and larger ports somewhat further removed, where facilities for maintenance, services, overhauling, and storage could be had. With these requirements in mind, the range of possibilities was considerably narrowed.

Salient advantages for the speedy development of a municipal airport seemed to rest in property situated immediately to the southward of the Highway Bridge, on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, embracing two flying fields known as Washington Airport and Hoover Field. These are virtually adjoining tracts, being separated only by Military Road, a highway leading from the bridge terminus to Arlington and Alexandria. Adjacent to Hoover Field on the west is the Agricultural Department experimental farm, a considerable portion of whose land is reasonably level, while to the northward of the property bearing the President's name lies Columbia Island in the Potomac separated from the mainland by a narrow and shallow strip of water.

The acquirement of the two privately owned properties, when thrown together and augmented by a portion of the farm lands and a part of the island, both Government-owned, it was found by the Commission would provide a tract of some 280 acres. Furthermore, it was learned that both the flying fields in question could be purchased from their owners on what appeared to be reasonable terms. It was recognized by the Commission that these tracts were already operated as flying fields and that, therefore, their further and unified development as a municipal airport would be a relatively simple undertaking compared with the task of putting virgin lands to such uses. As an additional feature the fact that these fields are within 15 minutes of the business and hotel center of Washington carried a further and potent argument in their behalf.

In the process of developing these properties, it would be necessary to reroute a portion of Military Highway, so that there would be no dividing line between the fields, a change that would add very materially to the acreage of the tract. A comparatively small amount of filling would be required also between Columbia Island and the mainland.

These improvements made and the entire area thrown into one tract, airplane runway facilities half a mile in length in the direction of the stronger winds, and four-fifths of a mile in the direction of the lighter winds could readily be provided.

During all of its deliberations, the joint commission has not been unmindful of the airport possibilities latent in that tract bordering on the Potomac known as Gravelly Point, located about one-half mile below Highway Bridge on the Virginia side. In the consideration of this possible site, however, the Commission was forced to take into account the evidence given by Army engineers to the effect that if Gravelly Point were developed only through the normal rate of filling with material dredged from the river channel it would take 40 years to provide land for an airport that might be available to the next generation.

Testimony from engineering experts showed that if the Gravelly Point tract were already filled today, it would require at least 5 years before the fill would settle sufficiently to warrant the construction of concrete runways, or warrant a proper development of grass. Nevertheless, the Commission believes that Gravelly Point possesses highly encouraging possibilities for the future in the Capital airport problem, and its gradual development is favored, to the end that the future growth of commercial air transportation at the National Capital may be amply provided for.

In considering any property bordering on the Potomac River for airport purposes, the factor of atmospheric and weather conditions, particularly fog, although not a controlling element, must be reckoned with and duly weighed. It is believed that in view of the occasional, though relatively infrequent occurrence of fog in sufficient volume to render hazardous the use of the suggested tract for airport purposes, additional property situated at a materially higher altitude and some distance from tidewater, although as convenient as possible to the center of the city, should be acquired and developed as an auxiliary airport.

In view of the foregoing observations, and having given careful consideration to all of the manifold elements entering into the problem of providing timely and adequate airport facilities for the Nation's Capital, the Joint Commission recommends the following steps to that end, namely:

1. Passage by Congress of legislation similar to the Cramton bill (H. R. 26, 71st Cong.) providing for a loan by the United States Government to the District of Columbia for airport-development purposes of $2,500,000, without interest, to extend over a period of 10 years, and to be paid back by the District of Columbia in 10 annual installments of $250,000 each.

2. The acquisition, under the most advantageous terms obtainable, by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, for immediate development, of the properties situated at or near the southern terminus of the Highway Bridge known as Washington Airport and Hoover Field, as best suited to the immediate airport needs of the Capital.

3. The passage of legislation providing for a change in the location and routing of that part of the highway known as Military Road, lying between Washington Airport and Hoover Field, so as to afford uninterrupted continuity of these lands for airport use.

4. The passage of legislation permitting the government of the District of Columbia to use such portion of the so-called Agricultural experimental farm lands lying east of the railroad tracks and adjacent to Hoover Field as may be required for municipal-airport purposes.

5. That the full control and management of the airport proposed to be thus established be vested in the government of the District of Columbia.

6. The gradual development of the tract known as Gravelly Point.

7. The acquirement by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission of a site situated on high land, as near as possible to the center of the city, for development as an auxiliary airport to be available for use whenever weather and atmospheric conditions render inadvisable the operation of aircraft at the main municipal airport.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will yield to me, I wish to say that the wording of the provision in the House bill is:

> For the construction, improvement, and repair of airports and other landing areas in the United States and its Territories and possessions, determined by the Administrator * * * to be necessary for national defense or for the training of airplane pilots, including areas essential for safe approaches and including the acquisition of land.

It is perfectly apparent from that language that this appropriation should be refused altogether. The item provides for the acquisition of lands all over the country without building airports on them; and in that way the Government in a measure would be forced to build airports on the lands that might be bought. That was one reason which actuated members of the Senate committee in taking the action they did. Another one was that this proposal was brought here at the last moment, without previous information concerning it. It was brought in very large volume, as Senators have noticed from the copy the Senator from Colorado has exhibited. It is a tremendous project, aggregating probably somewhere between $600,000,000 and $800,000,000. The Senator from Colorado says it aggregates a billion dollars, but I think the figures show the total to be between six and seven hundred or perhaps eight hundred million dollars—a very large sum of money. So far as the information the committee had was concerned, we did not think there was sufficient evidence on which to inaugurate such an enormous series of projects.

Another thing which actuated the committee was that the proposal came on a deficiency bill. Congress will be in session in January, February, and March 1941, when the regular bill will come up, and when those who are interested in this proposal will have every opportunity to come before the committee, every part of the matter can be gone over and every item of it can be thoroughly investigated. If an amendment, such as was suggested by the Senator from Wyoming a few moments ago, is offered, then it can be considered at that time.

The committee did not turn down the matter absolutely, as I recall; but they postponed its consideration in connection with this deficiency bill because we thought the inauguration of a great proposal of this kind, costing six or seven hundred million dollars, was too large an undertaking to be inaugurated on the testimony which we had before the committee.

I very much hope Senators will look at the matter in the same way that the committee looked at it, and let it go over until it can be more thoroughly considered in a proper way, and not be presented to us on the spur of the moment, so to speak.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I correctly understand that it would be in order to offer an amendment to the language which it is proposed by the committee amendment to strike out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is to be treated as a perfecting amendment, it would be in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That was my purpose. Another parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I at this time offer such an amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor; and, as the Chair understands, he has yielded to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Colorado that I quite agree with him that it is very unfortunate that this list should be handed out. In my own State the list contains a large number of cities and towns. The impression created on them was that the money was already here, waiting to be sent down there. As a matter of fact, I understand that to build airports in all the towns on this list would cost six or eight hundred million dollars; and, of course, we cannot get that much money at this time for this purpose.

I desire, however, to correct the Senator as to one point. He referred to the recent expenditure in Texas of $25,000,000 for an airport. That was not quite accurate. There has been authorized the expenditure of $25,000,000 in Texas, not for an airport like those in this list, but for a naval aviation base at Corpus Christi, Tex. The base was located there because the Navy, after making a very comprehensive survey and investigation—not since the emergency, but a year or two ago—decided that that was the place to put the naval aviation training base, on the Gulf, where it would dominate the Gulf, and, in connection with Pensacola, would dominate the whole Caribbean area. So I wanted to make it clear that it is not a local project at all; it is a national project.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, one of the things I am trying to point out is that if we adopt this amendment we shall be supplanting the program of the Government, established after long study. As the Senator knows, there has been a continual succession of contentions and upheavals in these aeronautic boards. Before they get really seated and get their feet in the stirrups, when they cannot have had time to make a careful study of this subject, they seek to reach out and take over the entire airport problem of the United States. We felt, as a committee, some obligation to try to stay their hand temporarily, until full consideration could be given to the subject; not a 20-minute report before the committee, and the handing in of a prepared list of projects.

Reference has been made here to embarrassments. If the Senator from Colorado were interested in embarrassments, he would not be here opposing this project and supporting the committee amendment. The Senator from Colorado has not been very much concerned about embarrassments in trying to do what he thought was his duty.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield for a moment?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator from Colorado. He has courage and fine judgment and good common sense, and, in the main, I am trying to agree with the Senator. But I did not want this program to be charged with the responsibility of the naval aviation base at Corpus Christi, Tex.; and I did not want Corpus Christi, Tex., to be charged with a private project that was trying to get something out of the Treasury. It is a national project, and all the money is being furnished by the Government. The naval training station is being placed at Corpus Christi, Tex., because the Navy of the United States said that was the place where it should be established.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator will agree that there are several kinds of bases. There are those which are strictly naval, like that at Corpus Christi; there are those which are strictly Army bases; and there are some which are strictly commercial. This is a program of tremendous importance. The future commerce of the United States may depend upon the proper development of air fields, their location, and their development. It is not a question which we should decide instantly because there has been sent out through the country, willfully or innocently, a report which may result in a greatly expanded hope for airports at every crossroads.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator, and I apologize for not having yielded sooner, as he has been trying for some time to make a statement.

Mr. CAPPER. I have here a telegram received an hour ago from John F. Scott, the mayor of Topeka, who is greatly disturbed over the report in today's morning newspapers that this airport item in the appropriation bill has been eliminated.

I have no doubt there are hundreds of airport projects throughout the country expecting help under this particular proposal. I do not know about the merits of all of them, but I do know about the one at Topeka, my home town. I know that it is a very worthy undertaking, on which a considerable amount of money already has been spent. It has been in process of construction for about a year. The city of Topeka has done its part in carrying out the project, and it is greatly needed. I hope that some way will be worked out by which this airport appropriation can be approved, so that we can go ahead with the enterprise.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator be interested in the construction of 3,999 projects at Government expense which might not have been so well justified as the one to which he refers, in order to be sure of the one at Topeka?

Mr. CAPPER. I can only say at this time that we not only need this airport but we also need employment for labor at this time. It is a legitimate and meritorious undertaking.

Mr. ADAMS. There would be less local labor employed under this provision, because the W. P. A. labor which has been working on the airport would be eliminated; the work would be done by contract, and the contractor would bring his labor in from wherever he pleases. There are 85 airports on the list for Kansas, and I venture to say that outside the two Senators from Kansas there is not a Member of the Senate who can identify two-thirds of the towns.

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have been impressed with the novelty and the unusual character of the disposition of public funds provided in the House amendment. The setting up of the smallest or the largest field for naval aviation, or a naval base, or a navy yard, or any other naval facility cannot be accomplished by the Navy without congressional authorization. The Department must come before the Committee on Naval Affairs and get authorization, give the name of the place, and the cost, and then go before the Committee on Appropriations and get an appropriation.

Is it a fact that under this proposal there will be no authorization by any committee of the House or Senate, or both, as to where the airport shall be located, or as to the cost, but that a board, without any further action, would be given this sum of money and authority to place these fields wherever it chose, all in one State, or all in one part of the country, in any manner they chose?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is absolutely correct. Not only is it true that the Navy must go to a committee and go through the authorization process, and that the Army must go to a committee and go through the authorization process, but here is a proposal that it shall not be necessary to go through the Committee on Commerce, to which ordinarily matters which affect commerce must be handled, but they would go direct to the Committee on Appropriations and say, "Give us the money, give us the authority for both the location and the development of every single airport in the United States for a period of years."

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that is a revolutionary procedure. I should like to ask the Senator another question. How long has a study been made by any board of this new and extensive problem?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer, because this has just appeared for the first time before the Committee on Appropriations. The report is dated September 16, 1940.

Mr. WALSH. How long was it in preparation? How extensive was the study?

Mr. ADAMS. I have no idea.

Mr. WALSH. How was the amount of $80,000,000 reached?

Mr. ADAMS. There is a list of projects in which the possible cost of projects, in round numbers, is set out, so that when the people of the town of Phillipsburg, in Kansas, look over this, they say, "We are going to get $19,630, and we are going to have an airport of a certain classification."

Mr. WALSH. It only means that some board, in looking over the possibilities in the next hundred years for building airports, may decide that one might be placed there at that cost.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. They go further. They say that this is not a closed list, that other towns may be added to it "in our discretion," not in the discretion of the Congress. In other words, no longer can Congress say where airports shall go, what their character shall be, what their purposes shall be, or what their functions.

Mr. WALSH. I desired to emphasize that fact, and that is why I made the inquiry I propounded. In view of my experience on the Committee on Naval Affairs, even when the selection could be left to the Department on the ground that it required some secrecy, they have to come before the committee and say what they contemplate doing, state the place where they are to locate the airport, the cost of the project, and give full information, even before they go before the Committee on Appropriations. Is not that the practice?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH. I am in general sympathy with the working out of some national scheme for the building up of airports, but I hope it will be done in an orderly, systematic way, without favor, and with the sole purpose and intention of building up a reasonable national defense for the protection and security of our people. I think the idea has merit, but I think we should proceed systematically and in the orderly and regular way, unless there is some evidence that the precedents we have followed in the past should be disregarded entirely. I favor the general idea, but I hope it will be presented to us in a more definite way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reasons which have just been given in the colloquy between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Massachusetts were the reasons which actuated the committee in postponing this matter until we could have something definite, something fixed, something certain to which the other departments of the Government would agree. That is the fact, is it not, so far as the committee is concerned?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; and I may add, frankly, that the committee did not enthuse over the pressure that was being put on, regardless of the source. It was an obvious effort to put the clamps on every Senator and say, "If you do not vote this way you are going to deny our city an airport."

Mr. McKELLAR. Obviously that had its effect, because it was not taken up in the way in which it should have been taken up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Was there any evidence before the committee which indicated that after the expenditures were made these airports would be properly taken care of and the proper upkeep and maintenance would be provided? My colleague understands very well that an airport may be built today, but a year from now it may be full of gopher holes, and everything else may be wrong. It would be a clear waste of money to proceed to build an airport unless an arrangement were made for taking care of the airport.

Mr. ADAMS. There is an utter absence of provision for maintenance. It was not decided what the airports were to be. One might be a municipal airport, another a private airport, and another a Federal airport. There is a total lack of a consecutive, thought-out plan such as is necessary in order to maintain the continuity of air service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have been impressed, during the discussion which has taken place, with the thought that the committee recommended the striking out of this language not so much because it is opposed to the development of airports in the national defense but because it resents the fact that there was publication in the press of the country of the report which had been prepared by the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the advice of Congress, a report which apparently was not given out by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, but which, according to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, was secured by the very accurate and diligent newspapermen from the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be clear that we cannot blame the Civil Aeronautics Authority because a correspondent or two succeeded in digging out from the Committee on Appropriations information with respect to a Nation-wide survey that was made. The matter is presented to us this afternoon as though we were discussing a broad program for the expenditure of $526,000,000. That obviously is not the case.

The recommendation which comes to this body with the authority of the House of Representatives behind it, since the House adopted it, is simply that there be an expenditure of $30,000,000 and an authorization of $50,000,000 for the development of landing fields.

Instead of attempting to answer any of the questions which have been raised this afternoon with respect to the manner in which this money should be expended, the committee has simply eliminated it all. The feeling I have is that we are confronted with a really important problem, namely, that of constructing and improving airports. In order to make clear how simple it would be to amend the language, Mr. President, let me suggest this change which would cover at least two of the criticisms which have been offered this afternoon. On page 24, in line 5, after the word "by", strike out the remainder of line 5 and all of line 6, down to and including the word "purposes", and insert in lieu thereof:

a priority board of three persons to be appointed by the President, one to be an officer of the Army, one to be an officer of the Navy, and one to be a representative of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the findings of which board shall be certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to be essential for military purposes: Provided, That no construction shall be authorized on any private airport.

Mr. President, I fear from what I have heard during the debate that most of the Senators who are present are persuaded by the fact that there was a publication in the newspapers of a report which was not given out by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. In order to perfect the language I offer the amendment which I have just now read.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will prevail. It seems to me we have overlooked one of the salient provisions that should be included in the committee amendment, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will supply it.

The committee amendment proposes to strike out, among other language, the following:

Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in, or authorized to be obligated by, this paragraph shall be expended or obligated for the purchase of land or construction of buildings unless such purchase or construction is certified by the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy to be essential for military purposes.

We have entrusted to the Navy Department and to the War Department many duties similar to those set forth in that provision, and I cannot see that the money which is to be used in connection with the choice that is made by the Army or the Navy could be frittered away, as it has been suggested it might be.

It is true that many cities and localities have spent much money in trying to help locate naval bases for national defense. One county in my State voted to bond itself to the extent of more than $1,000,000 to purchase a very valuable property consisting of approximately 800 acres of land. The people went to the polls and bonded themselves for that purchase. Part of the land was purchased, but much of it had to be condemned because the owner did not want to surrender it at any agreed price. Practically all the condemnation suits have now been completed. Similar action has been taken in many other places in my State. The airport at the city of Orlando was not sufficiently large, although the city had spent a half million dollars on it. Forty additional acres of land were wanted, and the Government required the city to purchase that land before it would locate and perfect its Army training base there. Similar situations have arisen all over the State of Florida. The majority of the cities of Florida containing more than 10,000 inhabitants have been asked to do the same thing, and they have done it. They have spent many million dollars of their own trying to help out this program, and we feel that the Government should at least take part to the extent of providing for the safety of the young men who must do their training there.

I read a statement in a newspaper yesterday that between five and ten thousand young aviators had lost their lives in England during the last few months in training, and it was indicated that that great loss of life had occurred because proper preparation had not been made to provide landing areas and other safeguards for the young men who were training.

I think it is very important that the Government should undertake to select the landing areas provided by the language stricken out by the committee amendment, and that no money should be spent on such areas unless it is certified by the Army and the Navy that they are necessary for national defense. If we do that, we can rest assured that airports will not be located in out-of-way places or on land which belongs to someone else. That would not be done. It would not be common sense to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the committee amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 24, line 5, after the word "by" it is proposed to strike out the remainder of line 5, and all of line 6 down to and including the word "purposes", and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

A priority board of three persons to be appointed by the President, one to be an officer of the Army, one to be an officer of the Navy, and one to be a representative of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the findings of which board shall be certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to be essential for military purposes: Provided, That no construction shall be authorized on any private airport.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming improves the House language. I do not think it meets the essential objection to it. I have no authority from the committee, but, so far as I am personally concerned, I should be very glad to see it adopted, and then see the committee amendment, as it would then be amended, adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in justice to the Civil Aeronautics Administration I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point a press release which it gave out respecting the airports about which there was so much discussion this afternoon.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

No list of airports to be improved under the $80,000,000 program now before Congress has been, or can be, issued by the C. A. A. at this time, Col. Donald H. Connolly, Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, said Monday.

Colonel Connolly explained that even if the money is made available, the current intensity of the defense factor will dwarf all other considerations, and that the War and Navy Departments must, of course, play a major part in deciding what locations are most useful to them.

He added that airport locations probably will be decided by some sort of joint board to be set up by the President, representing the War, Navy, and Commerce Departments.

Colonel Connolly said that certain airport lists for various States, published over the week end, probably are taken from the 6-year plan submitted by the C. A. A. to the Appropriations Committees of Congress. He said no such lists had been made public by his office, because he felt the effect would be very misleading.

"There is a great difference," he said, "between the work to be done under the present $80,000,000 authorization and the so-called long-range plan of the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

"Perhaps our plan should be called a Nation-wide survey instead of a long-range plan," he said. "It is merely a detailed survey of all the existing landing facilities of the country, supplemented by our own idea of the additions and improvements needed to meet present-day aviation traffic requirements.

"We have been besieged by requests for copies of this 'plan.' We cannot give it out. It was prepared for the Committee on Appropriations and submitted to them. It is not in any sense a priority list. It is just the basis for somebody else to begin the discussion of priorities. It has no status whatever under the law, because no such program is even under consideration by the legislative branch of the Government.

"The work done under the $80,000,000 appropriation by Congress need not, under the law, bear any relation to the survey submitted by us."

Colonel Connolly said that, naturally, the Civil Aeronautics Administration must know the exact status of every airport in the country if it is to do intelligent planning. And, he added, the agency's airport experts must be able to estimate the country's future needs with some accuracy if they are to enjoy the confidence of Congress and the President that they know what they are doing.

The 6-year plan, he said, represents merely this knowledge transmitted in a single package for the consideration of congressional committees which recommend appropriations to Congress.

"The important thing is for communities not to assume that long lists of airports on our 6-year list are going to be built immediately from current funds," he said. "That 6-year list involves some 4,000 locations, whereas the program now before Congress will not exceed a few hundred fields."

The Federal Government will neither buy land nor construct buildings under the $80,000,000 airport program now before Congress, Colonel Connolly said.

"What the country needs immediately for defense purposes is landing areas—good fields which can handle plenty of aircraft quickly," Colonel Connolly explained.

"The law provides for just that. Federal funds can be spent on grading, drainage, paving of runways, lighting and navigation aids where necessary; in short, on improving the field.

"Federal funds cannot be spent, under this law, to buy any land or construct any buildings, except in most unusual cases where the Secretary of War or Navy certify the action.

"States, counties, or cities which ultimately will benefit from civilian use of the airports when the emergency has passed, are expected to provide the land and put up whatever structures they will need. They also must agree to maintain the field after it is built."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior—Office of the Secretary", on page 25, after line 19, to insert:

Leasing of grazing lands, Grazing Service: For leasing State, county, or privately owned lands in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 1033), fiscal years 1940 and 1941, $50,000: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 14, to insert:

UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 18, to insert:

Compensation and expenses of attorneys, Modoc and Klamath Tribes and Yahoo Skin Band of Snake Indians, Oregon (tribal funds): Not to exceed $10,000 of the funds on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the Modoc and Klamath Tribes and Yahoo Skin Band of Snake Indians may be expended for payment of the compensation and expenses of an attorney or firm of attorneys to be employed by the General Council or Business Committee of said Indians under a written contract to be executed and approved in accordance with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 3, to insert:

Construction and repair: For an additional amount for the construction, repair, or rehabilitation of school, agency, hospital, or other buildings, and utilities, including the purchase of land and the acquisition of easements or rights-of-way when necessary, and including the purchase of furniture, furnishings, and equipment as follows:

Red Lake, Minn.: School facilities, $107,000, to remain available until completion of the project when the unobligated balance shall revert to the Treasury: Provided, That no obligation shall be incurred hereunder unless and until the school district of Beltrami County, Minn., shall have deposited into the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation the unobligated balance of the insurance collected on the destroyed Red Lake school plant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Mines," on page 30, line 8, after the numerals "1941", to strike out "$275,000" and insert "$350,000", and in line 14, before the word "respectively", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$30,000", so as to read:

Investigation of domestic sources of mineral supply: For an additional amount for investigation of domestic sources of mineral supply, including the same objects specified under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1941, $350,000; and the limitations therein of $1,000 which may be expended for printing and binding, of $15,000 which may be expended for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and of $15,000 which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, are hereby increased to $1,500, $22,000, and $30,000, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Park Service", on page 31, after line 13, to insert:

Arlington Memorial Bridge: For an additional amount for furnishing granite and carving of equestrian groups for the Arlington Memorial Bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, authorized in an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from a point near the Lincoln Memorial in the city of Washington to an appropriate point in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes," approved February 24, 1925 (43 Stat. 974), to be expended in accordance with the provisions and conditions of the said act, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 23, to insert:

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

Enforcement of Alaska game law: For an additional amount for the enforcement of the Alaska game law, approved January 13, 1925, as amended, to be used exclusively for the construction and equipment of hangars in Alaska for airplanes of the Alaska Game Commission, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Government in the Territories", on page 32, after line 6, to insert:

Legislative expenses, Territory of Alaska, 1939: The limitations in appropriations for legislative expenses, Territory of Alaska, as contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1939, and the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"For salaries of members, $21,585; mileage of members, $9,448.40; salaries of employees, $5,160; printing, indexing, comparing proofs, and binding laws, printing, indexing and binding journals, stationery, supplies, printing of bills, reports, and so forth, $14,458.81; in all, $50,652.21."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Labor—Secretary's Office," on page 33, line 14, after the word "program", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000"; in line 16, after the word "follows" and the colon, to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$3,000"; in line 17, after the word "and", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$30,000", and in line 21, after the word "to", to strike out "$193,000" and insert "$201,570", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1941, to be used exclusively for the promotion of the apprenticeship program, $300,000, from which amount transfers may be made to other appropriations for the Department of Labor, fiscal year 1941, as follows: $3,000 to contingent expenses and $30,000 to traveling expenses: Provided, That the limitation on the amount which may be expended under this head for personal services in the District of Columbia is hereby increased to $201,570.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, with reference to the appropriation contemplated by the amendment in line 14, on page 33, which has just been agreed to, I wish the RECORD to show that word with reference to the successful operation of the program contemplated by this section of the bill has come to me from so many sources, and it seems so eminently worth while that I wish to indicate in the RECORD my approval of what has just been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Navy Department—Office of the Secretary", on page 34, line 26, after the word "in", to insert "Senate Document No. 281, and", and on page 35, line 2, after the name "Congress", to strike out "$566.25" and insert "$1,456.86", so as to read:

On page 71, line 1, to change the section number from 208 to 209.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in accordance with the agreement made earlier in the day, I ask that we now return to page 18 of the bill. We had some discussion about one of the sections, and it was suggested that I prepare an amendment, and that we subsequently return to that section.

I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, it is proposed to strike out the item beginning in line 3, down to and including the word "Service", in line 9, and to substitute the following:

After the date of the enactment of this act, none of the appropriation "Salaries, National Labor Relations Board, 1941", shall be obligated for the Division of Economic Research or for the Division of Technical Service.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should prefer to have the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service remain in the framework of the Labor Board. I think they are performing a proper function and a very important function as an administrative unit, but I understand that the House is insistent that these Divisions be abolished.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator's amendment include the proviso which the committee inserted?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I do not touch that at all.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. As I caught the reading of the amendment, it simply provides for abolishing the Division. The Senator does not propose to repeal the law or the functions provided for in the law, does he?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. BYRNES. All that is proposed is to abolish the Division.

Mr. WAGNER. All that is proposed is to abolish the Division. I have been informed by several members of the committee that the House is absolutely firm on that question, and I should not want to create an impasse, although I think the Division has done admirable work. The very least that can be done, however, is to continue the functions, so that the administration of the law is not crippled.

Mr. President, I have a further amendment, which is part of the same section and carries out the same idea. May the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the National Labor Relations Board from obligating any part of such appropriation for carrying on any of the functions or duties conferred upon it by the National Labor Relations Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to disagree to the committee amendment on page 18, line 9?

Mr. WAGNER. No. I am not interfering with the committee amendment at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment on page 18, line 9, is agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, which amendment is now being considered? For the information of the Senate I ask that the amendment under consideration be stated.

Mr. WAGNER. The last amendment?

Mr. OVERTON. Whatever is now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, it is proposed to strike out the item beginning at line 3, down to and including the word "Service", in line 9, and to substitute the following:

After the date of the enactment of this act none of the appropriation "Salaries, National Labor Relations Board, 1941," shall be obligated for the Division of Economic Research or for the Division of Technical Service.

Mr. OVERTON. Has that amendment been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been acted upon. The amendment is pending.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no objection to that amendment, but I do object to the second amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the first amendment offered by the Senator from New York is agreed to.

The second amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the National Labor Relations Board from obligating any part of such appropriation for carrying on any of the functions or duties conferred upon it by the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. OVERTON. That would authorize the National Labor Relations Board to use any of the appropriation to discharge the functions of the Division of Technical Service, or the Division of Economic Research.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment to which the Senator had said he had no objection provides that the appropriation may not be used for either of those two Divisions.

Mr. OVERTON. With the sole exception of $3,200. The committee amendment allows $3,200 to be used to make up case records.

Mr. WAGNER. To make a report. That limitation applies only to professional service of a particular type for a particular purpose.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes. The second amendment does not contemplate that any of the funds may be used for personal services, or in connection with the functions of the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service, does it?

Mr. WAGNER. My intention is to preserve the functions, because unless the functions are preserved the National Labor Relations Act might as well be repealed. However, the House has objected to the Division of Economic Research exercising those functions, so I provide that the functions shall not be exercised by the Division of Economic Research. The amendment prevents use of the 1941 appropriation for the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand the situation, at the last session of Congress, the House committee recommended that none of the funds be employed in connection with the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service. That was the committee recommendation. No provision was inserted in the appropriation bill to that effect. The National Labor Relations Board used something like two-thirds of the fund, I think, for the identical purposes of the Division of Economic Research and the Division of Technical Service. The Division was called by another name, but almost all the same personnel were employed, and most of the money was spent for that purpose. The reason why the House has inserted this provision in the bill is to prohibit the National Labor Relations Board from using the funds for any of the functions of the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service. If the Senator's amendment would permit the use of funds for those functions, over and beyond the $3,200 which is allowed, it would be contrary to the views expressed by the Senate committee and by the House committee.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not believe that either the Senate committee or the House committee intends practically to repeal the National Labor Relations Act. Such efforts have been made, and they have not succeeded so far. As I recall it, the real basis of the House objection was the individual who heads the particular division, David J. Saposs, because of some radical economic or social views he is alleged to hold. He vigorously denies holding such views. The House committee felt that he ought not to be employed, and not being able to bring any other grounds for his removal, the committee abolished the division which he headed, in order to get rid of him. That is the real basis of the difficulty. I am not here concerned with that essentially personal difficulty. But I do not think that either the House or the Senate wants to abolish the functions, and I am sure the Senator would not want to do so.

Whenever a case comes before the National Labor Relations Board in the form of a charge, the first thing which the Labor Board must determine is whether or not it has jurisdiction. If it cannot determine that question, it cannot proceed any further. In many cases, the Research Division ascertains the facts, the economic facts, which determine whether a particular concern is engaged in interstate commerce or in intrastate commerce, whether or not it sells in the interstate market, and what is its relation to the national economy.

Mr. OVERTON. Is that done by the Division of Economic Research?

Mr. WAGNER. It is now done by the Division of Economic Research in many cases.

Mr. OVERTON. Can anyone else do it?

Mr. WAGNER. That work may be transferred to any other division, and that is exactly what I am proposing to do. I am saying that we do not intend to say to the Labor Board, "We are not going to give you any money to ascertain these facts." Otherwise, we are in effect repealing the National Labor Relations Act. We are saying to the Board, "You cannot administer the law." What this amendment does is to carry out the wish of the House in abolishing this particular division, and to say, "If you are to function at all, some other bureau will have to do that particular work."

I am sure the Senator from Louisiana does not want to have the bill provide that the Labor Board cannot spend any money to ascertain these facts.

Mr. OVERTON. I may say to the Senator from New York that we had quite extensive hearings in the subcommittee on this whole question; and the Board finally requested of the committee that $3,200 be saved of the money which had heretofore been expended by the Division of Economic Research in order to make a record of case statistics, and in order to make the annual report. That was satisfactory.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. The Senator from Louisiana and I are not apart on that matter at all. The Economic Research Division also aids in performing that particular function. The Senator provides by his amendment that this shall be done by payment of $3,200 to some particular professional statistician, so that is provided for. That is another function. I merely want to preserve the law; and I do not think the Members of the Senate or the House meant, by indirection, to kill the law.

Mr. OVERTON. It is not clear to me whether or not the able Senator from New York is going farther than the National Labor Relations Board itself requested the committee to go. All they want is $3,200 to be used to perform certain functions which have heretofore been performed by these two divisions; and those are the two matters I have just mentioned.

Mr. WAGNER. I was not present at the hearings; but the Senator agrees that the particular function to which I have referred is very important, does he not?

Mr. OVERTON. I have no doubt it is important, and I have no doubt they will be able to do it under the general appropriation.

Mr. WAGNER. That is one of the functions which were conferred upon the Economic Research Division. The Senator's amendment—I am sure it is an oversight—provides that no money shall be hereafter expended for any of the functions which had been conferred on the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service. One of the functions transferred to them was the ascertainment of the facts to which I referred a moment ago. If the bill is passed in this form, the National Labor Relations Board will be absolutely prohibited from spending any money to ascertain those facts; and if they cannot ascertain those facts they cannot determine the question of jurisdiction. It is an indirect way of killing the law, and I do not believe anybody wants to do that. I am sure it is an oversight. All I am trying to do is to remedy that situation.

The other function to which the Senator referred—namely, that of compiling case statistics for the purpose of reporting to Congress and to the President—I am not touching at all. That matter has been passed upon by the committee, and I am quite satisfied with the explanation of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] on the meaning of that revision.

Another function involved here is quite as important as the one to which I have referred. That is the following: In the Republic Steel Co. case, which went all the way to the United States Supreme Court, the courts sustained the Labor Board in their direction to the Republic Steel Co. to reinstate several thousand men who had been forced to strike in protest against the company's flagrant violations of their rights under the law. The circuit court of appeals sustained the findings of the Board, and the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari. Now the questions come up as to whether the men are being reemployed, whether they are getting the proper back wages, whether they are ineligible because they have obtained other substantially equivalent employment. That is a function which we imposed upon the Labor Board. That happens to be one of the functions which the Board conferred on the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Technical Service. To take that function away from the Board entirely would paralyze the Board in the performance of its duties. If we should adopt this amendment as it now stands, without any further amendment, we might just as well repeal the law.

I am calling these facts to the attention of those who will be conferees on the bill. If the Senate conferees should recede on this matter, they would be going a long way toward repealing the National Labor Relations Act. That would be most unfortunate for all the workers of the country, because the Labor Board would be unable thereafter to protect them in their right to organize and to bargain collectively, and to remedy abuses of that right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York (Mr. WAGNER).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have certain matter relating to this subject printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF STATEMENTS URGING RETENTION OF THE DIVISION OF ECONOMIC RESEARCH AND THE CHIEF ECONOMIST—TRADE-UNIONS

William Green, president, American Federation of Labor:

"I appreciate very greatly the service which the Division of Economic Research of the National Labor Relations Board is rendering. We will interpose no objection to the continuation of the Division of Economic Research of the National Labor Relations Board or to Mr. Saposs."

R. J. Thomas, president, United Automobile Workers of America, C. I. O.:

"On behalf of 375,000 auto workers I consider threatened dissolution of Economics Division fatal to work of Board and enforcement of Wagner Act. If Senate and House do not reconsider, we urge that work of the Economics Division be contained intact by use of funds transferred from some other Board activity. We have complete faith in record, integrity, ability of David J. Saposs and hope Board will not permit his being made a sacrifice because of his devoted work."

E. C. Davison, general secretary-treasurer, International Association of Machinists A. F. L. (membership, approximately 190,000):

"The Economic Research Division is an indispensable unit of the National Labor Relations Board in carrying out its fact-finding functions respecting labor relations. * * *

"The Economic Research Division has proven its worth through the quality of the expert service it has rendered. * * * Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the executive council of the International Association of Machinists, in session assembled, denounce this move to impair the efficient functioning of the National Labor Relations Board and call upon the members of the Board to maintain and keep intact its Economic Research Division. Adopted."

David Dubinsky, president, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, unaffiliated (membership approximately 235,000):

"Our organization is particularly anxious that the unfair attacks on the Board's Division of Economic Research shall not be permitted to interfere with its proper functioning.

"We all appreciate the usefulness of the Division in the preparation of Board cases and in the publication of valuable economic studies and bulletins. Our union regards these services as indispensable to the enforcement of the act. If the modest funds with which the Division of Economic Research has been operating are reduced, it will, in our judgment, undermine the effectiveness of the Board's work."

George L. Berry, president, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, A. F. of L. (membership approximately 40,000):

Without the work done by the Division enforcement of the act would have been in the past, and will be in the future, seriously impaired. I will even go so far as to venture the opinion that my point of view on this score is representative of a major part of organized labor in this country.

"* * * in addition to feeling that a division of economic research is essential to the most efficient functioning of the Board, I feel that the present director of the Division, Mr. David Saposs, contributes greatly to its work. This is in large measure because he has the rare combination of academic qualifications and intimate knowledge of the labor movement and collective-bargaining dynamics."

Gustav A. Strebel, president, New York State Industrial Union Council, C. I. O.:

"The discontinuance of the Division of Economic Research of the National Labor Relations Board would severely impair the effective functioning of that agency."

Daniel J. Tobin, president, and Michael J. Cashal, first vice president, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America, A. F. of L. (membership approximately 350,000):

"We believe it would be a mistake to hamper this Division in any way, because it would be a detriment to both employer and employee from our point of view. We are strongly in favor of maintaining the Economic Division as it is at this time."

Steel Workers Organizing Committee (resolution and telegram sent to President Roosevelt from the S. W. O. C. convention):

"In addition, the present appropriation destroys a single division of the Board which is now primarily concerned with enforcing the order of the Board, which has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States against the Republic Steel Corporation.

"* * * Steel Workers Organizing Committee assembled in convention * * * speaking for over 500,000 steel workers throughout the Nation, most earnestly calls upon you as President of the United States to veto the bill as passed by the Congress of the United States in order that it be returned to Congress and that Congress be requested to appropriate sufficient funds for the National Labor Relations Board with which the Wagner Act may be properly and most effectively administered."

LABOR ATTORNEYS

Joseph A. Padway, counsel, American Federation of Labor:

"I believe that the Economics Division should be retained. It would be a serious mistake to abolish it."

Isadore Katz, general counsel, Textile Workers Union of America and American Federation of Hosiery Workers (total membership approximately 300,000):

"I have no doubt that the Board might very well have been functioning in a vacuum had it not been for the aid of the Economics Division.

"* * * I am fully aware of the fact that a vicious attack has been leveled against this Division; but that attack springs from malice, and is not based upon knowledge of the functioning and service rendered by the Economics Division. * * *

"Not only is the Economics Division of great value to the Board itself, but its studies have aided employers, employees, and labor unions."

Leon M. Despres, Chicago attorney, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and other unions:

"In my opinion, the work of the Division of Economic Research is of such great value that it would be highly inadvisable to destroy this appropriation or this Division. In some of the most difficult cases it is only through the work of the Division of Economic Research that the truth and the true effect of malpractices have been presented."

David I. Ashe, New York attorney, Sheet Metal Workers International Association and other unions:

"It is hardly necessary to remind you of the important role the Economic Research Division has played in the functioning of the Board ever since its inception. * * *

"* * * To abolish the Division at the particular time, or to curtail its activities, would be so shortsighted that I cannot believe the Board will do any such thing.

"My views, may I say, are shared by a great number of lawyers and union representatives with whom I have discussed this matter."

William Karlin, attorney for various unions in New York:

"The arguments given for the elimination of the Research Department of the Board are unscientific and not for the best interests of industry and labor. What a library is for a university and a laboratory is for a scientific or technical institution, a division of economic research is to a board whose functions are to render decisions involving labor disputes."

LABOR ECONOMISTS, EDUCATORS, AND OTHERS

Edwin E. Witte, chairman, Department of Economics, University of Wisconsin; member, United States Social Security Advisory Council:

"For its efficient functioning, the Board needs the sort of data which the Division of Economic Research has been compiling for its use."

Harry W. Laidler, author; councilman, city of New York:

"In behalf of many people in New York, may I express the hope that this tremendously important Division of the Board's work will be retained and strengthened. The effectiveness of this Board depends, to no small extent, upon the continued work of the Economic Research Division."

Mark Starr, educational director, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union:

"With thousands of activists and educators in the trade union movement, I hope that the Division of Economic Research connected with the National Labor Relations Board will be retained and extended.

"The work which this division has done is invaluable for any future legislation governing collective bargaining. I do not see how laws can be intelligently made based upon the experience and the decisions of your board unless they are preceded by competent investigation of the current labor situation.

"In your present staff, headed by David J. Saposs, it seems to me you have an irreplaceable combination of historians of the past and researchers in the present state of labor unions."

Lawrence Rogin, educational director, American Federation of Hosiery Workers:

"As an educational director for one of the unions which has made consistent use of the National Labor Relations Board, may I protest very vigorously any action of this sort. The Division of Economic Research has provided the material which makes possible an intelligent understanding of the problems being administered by the National Labor Relations Board. Were it to be discontinued in its present form, someone else would have to do the work in order for the Wagner Act to be effectively administered."

Alfred M. Bingham, editor, Common Sense:

"I feel so strongly that this division has proved itself an indispensable part of your board's splendid work that I would like to add my voice to those urging the continuance of Mr. Saposs' division."

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
Washington, D. C., September 24, 1940.

Subject: Third deficiency bill (H. R. 10539).

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: For your information we are enclosing herewith a copy of the letter which was delivered by messenger yesterday to every Member of the House of Representatives relative to the above bill. We are also enclosing a copy of the wire which we sent today to all members of the Senate deficiency committee with regard to the same bill. We thought that you would be interested in learning of the action taken by our organization relative to this matter.

Very truly yours,

H. W. BROWN,
International President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 24, 1940.

This day letter is to be sent individually to the following Senators: Carter Glass, Kenneth McKellar, Carl Hayden, James F. Byrnes, Millard E. Tydings, Richard B. Russell, Alva B. Adams, John H. Overton, Frederick Hale, Gerald P. Nye, John G. Townsend.

Third deficiency bill as passed by House yesterday completely wipes out the Technical Service Division of the National Labor Relations Board and makes it impossible for that Board to use any funds allocated to it to pay the costs of maintaining such necessary service. If the N. L. R. B. is not allowed to perform the necessary technical and research work needed for the proper preparation and presentation of its cases the value and usefulness of the National Labor Relations Act will be sharply curtailed, if not destroyed. On behalf of our 220,000 members we urge that the Senate deficiency committee not concur in this feature of House approved bill and insist that the N. L. R. B. be allowed to perform the technical and research work necessary to properly effectuate the principles and policies of the N. L. R. A. Labor will hold the Congress sharply responsible if it destroys the effectiveness of the N. L. R. A. by passage of House approved deficiency bill.

H. W. BROWN,
International President, International Association of Machinists, Affiliated with American Federation of Labor.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
Washington, D. C., September 23, 1940.

Subject: Third deficiency bill H. R. 10539.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It has been brought to my attention that the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives today reported out to the House the third deficiency bill. This bill as reported out would completely wipe out the Technical Service Division of the National Labor Relations Board and make it impossible for the Board to use any funds allocated to it to pay the costs of maintaining such Technical Service Division.

On behalf of its more than 200,000 members, the International Association of Machinists, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, is unalterably opposed to any such attempt to sabotage the National Labor Relations Act, which has benefited and is benefiting our membership. If the Board is not allowed to perform the necessary technical and research work needed for the proper preparation and presentation of the many cases which are brought before it, the value and usefulness of the National Labor Relations Act will be sharply curtailed, if not destroyed.

Therefore, on behalf of our entire membership, we urge that you give serious consideration to this matter at once, and see that the third deficiency bill as reported out by the Appropriations Committee today, is properly modified so that it does not have the effect of destroying the usefulness of the National Labor Relations Act. The proposal of the Appropriations Committee in this regard is nothing more than an attempt to cut out of the N. L. R. B. one of its parts which is essential to a continued functioning of the Board to effectuate the policies and principles established by the National Labor Relations Act.

All workers will hold the Congress sharply responsible if the effectiveness of this act is destroyed by the passage of the third deficiency bill as reported today by the Appropriations Committee.

Sincerely yours,

H. W. BROWN,
International President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 3, 1940.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Deficiency bill H. R. 10537 passed by House contains rider completely wiping out Technical Service Division of National Labor Relations Board and making it impossible for that Board to perform necessary technical and research work needed for proper preparation and presentation of cases thus destroying usefulness of Wagner Act. On behalf of our 220,000 members we urge you to work for complete removal of this vicious rider.

H. W. BROWN,
International President, International Association of Machinists, Affiliated with American Federation of Labor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was authorized by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Before it is read, let me say, in a word, what it is.

By a recent law an increase was made in the per diem allowances of judges all over the country except the judges of the Court of Claims. There was an increase of their per diem when they are required to go to other places than their own courts. The purpose of this amendment is merely to put the judges of the Court of Claims on exactly the same footing as all the other judges in regard to that matter.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

THE JUDICIARY

Court of Claims: The act of June 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 799, ch. 573), entitled "An act to amend section 2 and to repeal section 3 of the act approved February 24, 1925 (43 Stat. 964, ch. 301), entitled 'An act to authorize the appointment of commissioners by the Court of Claims and to prescribe their powers and compensation', and for other purposes," is hereby reenacted: Provided, however, That the amount payable to commissioners of the court for their actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed $7 a day, and the maximum amount payable to stenographers for their actual expenses incurred for subsistence shall not exceed $5 a day: And provided further, That retired judges recalled to active duty in Washington or elsewhere shall be entitled to the travel and subsistence expenses provided for in said act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, at the instance of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I offer an amendment providing an appropriation of $5,000 to establish a commission for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson.

For expenses of carrying out the provisions of Public Resolution No. 100 (76th Cong.) entitled "A joint resolution to establish a Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson," approved September 24, 1940, $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The Chief Clerk. On page 3, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of any appropriation made for the contingent expenses of the Senate shall be used to defray the expenses of any person except the members of any congressional committee, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate or a representative of his office, and except the widow or minor children or both of the deceased, to attend the funeral rites and burial of any person who at the time of his or her death was a Senator of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the only purpose is to make the action of the Senate accord with the action of the House as to contingent expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the committee I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

The Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to deliver to the Librarian of Congress, from the sales stock in the Government Printing Office, two hundred and fifty sets of The Writings of George Washington, as published by the Bicentennial Commission, for distribution through international exchange and for such other distribution for the use of foreign governments as may be deemed appropriate.

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment was recommended to the Joint Committee on Printing by the Secretary of State as desirable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, on page 26, after line 2, to insert language recommended in a Budget estimate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

Appropriations available to the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1941 for soil- and moisture-conservation operations shall be available for packing, crating, and transportation, including drayage, of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. The transfer of the functions from the Department of Agriculture to the Interior Department did not carry this authority, and the money expended will be in accordance with the original appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, by direction of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

For payment to Katherine H. Clagett and to the estate of Dr. John C. Fitzpatrick $2,700 and $6,666.66, respectively, for services rendered the George Washington Bicentennial Commission in connection with the compilation of the definitive writings of George Washington, $9,366.66: Provided, That the payment to the said Katherine H. Clagett shall be in full, complete, and final compensation of any and all claims arising out of services rendered to the George Washington Bicentennial Commission prior to June 30, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee, in charge of the bill.

Some time ago, during the present Congress, a bill was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry proposing to repay to the holders of cotton-pool certificates the sum of $2.40 per certificate. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry made a favorable report on the bill. Later the Senate passed the bill, on the 22d day of June, the legislative day of June 21.

I desire to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the bill which passed this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An act (S. 2930) to provide for reimbursement to the holders of cotton pool participation trust certificates, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,320,000, or so much thereof as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture to accomplish the purposes hereinafter declared and authorized. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to, or upon the order of, the Secretary of Agriculture, such a part or all of the sum hereby appropriated at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to draw from the Treasury of the United States any part or all of the sum hereby appropriated, and to deposit same to his credit with the Treasurer of the United States, under special symbol number, to be available for disbursement for the purposes hereinafter stated.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to pay the sum of $2.40 per bale, from the sum hereby authorized to be appropriated, to all holders of participation trust certificates of the cotton producers' pool, Form C–5–I, of record as of May 1, 1937.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, which purpose is here specifically stated to be to reimburse holders of Form C–5–I cotton producers' pool participation trust certificates for $2.40 per bale carrying charges deducted from the proceeds of the cotton producers' pool.

SEC. 5. All expenses incident to the accomplishment of the purposes of this act are authorized to be paid by the Secretary from the appropriation authorized hereunder, and any balance remaining after reimbursements have been made in accordance with this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to introduce into the RECORD certain portions of the committee report as justification in support of the bill as it passed this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This amendment makes the necessary appropriation and the promulgation of the simple rules and regulations necessary to carry out its purposes and for expenses incident to its administration.

The cotton producers who acquired cotton producers' pool participation trust certificates were those cotton growers who complied with the 1933 cotton plow-up campaign. The participation trust certificates were issued by the Government and granted to such cotton growers in partial consideration for plowing up from 25 to 50 percent of his growing cotton acreage. The pool cotton was acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of section 3, part 1, title I, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (1933) and he acquired full legal title to this cotton on which the Federal Farm Board had made loans or advances. The cotton producers were assured by official announcement and by the first of a series of contracts and agreements which they were required to sign that their 6 cents per pound option price was absolute and inviolate and that any equity which the producers held in the optioned cotton in the pool would not be eaten up and liquidated by carrying charges or other costs and expenses. There were, however, a series of agreements, contracts, and authorizations, all of which was a part of the scheme which finally nullified the true substance of his option contract. The essence of such original option contract was the fixed price of 6 cents a pound on the optioned cotton, the free choice to sell and realize a profit prior to May 1, 1934, and that no carrying charges would be charged against the optioned cotton. Each of these three essential considerations was nullified by the subsequent contracts, agreements, and authorizations which the producer was required to execute to participate in the plan. The option price was increased, the right of free choice to sell the optioned cotton within the period of the option was denied, and carrying charges at the rate of six one-hundredths of a cent a pound, or 30 cents per bale per month from the date the pool was established, February 1, 1934, to September 30, 1934, was deducted from and charged to the holders of Form C–5–I participation trust certificates. All of which was contrary to the promises made by the Government to the cotton growers and contrary to and in violation of the first of a series of contracts and agreements which were a part of the whole scheme and signed and executed between the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the cotton growers. The imposition and exaction of $2.40 per bale carrying charges to the holders of Form C–5–I participation trust certificates was unjust and erroneously and wrongfully imposed.

Original options were issued to approximately 571,969 producers for an aggregate of approximately 2,387,795 bales of cotton. (See p. 320, Agricultural Adjustment, May 1933 to February 1934.) Approximately 125,000 of these producers holding options for approximately 500,000 bales elected to call their option, request the balance of their cotton, and receive settlement. These requests were honored, the cotton sold, and the options canceled. Approximately 450,000 of these producers holding options which approximate 1,950,000 bales elected to take the advance of $20 per bale to surrender their cotton to the pool and to take participation trust certificates.

Cotton prices on July 31, 1934, approximated 13⅛ cents to 13½ cents per pound for October-July New York contracts, or approximately $67.50 per bale, against which the farmer had been advanced 4 cents per pound, or $20 per bale, plus the option price of 6 cents per pound, or $30 per bale, a total of $50 per bale. Therefore, when Mr. Oscar Johnson took over discretionary powers to sell the pool cotton on August 1, 1934, there was a balance of profit or equity accruing to the farmer of $17.50 per bale. Since that date the farmer has only received the payment of $7.60 per bale which was paid out in the early fall of 1934. In accordance with a radio announcement of Mr. Johnson that the farmers' equity for this amount was negotiable by a surrender of 10-cent so-called yellow certificate for this advance and substitution therefor of the so-called brown certificate (Form C–5–I), which are presently held to the extent of about 1,600,000 bales by approximately 350,000 producers and merchants. Mr. Oscar Johnson estimates that 80 percent of these brown certificates (Form C–5–I) holdings are owned by farmers and 20 percent by the merchants. (See p. 127, Hearings Before Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on S. Res. 137, April 11 to May 14, 1938.)

THE CERTIFICATES

The Form C–5–I pool participation trust certificates were issued to cotton producers in partial consideration for compliance with the 1933 cotton plow-up program. The certificates were issued to the producers who chose the combination cash rental payment plus an option on Government-owned cotton. Under this plan the producer was to receive an option at 6 cents a pound on Government cotton in an amount equal to the estimated production on the land he retired from production. (See p. 24, Agricultural Adjustment, May 1933 to February 1934.)

THE PLOW-UP CAMPAIGN

The plan was announced June 19, 1933. The sign-up campaign began the week beginning June 26. The producer must contract to take out of production not less than 25 percent nor more than 50 percent of his cotton acreage. The campaign was to close July 8, but the closing date was extended to and did close on July 12, 1933. Cotton farmers had exactly 23 days from the day the plan was announced to the closing sign-up date and just 16 days during which to sign up the program. The time (23 days) was so short that the farmer was compelled to rely upon the representations of his Government made to him at the time. The plan was announced June 19. The sign-up campaign began the week June 26 and closed July 12.

THE LOSS ACCOMPLISHED

When the farmer signed up to plow under from 25 to 50 percent of his growing cotton his loss was accomplished. He lost his seed, his fertilizer, his labor, his rent or taxes and interest, and his labor and expense in plowing it under. The farmer depended upon the cotton plan to compensate him for this loss and reward him for his total effort by cooperating with the Government's cotton program and plan. The farmer put his trust in the plan and relied completely on the representations made to him by his Government. This was as it should be. This is proven by the fact that 1,026,514 cotton growers carried out adjustment contracts in 1933; 73 percent of the total cotton acreage was signed up; 10,400,000 acres of growing cotton was taken out of production or an estimated total of 4,400,000 bales of cotton. And a total of 571,969 growers chose the combination cash rental and option on Government-owned cotton (p. 19, Agricultural Adjustment, May 1933 to February 1934).

THE REPRESENTATION

In brief the plan was outlined and explained to the farmer in a 4-page pamphlet entitled "The Agricultural Adjustment Act Applied to Cotton" (serial No. 1823740–33). It carried a foreword by the President; it explained "the situation" and described "the plan." The farmer was offered a choice of two plans: (1) A cash payment only of $7 an acre for the 100 pounds to $20 an acre for the highest-yield land producing 275 pounds or more to the acre. The second plan (2) a cash payment, plus options on Government-held cotton at 6 cents a pound. The cash ranged from $6 per acre for the 100 pounds to $12 for acres producing 275 pounds or more to the acre.

In addition to the cash payment the producer was offered and given an option on an amount of Government cotton equal to the amount which the acreage he retires would produce. On page 3 of this pamphlet it was stated:

"If cotton prices go up or advance, the farmer can exercise his option, have the cotton sold, and take the profit. If prices fall below 6 cents, the Government will stand the loss. The farmer may have the cotton sold at such time before May 1, 1934, as he thinks will be to his best advantage and bring him the greatest return. He will receive the full difference in any advance in the price above 6 cents per pound."

The full difference in any advance in the price above the 6-cent option price left no room for any farmer to believe or even suspect that carrying charges in any amount were to be deducted and charged to him at any time prior to May 1, 1934. The farmer understood clearly that he had, was to have, and did receive an option on a certain amount of cotton at 6 cents per pound, and that he had a free choice to exercise that option by selling that cotton, prior to May 1, 1934, and take the profit, and that he would receive the full price difference in any advance above 6 cents with no carrying charges. But he was in fact denied the free choice to exercise the option to sell and realize a profit prior to May 1, 1934. And carrying charges were charged to him in the amount of 90 cents per bale between February 1, 1934, and May 1, 1934, all contrary to the understanding and an agreement between the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the producer. An option, according to Webster, means a free choice. It is said that options have been universally construed by the courts as binding agreements to keep an offer open (18 How. L. Rev. 457; Perry v. Paschal, 103 Ga. 134, 29 S. E. 703).

THE COTTON OPTION CONTRACT

The cotton option contract A. A. A. Form No. C–5 was a grant by the Secretary of Agriculture to the producer of an option to buy a specified number of bales of cotton at 6 cents per pound—$30 per bale—basis Middling ⅞-inch staple cotton as quoted on the New York Cotton Exchange. The terms of the option embraced seven stipulations of which Nos. 1 and 7 are pertinent:

"(1) The option is nontransferable and expires May 1, 1934, unless exercised before such date; and

"(7) The Secretary shall pay to the producer, as soon as practicable after the exercise of this option, the difference between 6 cents per pound and the price as fixed in paragraph 5 (b), or if the option is exercised pursuant to paragraph 5 (a) then the difference between 6 cents per pound and the price at which sale is made. In making such settlement, no deduction shall be made for carrying charges, brokerage fees, or other costs or expenses. (See Form No. C–5 and pp. 25–26, Agricultural Adjustment, May 1933 to February 1934.)"

The representations made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration when the program was announced—Agricultural Adjustment applied to Cotton (s. 1823740–33) and the cotton option contract, Form C–5—were in agreement that the right of free choice to exercise the option to sell and that carrying charges would not be charged to the farmer at any time prior to May 1, 1934.

HOW THE RIGHT TO EXERCISE OPTION WAS DEFEATED

The cotton producers pool was established by order of the Secretary of Agriculture dated January 8, 1934. The appointment of the pool manager was included in the order.

In order that a farmer may participate in the 1933 cotton producers pool it was necessary that he sign and execute "Form C–5–C—Exercise of cotton option and pool agreement" contract. By the terms of this contract, the optioned cotton was sold to the farmer by being turned over to the 1933 cotton producers pool, to be handled by the pool manager pursuant to the pool agreements. When the conditions have been fulfilled, the farmer was to receive the initial distribution of 4 cents per pound for such cotton, and a participation trust certificate, entitling him to share ratably in any profits from the sale of the cotton held by the pool.

This contract, Form C–5–C, contained two provisions which to all intents and purposes nullified the free choice of the producer to exercise his option to sell. It nullified the essence of the cotton option contract Form C–5 without substituting for it or canceling it. The two provisions are:

"The optionee hereby appoints the manager his trustee of all right, title, and interest which the optionee may have in the cotton delivered to the pool pursuant hereto and hereby authorizes the manager; and

"(4) In the event that the cotton held by the pool or any part thereof including cotton futures contracts can be marketed on the basis of 15 cents per pound Middling ⅞-inch cotton, to sell and make delivery of such cotton upon such basis subject to the approval of the Secretary, and after July 31, 1934, to sell and make delivery of all or any part of the cotton including cotton futures contracts by way of hedge or for the purpose of fixation of prices of cotton bought or sold pursuant hereto by the manager."

By the terms of this contract, which was a part of the whole scheme, the pool manager was denied the authority to sell any cotton below 15 cents per pound not only prior to May 1, 1934, but prior to July 31, 1934. Since the price of cotton Middling ⅞-inch basis New York Cotton Exchange did not reach 15 cents the farmer was denied the right to exercise his option to sell and take a profit prior to May 1, 1934, as agreed to but also prior to July 31, 1934. This scheme denied the farmer the right to sell his option prior to May 1, 1934, and thus forced him to sign and execute A. A. A. Form C–5–B–No. 3 which was a "request for extension of option." The producer had no choice. He could not exercise his option to sell and take his profit prior to May 1, 1934, because the pool manager could not sell unless he got 15 cents per pound and after May 1, 1934, he had no option because on that date it expired. The farmer's sole opportunity to save any profit remaining in his share of the pool was to apply for an extension of his option and submit to the terms proposed in A. A. A. Form No. C–5–B–No. 3 request for extension of option, the essence of which is as follows:

"To the SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE:

"Application is hereby made for an extension of time for the exercise of my 'cotton option' described in this form for a period of 1 year from May 1, 1934, agreeing (a) that the purchase price of 6 cents per pound shall be increased at the rate of 8 points or 40 cents per bale for each month or fractional part thereof, that the option contract may be carried after May 1, 1934; (b) that after May 1, 1934, if such extension be granted, the Secretary of Agriculture may at his discretion exercise the option for me, provided the price be not less than 12½ cents per pound; and (c) that if a less number of options be so called by the Secretary than are outstanding, the particular options to be retired may be selected by lot as may be prescribed by the Secretary."

The device used in this application for extension of option was to increase the option price of 6 cents at the rate of 8 points, or 40 cents per bale, per month after May 1, 1934, to cover carrying charges, the identical item which the producer was assured would not be charged against any equity in his optioned cotton above the 6-cent purchase price. He was also assured by anncuncements and by written agreements that the purchase price of the optioned cotton was absolute and inviolate. But the producer's protection on this vital point of purchase price was abrogated in this supplemental agreement by duress. The producer had no choice of whether or not he would sign the extension of option agreement Form C–5–B. He had no opportunity to negotiate as to terms. He must sign it or lose his option. The equity in his option was his partial compensation for plowing up his growing cotton. His cotton had been plowed up. His choice was not a free choice but a compelling one to continue with the program by signing and executing the agreements presented to him by his Government. The alternative was the loss of an essential part of the compensation due him in consideration for performances of his contract, a financial loss he was unable to bear.

LOADING THE OPTION WITH CARRYING CHARGES OF $2.40 A BALE

After July 31, 1934, the pool manager had authority and discretion to sell and dispose of pool cotton without the previous limitations with respect to price and except that the producer designated the day of sale on a form prescribed by the manager of the cotton pool, Form No. C–5–F. Under this authorization the producer was compelled, when he exercised his option to sell his equity in the pool cotton, to agree that carrying charges at the rate of six one-hundredths of a cent per pound, or 30 cents per bale per month, from February 1, 1934, to the first day of the cover month on which the price is fixed. This meant September 30, 1934. The language of the agreement of A. A. A. Form C–5–F referred to is as follows:

"* * * From the purchase price for the certificate the pool manager shall deduct 10 cents per pound, or $50 per bale, and six one-hundredths (6/100) of a cent per pound, or 30 cents per bale per month from February 1, 1934, to the first day of the cover month on which the price is fixed, to cover the obligation of the undersigned to the pool, the balance, if any, to be paid to the undersigned."

This contract (Form C–5–F) was the form prescribed by the pool manager as the instrumentality through which the producer authorized the date of sale of his cotton in the cotton pool. The manager of the pool chose the device of this contract to exact from the farmer the total carrying charges of $2.40 per bale from the time the pool was established February 1, 1934, to September 30, 1934. This notwithstanding that the cotton grower plowed up from 25 to 50 percent of his growing cotton crop on the pledge of his Government, supported by his cotton-option contract, Form C–5, that "no deductions shall be made for carrying charges, brokerage fees, or other costs or expenses" up to May 1, 1934. Since his right to sell his cotton was nullified by the 15-cent price limitation in Form C–5–C, the producer was without choice except to sign the request for extension of option Form C–5–B or lose his option entirely at its expiration, which he could not offer to do since he had previously plowed up his growing cotton in performance of his contract. Under these circumstances no carrying charges should have been charged to the farmer either before or after May 1, 1934.

THE AVERAGE AMOUNT DUE PRODUCERS

The average amount due holders of cotton producers' participation trust certificates, Form C–5–I, is approximately $10.97 per person.

THE APPENDIX

Your committee feel that because of the number of contracts, agreements, and authorization in the series which were a part of the whole plan with reference to the 1933 cotton producers' pool that it is pertinent to include these 11 exhibits as an appendix to this report.

The holders of participation trust certificates of the cotton producers' pool, Form C–5–I, have never been reimbursed for the carrying charges erroneously and wrongfully deducted from the proceeds of the cotton producers' pool. Your committee feel that in view of all the circumstances, and in fairness to the cotton producers, such reimbursement should be made, and it is accordingly recommended that the bill do pass.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, inasmuch as the bill to which I have referred has not passed the House, I submit an amendment for the consideration of the Senate, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following:

To the Secretary of Agriculture to reimburse holders of participation trust certificates of the cotton-producers pool, Form C–5–1, at the rate of $2.40 per bale to holders of record as of May 1, 1937, the sum of $4,320,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That payment shall be made under rules and regulations to be promulgated in harmony with the provisions of S. 2930 passed by the Senate on June 22, 1940.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate approve this amendment, and that the item go to conference. Then, if the House will not agree to it, it will have to go out of the bill, as all other amendments similarly treated do.

Just a word in justification of the amendment. In 1933 the Department of Agriculture proposed to the cotton farmers of the South that if they would plow up a part of their cotton land they could take a certain number of bales of cotton which were at that time in the hands of the Government at 6 cents a pound. They were given to understand definitely and positively that they would have all the cotton sold for above 6 cents a pound, with no carrying charges against them.

They accepted the proposal, they took almost 3,000,000 bales, and plowed up their cotton land on that understanding. Later they were charged $2.40 out of the surplus, which the cotton brought, over 6 cents a pound.

They have never been satisfied. The contract was broken. They have not been treated fairly. The Committee on Agriculture has passed upon the matter time and time again, and the Senate has acted favorably upon the report of the committee. All I am asking is that the committee take this matter to conference, and see what can be done about it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am sorry to have the Senator bring up this question. We have had problems somewhat similar in reference to the refunding of processing taxes. This comes up at a late hour; this is a deficiency bill; and, frankly, as one member of the committee, I do not feel qualified to pass on the question. The Senator, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, knows the problems we have to meet, and really, to do justice to ourselves and to the committee, we should have had an opportunity to consider this question in the committee. I hope the Senator will not insist on it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For the past 2 days the Senator from Oklahoma was not permitted, for reasons best known to himself, to attend the sessions of the committee. Otherwise, I would have been present at the meeting of the main committee, at least, and would have presented the matter to the committee. All I am asking is that those in the South who would be affected be given fair treatment. It affects some 11 or 12 of the States of the South. I hope the item may go to conference, to the end that it may be considered in conference, and if the House will not agree, the Senator from Oklahoma will have no other recourse than to accept the report as it comes back from the committee of conference.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I do not like to take an amendment to conference in a kind of half-hearted way when the Senate is not really passing on it. I should like to go to the conference with problems which represent the considered judgment of the Senate and the committee. I am unhappy to have to take with me an amendment of this kind. I know the Senator's time has been taken up on other matters, but this is not an emergency matter. It has not arisen within the last day or two. I wish the Senator would release us from the request he has made.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not an emergency matter——

Mr. ADAMS. I will say that this is the first item which has come up which has not had tied to it the claim that it is connected with national defense.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amendment would be of great help to the farmers. I should like to have it put to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. (Putting the question.) The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at this time I desire to present another amendment. Before it is stated, let me submit for the RECORD a copy of the bill for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees, as it passed the Senate. It is a bill relating to the eastern band of Cherokee Indians. It passed the Senate on the 30th of September (legislative day, September 18), 1940. It provided that the sum of $1,997.85 be paid back to the Eastern Cherokees. I submit the text of the bill as it passed the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An act (S. 4232) for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,997.85, with interest at 5 percent per annum from March 15, 1910, the same being the amount of the unpaid interest-bearing principal found due the Eastern Cherokees by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101); and when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Eastern Cherokees and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to their attorney of record. The warrants representing this unpaid balance are hereby canceled upon the approval of this act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now submit an amendment based on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 28, after line 17, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, insert the following:

Eastern Cherokees: For the relief of the Eastern Cherokees, as authorized by the bill (S. 4232) entitled "For the relief of the Eastern Cherokees," Seventy-sixth Congress, fiscal year 1941, $1,997.84, without interest and to be in full settlement of all claims of such tribe of Indians against the Government as found to be due by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1906 (202 U. S. 101).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill which passed the Senate provided for the repayment of this sum with interest. Interest would be calculated over many years. The amendment offered by me now eliminates interest and provides that the sum mentioned shall be in full settlement, so that if this item should be approved it would settle the claim without any question of interest. I understand the proponents of the proposed legislation are willing, if they can get the money now, to settle without interest, when later on they may perhaps insist upon it.

Mr. ADAMS. As an individual member of the committee, I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 10539) was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8621) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts, and that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 to the bill with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BURKE, and Mr. DANAHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSING AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10412, the so-called housing bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provisions of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendments were all disposed of on a prior occasion, were they not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 1, line 7, and extending to page 2, was agreed to, and when that is done I shall offer an amendment to strike out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment on pages 1 and 2 was agreed to?

Mr. DANAHER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if it is his plan to dispose of this bill tonight?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is for the Senate to determine. I should like to have it passed today, but of course I cannot force its passage.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, there have been many Senators who previously spoke in opposition to this bill and who, for one reason or another, due to public business, are not present tonight. I am perfectly willing that it be made the pending business and that we take it up in the regular course tomorrow, but I feel that we ought not to proceed to an amendment to that measure tonight.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no disposition to force the Senate to remain here, but I will say to the Senator that if he will consult the bill he will have no objection to the amendment I shall offer.

Mr. DANAHER. I have already tried to intimate that I have no objection to the bill as such. I should like not to have the bill disposed of tonight, however.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is very desirable to dispose of the bill tonight. I realize that one day may not make much difference, but such departments as the War Department and the Navy Department depend upon this authorization. The War Department especially relies upon its passage. They have to provide additional facilities for civilian housing in communities where munitions are being made. For instance, at Charlestown, Ind., where the Du Pont Co. is under contract to build what was supposed to be a $25,000,000 plant, which has been increased to $41,000,000, it is absolutely necessary to have the housing facilities begun at once. The same is true in Radford, Va. They are simply waiting for the passage of this bill to begin those housing facilities. We debated the bill for about an hour last Monday, and I understood there was only one amendment to be offered, and that by the Senator from Kansas, and that we could dispose of that readily and get the bill out of the way. I do not care to be unreasonable about the matter, but it is desirable that the bill be passed at the very earliest moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I my say to the Senator from Connecticut that when the bill was debated I do not know that any Senator present opposed it. Senators offered some amendments, and we debated them, and discussed them, and voted on them, but no Senator, as I recall, said that he was against the bill. The Senator from Kansas objected for the time being to the consideration in that manner of the measure, but even the Senator from Kansas did not say—he is here, and if I am in error he can correct me—he did not say that he was against the bill in principle. We discussed the bill for an hour, and every Senator had an opportunity to offer amendments to it. The amendments which were offered were debated and voted on, and we were on the point of passing the bill when objection was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have this bill, and also the river and harbor bill, which is a defense matter, and we have a sugar bill, and we hope to dispose of all of them tomorrow so we may avoid a session Saturday. If it would be any accommodation to Senators I thought we could stay a half hour longer today and not have a session on Saturday. I am not offering that as an inducement, but I am confiding to Senators what my hopes are.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The other day when this measure came up it will be recalled that it was under the unanimous-consent rule under which we were proceeding through the calendar. The Senator from Kansas at that time objected because he felt, as I remember, that he did not want the bill disposed of in that fashion at that time. I know there were other Senators who spoke on the measure. There was an amendment contemplated by one of the Senators, I am sure, who is not present tonight, by the way, and while it is true he was for the bill, just as I am for the bill, there were some Senators who hoped perhaps that the measure could be more thoroughly canvassed.

It simply does not seem to me to be entirely feasible and entirely reasonable that we proceed to a vote on the bill tonight. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that surely all the progress that is to be made with reference to housing in different places will not depend solely and simply on disposing of the bill tonight at half past 5.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Connecticut that he evidently refers to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Ohio was present. He offered his amendment, which was debated and then rejected. It could not be considered again except on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator will recall that there was some discussion after some Senator objected on the ground that a joint committee to investigate would not be feasible, but that a committee of the Senate alone might prove feasible.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Kansas will offer that amendment in the name of the Senator from Ohio, who brought the matter up. While we are not in favor of the amendment, we are perfectly willing that it shall be offered.

Mr. DANAHER. That observation is news to me. In the light of that explanation, I withdraw any obstructionist tactics which might otherwise have been chargeable against me.

Let me conclude briefly by saying to the Senator from Kentucky that the business of putting all the emergency measures on the basis of haste and necessity all at once is not convincing. I have in mind no less an instance than that of the conscription bill, which the Senator will recall was introduced in June and was debated for weeks and weeks; yet even now we have not a permanent head for the draft selection board. All those weeks intervened within which plans might have been made and an appropriate choice might have been made, and the right man might have been selected, in order that the proceedings might go forward apace. The same thing is true of the National Defense Commission. I do not say that I do not believe the Senator from Kentucky, but I do not give that argument the weight I might otherwise give to it had I not those instances before me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the Senator will agree that there are certain inherent delays incident to senatorial consideration of bills, and that the sooner we pass them the sooner the executive department may proceed to act, not only with respect to conscription, but with respect to housing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation of the attitude of the Senator from Connecticut in not objecting. I believe we have unanimous consent to reconsider the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me explain the amendment to the able Senator. The House language reads:

> In order to provide housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and their families, in those areas or localities in which the President shall find that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activities—and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed (but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administrator of the proposed construction, stating the number of units proposed and the areas in which they are to be located, and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator).

The Senate committee added the following language:

Personally I have no objection to all that language, but the Council of National Defense objects to the requirement that it wait until the Federal Housing Administrator reports. The Federal Housing Administrator might delay. I propose to strike out the words "and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator." In other words, he will be advised as to where the locations are to be, and then it will be up to him. If he wishes to intervene and make representations, all right; but I do not want to tie the hands of the President by requiring that the proceedings shall await a report from the Federal Housing Administrator.

Mr. WAGNER rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am referring to the Federal Housing Administrator and not to the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. WAGNER. I have more interest in the F. H. A. than perhaps the Senator realizes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not mean to be unkind. I wish publicly to apologize.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator need not apologize. I am not in the least disturbed by any of his observations. I enjoy them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I was referring to the Federal Housing Administrator. About that time I observed the Senator from New York rise in his usually courteous, urbane, and dignified manner; and, knowing his deep interest in the United States Housing Authority, I then particularized and said that I was not referring to the United States Housing Authority but to the Federal Housing Administrator, so as to relieve the Senator of any apprehension that I was making an assault on the U. S. H. A.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator does me a great injustice. I was one of the first to participate in the drafting of the F. H. A. bill. I fathered it. I was chairman of the committee which considered it. So I also have an interest in the F. H. A.

The reason I rise is because I wish to express my agreement with the Senator. I did not wish to suggest an amendment, because I did not desire to obstruct the bill for a moment. I think it is very essential. I thought the amendment would delay matters, because it is very difficult for a department to certify that private industry cannot construct housing. I think the suggestion which the Senator makes is very wise.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very much. The amendment in question is an amendment of the Senate committee. It is not an amendment of the Senator from Texas. It was inserted on the representations of the Federal Housing Administrator that Congress had appropriated $300,000 and had directed him to make surveys all over the United States as to housing, and that he had made the surveys and had made the material available. He wanted a provision in the bill to require that before the housing is built he should be called upon to make his report, giving the information.

I think it is unjust to try to tie the hands of the administration by requiring it to wait until the Federal Housing Administrator makes his report. I am perfectly willing to call upon him and let him know that certain housing is contemplated; and if he has any information he certainly will offer it to the President.

I move that the words "and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator" be stricken from the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas that the committee amendment on page 1, line 7, be reconsidered?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought unanimous consent had already been granted to reconsider the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It had not been granted.

Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment on page 1, line 7, was agreed to, is reconsidered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the words "and a report received thereon from the Federal Housing Administrator," on page 2, line 1, be stricken from the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the amendment does not relate to the organization with which Mr. Straus is identified?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. KING. With respect to Mr. McDonald, his activities have been so universally fair and just that, although I do not think the bill ought to be passed at this time, I shall not object to any requirement that he certify as to the advantages of a proposed housing project. However, I do not understand that either he or his organization is in a position to undertake work of this character.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Therefore I do not think such a provision in the bill is important.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. Mr. Carmody, who will administer the law, should have the benefit of whatever information Mr. McDonald may have as to the ability of private capital in a given locality to construct housing. The bill provides that where private capital can do it, the Government shall not spend any money.

Mr. KING. I think that is a wise provision. I do not wish to obstruct the passage of the bill, but I wonder if the Senator from Texas will agree to let the measure go over until tomorrow, to give us an opportunity to examine it. I shall have no objection to the bill being taken up the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a highly important measure. I am sure that if the Senator knew how many people I have on my back about this bill every day he would not insist.

Mr. KING. Would 1 day make any difference?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the committee amendment on page 1, line 7.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when this bill came up on Monday it was during the consideration of bills on the calendar by unanimous consent. I then made an objection to its consideration because I thought it was too important a piece of legislation, involving too much of an authorization for appropriations, to be disposed of in that manner. I expressed no opposition to the bill itself.

Last Monday the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], who is present, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is not present, discussed at considerable length certain phases of the bill—not according to the calendar of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] but perhaps for 15 or 20 minutes. At that time the Senator from Ohio offered an amendment to the bill which provided for a joint commission of the Senate and the House of Representatives to consider the whole housing program. The Senator from Ohio called attention to the fact that he was a member of three different committees, all of which were legislating upon some phase of the housing matter, which is being administered by at least three agencies at the present time, and now we are creating a fourth agency, if I correctly remember the argument of the Senator from Ohio.

Before the Senator from Ohio left the city he discussed the matter with me, and asked me to discuss it with the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the majority leader, which I have done. I have revised the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio in accordance with his suggestion, so as to provide only for a committee of the Senate and not for a joint committee of the Senate and the House.

I send to the desk the amendment which is printed in the name of the Senator from Ohio, and which I offer in his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] in behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A committee of the Senate is hereby established to consist of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate. It shall be the duty of such committee to make a comprehensive study of the activities of the Federal Government in the field of housing, particularly as administered by the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Works Agency, and other agencies of a temporary or emergency nature. Such committee shall particularly consider—

(1) The need for housing in connection with the national-defense program;

(2) The formation of a long-range plan for stimulating slum-clearance and the construction of new housing for the lower- and middle-income groups with a minimum of Government subsidy;

(3) The coordination of all Government housing activity and the consolidation or elimination of agencies where such consolidation or elimination will promote greater economy and efficiency in administration; and

(4) The stimulation of private investment and private industry in the housing field.

Such committee shall report its findings to the Congress not later than March 30, 1941, and shall recommend such legislation as it may deem necessary to carry out the objectives set forth in this section.

For the purposes of this section, such committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth Congress; to employ such clerical and other assistants; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman. The appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of this section is hereby authorized.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate. I have talked to the majority leader on this subject. I think the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is a good one, that it would clear the atmosphere, and would have a tendency to bring some cohesion and better order out of the general housing program, which is now divided between three agencies, to which we are adding a fourth agency. I am authorized by the Senator from Ohio to state that he is a supporter of the bill, and that he hopes the majority leader and our friends upon the other side will accept his amendment.

That is all I have to say in regard to the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I very much hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment. A similar amendment was voted down the other day. This is rather an anomalous amendment. It provides by statute for the establishment of a Senate committee. The Senate, if it desires to do so, may select such a committee by a simple resolution. It is a very unusual parliamentary procedure to insert in a bill a provision as to the creation of a Senate committee.

I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment. I have no disposition to oppose the selection of a committee by the Senate when it is proposed in the regular way, by resolution authorizing the Banking and Currency Committee to make this study, or otherwise. The amendment now offered has no place on this bill, and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that the complaint of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] on last Monday was that we have three committees of the Senate considering different phases of housing. This amendment would set up a fourth, and would set it up, as the Senator from Texas says, by statute.

The Committee on Banking and Currency has handled the home owners' loan legislation, which is a Federal housing project, and the Federal Housing Administration legislation, which is a Federal housing project. We have always had a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but its jurisdiction has been limited to the construction of public buildings like post offices, customhouses, and so forth. When the United States Housing Administration legislation was under consideration it went to the Committee on Education and Labor, because it had involved in it the question of labor. I think it might as well have gone to the Banking and Currency Committee, which had been handling all housing legislation; but I see no need for setting up now a fourth committee to do the same work that any one or all of these other committees can do and are doing in the way of investigation and making surveys; and even when they made their recommendation, if their recommendation should be presented in the form of a bill, it would have to go to one of the standing committees. So it seems to me there is no need for this proposed committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Kansas that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] talked with me about the matter possibly 2 weeks ago. I greatly regretted that I did not have an opportunity to discuss it again with him, because I think possibly we could have reached an agreement about it.

As a matter of fact, as the result of the reorganization we did have at that time the thought of doing what the Senator from Ohio had in mind; and, as a result, we put into the Federal Works Agency the Housing Administration, the Bureau of Public Roads, and other building agencies. That is what the Senator from Ohio wanted to do. He wanted to coordinate the activities of the various building organizations. I share that view with him in great measure.

Since that time I learned that the Defense Commission had a representative who appeared before the Appropriations Committee presenting the question as to housing—the very question which is involved in the bill now pending before the Senate.

I learned that this gentleman had been doing a very splendid service in coordinating the building activities of the Army and the Navy. One reason why it is not all in one agency is that the Congress itself, the Committee on Appropriations directing it, has provided that construction shall not be handled by the Housing Administration, but by the Navy and the Army. Congress, for reasons satisfactory to itself, preferred that that be done. So that really some of the objection raised by the Senator from Ohio is due to our own action.

I must say that it was the attitude of the House more than of the Senate. They did not want the Housing Administration to handle this construction, and they provided that the Army and the Navy should do it. So that there is construction by the Army and by the Navy, and it is because we directed it.

The Federal Housing Administration is a lending agency, not a construction agency, and really upon investigation I think one must reach the conclusion that it has no part in the building activity.

As the Senator from Kentucky has said, I think the resolution of investigation should be considered upon its merits, and apart from the pending bill. I have no feeling about the matter at all. I must say that Congress is responsible for the division of authority at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that because of the fact that a good many houses are to be built by the Government in Florida in aid of the national-defense program, it has been my privilege and duty to be in some contact with the Federal agencies which are interested in this program. I have happily found the finest sort of coordination and cooperation among the agencies, the Procurement Division, the Public Buildings Administration, the National Defense Council, the Army and the Navy, the Federal Housing Administration, and some of the lending agencies affected under the R. F. C., all of which is being splendidly coordinated by Mr. Palmer. He has been functioning very efficiently, to my personal knowledge, as the coordinator of all these activities, and I am sure it will be found they are being operated efficiently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4088. An act to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts;

H. R. 8846. An act to provide for the retirement of certain members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, the United States Park Police force, the White House Police force, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 9581. An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, as amended; and

H. R. 10339. An act to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS IN THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9972, Calendar No. 2182, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER PUBLIC CONTRACTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 10464, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
October 3, 1940.

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts; and

That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 to said bill with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of any claim arising under such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, and if it is so provided in such contract, such payments shall not be subject to reduction or set-off for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of such contract."

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OF THE ARLINGTON FARM, VIRGINIA

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdiction of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MINTON, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report on House bill 960, submitted by me yesterday, which is now on the table.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective House as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 8, 11, 12, 24, 30, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 31; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or to any position to which appointments are made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or to positions of assistant United States district attorney"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "And provided further, That the Civil Service Commission may require the submission of fingerprints of applicants for competitive or noncompetitive examinations ordered or conducted by the Commission, but may not require the submission of a photograph of any applicant"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(b) That from and after the effective date of this Act any person who shall have served for four years as a secretary, clerk or assistant clerk to a Senator, Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner, or as a clerk or assistant clerk to a standing committee of the Senate or House of Representatives or as a clerical employee of the Senate or House of Representatives and whose separation from the service is involuntary and without prejudice shall acquire, upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examination as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe, a classified civil service status for transfer to a position in the classified civil service notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the civil service laws or regulations: Provided, That any individual who may hold such a position in the legislative branch must obtain such transfer within one year from the date of separation, and nothing in this Act shall be construed to impair any right of retransfer provided for under civil service laws or regulations made thereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be pleased to harken, O Lord, unto our supplication; in the love and mercy of Thy holy nature incline Thine ear unto us. We would praise and thank Thee for all Thy goodness and wonderful works to the children of men; Thou hast kept us and not we ourselves. Vouchsafe Thy continued blessing unto us and keep us this day without sin. We beseech Thee that Thy spirit may abide in all our hearts and enable us to glorify Thee in all that we do or say. Being conscious that it is very possible for us to live the fuller life with the Master, let Thy hand still lead us on from the world's fascinations to the everlasting harmonies and the spiritual joys and rest of the soul. Heavenly Father, by the darkened homes we may bless, by the ignorant we may teach, by the poor and starving we may feed and clothe, by all the good we may do, may we present ourselves a living sacrifice at the altar of our Lord. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 10122. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869); and

H. R. 10464. An act to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) entitled "An act to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3920. An act to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes; and

S. 3990. An act to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court, Government counsel, and stenographic clerks as set forth therein for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business, and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes.

CUSTODIAL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 892) to extend to custodial-service employees employed by the Post Office Department certain benefits applicable to postal employees, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 9, after "reached", insert "Provided, That no individual employee shall receive an increase in excess of $60 per year."
Line 14, strike out "1939" and insert "1941."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill has the approval of the entire Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. ROMJUE. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is here, a member of the committee. Has the gentleman anything to say about the bill?

Mr. MASON. Only this, that it was reported by our committee unanimously and passed the House. The Senate amended it in just two particulars. One was to cut the maximum increase from $100 to $60, and the other was to change the date from 1939 to 1941. That is all. We approved these changes.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Missouri believe the Senate did a good thing when they cut the amount from $100 to $60? I can recall that in the last 7 years, while Mr. James Farley was Postmaster General, we were asked to increase the postage rate from 2 cents to 3 cents so that we could get funds to carry on the New Deal. However, the expense has become so great that the Post Office Department started to run in the red, and has run in the red every year. Instead of getting $100,000,000 to carry on and help defray the expenses of other parts of the Government due to legislation that was passed because it was recommended by the various committees, you used up that $100,000,000. The people of this country will never get rid of the 3-cent postage rate. You will always have to pay it, and you are not going to have anything to help pay the national debt.

Mr. ROMJUE. I may say to the gentleman that while I appreciate his speech nevertheless this $100 provision has been in existing law for some time; now, in this bill as amended it provides $60 automatic.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman appreciates my speech on that, he ought to hear me when I talk about the Federal statement and the way you are going in the red. You ought to digest that. It would do all of you a lot of good.

Mr. ROMJUE. I should be very glad to hear the gentleman. I always appreciate what he says although I do not always agree with him.

Mr. RICH. You over there do not agree with me, and that is the reason we are going in the red so fast. If you would agree with me we would get out of the red, I promise that.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am so glad the gentleman is so well read.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill gives to the custodial employees of the Post Office Department an automatic increase in wages each year regardless of the situation that may exist in their communities, whether it is a very small office they have to look after and a very small job, or whether it is a great big job. It does not seem to me the bill is right. Increases have been provided for these employees which have been allocated by the Post Office Department to those who have the big burdens to bear. Under the circumstances I am sorry, but I feel obliged to object.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL WITHIN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9851) authorizing special arrangements in the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 3, after "contract" insert "That the Postmaster General in his discretion, may fix the postage for the mails carried, or any part thereof, by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, at rates not exceeding in any case 30 cents per ounce or 15 cents per half ounce, notwithstanding any other provision of law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. MASON. This bill was reported by our committee unanimously and passed the House. It was amended by the Senate in just one particular. This amendment is to correct an inadvertence. When we changed the Civil Aeronautics Act in June 1938 we struck from that act certain words which gave the Postmaster General authority to set the rates for air mail in Alaska. This bill pertains to Alaska only. The Senate inserted these words in our bill:

That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may fix the postage for the mails carried, or any part thereof, by aircraft to, from, or within Alaska, at rates not exceeding in any case 30 cents per ounce or 15 cents per half ounce, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

That was a part of the law, and that was the prerogative of the Postmaster General up until 2 years ago. Now this provision has been reinserted in the bill. The Post Office Department has no objection to this provision, and our committee approves it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the oath of office may be administered to Mrs. FLORENCE REVILLE GIBBS, a Member-elect from the Eighth Congressional District of Georgia, notwithstanding the fact that the certificate of election has not been received in the Clerk's office. Mrs. GIBBS was elected at a special election on the 1st day of October, without opposition, to succeed her late husband, Congressman W. Ben Gibbs. I ask that she be permitted to take the oath of office now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. GIBBS appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a sermon delivered by the Reverend Maurice S. Sheehy, of the Catholic University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION LAWS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3778) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain in detail just what the bill is?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes;. I shall be glad to explain the bill.

In 1930 a law was passed with reference to the limitation of costs for the facilities of customs and immigration buildings along the Canadian and Mexican borders. This limitation was $3,000 on those buildings that were operated by one of the units, and $6,000 on those buildings operated by the two units jointly. They have operated under this law since 1930. It is contemplated that within the next 5 years about six of these buildings are to be erected. They are in isolated regions along these borders and this limitation of cost includes not only the building itself, but the purchase of the land, the lighting and sewerage facilities and usually the drilling of a well for water, as well as all of the conveniences and utilities necessary to be provided in these isolated spots.

By reason of the cost of materials and the cost of labor and the fact that these structures are in isolated places, it is impossible for these buildings and facilities to be provided now for this price. This bill provides that the limits of cost shall be extended to $5,000 for one unit with all necessary conveniences and utilities, and $10,000 where two units use the building jointly.

I may say in this regard that, recently, there was necessity to build one of these stations for the Customs Bureau along the Mexican border. Invitations for bids were submitted to 26 different contractors. Only 2 replied with bids and each put in an estimate of over $5,000 for a single unit, whereas the present limitation is $3,000 for a single unit.

Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me state also, before responding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that no further appropriation is required in view of the fact that we are advised by the Treasury Department that the funds are available for this additional cost in the construction of these buildings, about six of which are contemplated in the next 5 years along the Canadian and Mexican borders for immigration and customs purposes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I think the gentleman figured I was going to ask the question, "Where are you going to get the money?" but I believe here is an opportunity where the American people and the American Congress ought to be doing everything they can to keep people from foreign countries coming into our land without proper credentials and without authority to come in, because when this war is over in Europe, if it ever is over, they are going to try to flock into this country and we ought to be very vigilant right now and should try to see that such laws are enacted that people cannot get into this country unless we are willing to permit them to come in. If we ever do let the bars down, we will regret it and rue our action the rest of our days.

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the gentleman, and I am pleased to say that the money is available without further appropriations of any character and that these structures cannot possibly be built under the limitation of cost that was set 10 years ago.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Is the limitation taken off entirely?

Mr. LANHAM. No; it is extended from $3,000 and $6,000, respectively, to $5,000 and $10,000, the higher amounts being where the two units of the Immigration Bureau and the Customs Bureau use the same building; and I may say that each building houses the officers and their families and includes their office space and in addition provides necessary conveniences in these isolated regions, and by reason of the increases in cost and the fact that these stations are far from settled centers, it is impossible, by the testimony before us, for them to be constructed under the present limitations of cost, and we have a very striking example of that in the effort of the Treasury Department to construct one recently along the Mexican border.

Mr. THOMASON. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that in my district, at a town called Fabens, Tex., on the Mexican border, a building has been authorized for the joint use of customs, immigration and public health, and an allocation of $25,000 has been made for that joint building. Will this bill place any limitation upon that structure? There has been inexcusable delay in the construction of this building. The Government already owns the land and the money is available. The building is badly needed and I want to see work begin.

Mr. LANHAM. No; because this has reference simply to the Immigration Service and the Customs Bureau, where they operate jointly or where they operate separately.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Are we getting the cooperation of Canada and Mexico in trying to prohibit people from going from one country to another?

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, someone more familiar with the activities of the State Department could answer that question better, but I assume that we are.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. McGREGOR. Is it not true that these proposed limitations of $5,000 and $10,000 for single and double units include the utilities as well as the land involved?

Mr. LANHAM. They include all utilities, land, sewerage, water facilities, and light facilities. Everything is included within these limitations. These buildings, just a few of which are in contemplation, cannot possibly be constructed under the limitation of cost that was set 10 years ago.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a general policy, I think the gentleman agrees with me that bills of this type should not be brought up and passed by unanimous consent. However, I understand in this bill the element of emergency is present. There is a necessity for immediate action. I think oftentimes the Congress yields too much to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. We have such explicit faith and confidence in him, that we believe he will not bring in a bill that should not be here. His views respecting this bill are concurred in by the minority members of the committee. I therefore withdraw the reservation to object.

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the distinguished gentleman. May I say to the gentleman that, of course, I have no personal interest in this, except simply as an American citizen. We are drawing near the time when we may be in recess, and the fact that at least one of these buildings is now necessary and cannot be constructed under the limitation of cost makes it important to have this legislation.

Furthermore, I will say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives has reported unanimously the same bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 68), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That to aid in the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws along the Canadian and Mexican borders and to provide better facilities for such enforcement at points along such borders at which no Federal or other buildings adapted or suitably located for the purpose are available, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General are hereby authorized to expend, from the funds appropriated for the general maintenance and operation of the Customs and the Immigration and Naturalization Services, respectively, the necessary amounts for the acquisition of land and the erection of buildings, sheds, and office quarters, including living quarters for officers where none are otherwise available: Provided, That the total amount which may be so expended for any one project, for the use of one department, including the cost of the site, shall not exceed $5,000, and that where quarters are so erected or facilities so provided for the joint use of the Customs and the Immigration and Naturalization Services the combined cost charged to the two appropriations concerned shall not exceed $10,000 for any one project, including the site.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend, from the funds appropriated for the general maintenance and operation of the Customs Service, such amounts as may be necessary for the erection of protective gates across international highways and roads crossing the Canadian and Mexican borders and for the erection of such fences in the immediate vicinity of such highways and roads as may be necessary to prevent unlawful entry or smuggling."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar House bill, H. R. 9086, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AMENDING AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill where there is a reallocation of funds beneficial to the tobacco growers?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No, sir; that was stricken out. It does not go into operation until next year. I took the matter up with the gentleman from Michigan yesterday and he asked me to see the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN]. I talked to the gentleman from Minnesota and also to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]. I had talked to all of the members of the committee prior to that time and they agreed to a favorable report of the bill.

The tobacco growers are unanimous in their request for this piece of legislation. They think it is necessary at this session.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it, no hearings have been held on this proposal by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is true, except that it was referred to the Department and a favorable report was made. I discussed the bill with each member that I could find. I did not see the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] until yesterday. They all agreed to a favorable report. The committee had not been called together, due to the fact that the chairman was away.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What does the bill actually do?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. With reference to certain types of tobacco, it makes a different classification for the purpose of a referendum. It was found that they had been incorrectly classified. Some of the tobacco growers in one area did not want to be hooked up in a referendum with the tobacco growers in another area, of a type that was a distinct type, although somewhat similar.

The other amendment only changes the base period from 1934 to 1939, due to the fact that in tobacco we have found that the cost of production has greatly increased in the burley and flue-cured types. The increase in the production cost has been brought about largely by the increase in the tobacco now used for cigarettes. About 80 percent of the flue-cured type is now used for cigarettes and about 60 percent of the burley. That is, that part of the crop domestically consumed. Just a few years ago it was about half that much. Now to produce a leaf of tobacco for cigarette purposes requires closer spacing in order to grow a lighter leaf. It takes a great deal more labor and it is more costly. We are trying to bring the price relationships more into line.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is my understanding that the change in this base period will transfer $2,500,000 benefit payments from wheat, cotton, and rice over to tobacco.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Not this year; no, sir. It would not do it next year if we maintain our price level. In spite of the fact that tobacco contributes each year over a half billion dollars to the Federal Treasury it has never received 1 cent in parity payments to this good day.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman does not want to maintain here that it is the tobacco grower who contributes that tax to the Federal Treasury?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Well, it is reflected in our price, more or less.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think with two and a half million dollars involved in this proposal and taking it away from other basic commodities, it looks to me as though this measure is of sufficient importance to have had hearings on it before the committee.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not affect parity payments at all this year. The psychological effect of this piece of legislation, however, it is believed, will go a long way towards maintaining a decent and fair price for the present crop. Moreover, it will be of great value in the event we have to apply for loans.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It affects crops next year and gives them $2,500,000 more.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is if our tobacco prices tumble.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I told the gentleman I would not object, but I think it is poor practice to bring up important legislation of this character by unanimous consent without hearings in the committee. The membership should know what is going on.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill has not even been on the Consent Calendar. Is that right?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The bill was introduced sometime ago. Due to the fact the chairman of the committee has been away the committee has not been in session. I did poll the committee, and every member I talked to was in favor of making a favorable report. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER], representing the minority tobacco interests on the committee and especially the Pennsylvania tobacco growers, is in favor of the bill. Senator BARKLEY introduced a similar bill in the Senate, which the Senate passed and is now on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. CHURCH. The bill has not been before the House committee for consideration.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Not formally. It was introduced, referred to the Department of Agriculture for a report, and a favorable report was made. Discussion has been going on between the members of the committee for the past 3 weeks. And I may add that every Representative of a tobacco district in the House is in favor of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CHURCH. The bill has not been before the House committee for consideration, it has not been on the Consent Calendar. The Consent Calendar will soon be in order again. It is not in the interest of orderly procedure to have the bill brought up this way.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I understand it is not according to the regular procedure.

Mr. CHURCH. The official objectors devote a great deal of time to the bills on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. As a matter of fact, the bill has been given more consideration than most bills that come before the committee, due to the fact that we polled the members and discussion has been going on for several weeks.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, surely the gentleman does not mean that this bill has been given more careful consideration than most bills that come before the committee.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. What I mean is we have had a lot of discussion between the members, a thorough discussion. I do not know of a single committee member opposed to the bill. The bill was thoroughly considered by the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill carries an amendment put on in the Senate which permits the tobacco to be treated as of different classes. To take care of that situation, which is not involved in the bill under discussion, will not the gentleman permit the bill to go through properly amended?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have stated, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Agriculture, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 225 relating to the conditions for payment with respect to sugarcane harvested from certain plantings in the mainland cane-sugar area.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, at the present time I shall be compelled to object, but I am seeking certain definite assurances from the Department which I hope to have in a very short time. A little later in the day I may be in position to withdraw my objection, but for the present I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for the moment?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman that it is definitely understood that the Department will submit the letter in question. I hope the gentleman will not object at this time, because I will guarantee to the gentleman that the letter will come in and be placed in the RECORD giving their statement as to the purpose and intent of the bill, which I understand is satisfactory to the gentleman. With this assurance, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a great many bills are being called up under unanimous consent. Unless the House knows what they are, they cannot take proper action. The way for them to do this is to have the bills explained.

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the purpose of the bill has been carefully considered by the committee and the committee authorized me to ask that the bill be taken up for consideration. May I state that a number of Members who are interested in sugar legislation have been consulted, particularly the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], who is deeply interested in all sugar legislation, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON], who likewise is deeply interested. There is no objection on the part of any member of the committee, either minority or majority, to this bill, or on the part of Members who are deeply concerned in the matter.

I may state to the gentleman that the only purpose of the bill is to take care of a situation which arose in Louisiana when the quotas were temporarily withdrawn. Certain planters in the State of Louisiana—about 200—perhaps overplanted their acreage which would tend to overproduce their quotas, but because of bad weather and crop conditions in the State, even if they harvest the total acreage planted, they will not overrun the quota.

Mr. MICHENER. This is what is known as the Ellender bill?

Mr. FULMER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. I understand the gentleman from Colorado is deeply interested in the beet-sugar provisions of this bill.

Mr. FULMER. Yes; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] likewise is deeply interested in all sugar legislation. He is favorable to the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Is this a bill for which a rule was going to be asked?

Mr. FULMER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. If the matter is considered by unanimous consent it will save just that much time of the Rules Committee.

Mr. FULMER. That is true.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman refers to the people who are interested in sugar in Louisiana and Florida, and those interested in the beet-sugar industry, but who is looking after the general public to know whether we are getting the best results from legislation that is going to aid and assist the sugar industry of this country in competition with that of Cuba and other foreign countries? Are we going to look after the public so that we can create jobs in this country; and are we going to look after America first; then, if there is anything left over, look after the people outside of this country?

Mr. FULMER. The Committee on Agriculture has been the one committee of the House that has always been deeply interested in the people and we are looking after the interests of the consumer.

Mr. RICH. If the Committee on Agriculture is doing a good job for America, we will not have to go down into the Treasury to pay somebody and we ought to let the Committee on Agriculture go further. What we want to do is create jobs in the Agricultural Department, we want to increase production in this country, we want to give these farmers an opportunity to work, we want to make this a land of plenty, not a land of scarcity.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is more sugar produced in this country under this program than before.

Mr. RICH. Are you going to do that with everything? Let us make this a land of plenty.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not running everything. We are doing it in this respect.

Mr. RICH. Why do you not do it in other respects?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I cannot answer all the questions at one time. This is the only thing that is up at this time.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] spoke about scarcity. May I say to the gentleman that in connection with practically every farm product we have not a scarcity. We have stored away in the interest of the people of the United States, and for export, millions of bales of cotton, millions of bushels of corn and wheat, and hogs are in pretty good shape.

Mr. RICH. We are going to need them before this war in Europe is over. If you would have stopped the reciprocal trade agreements during the last 3 or 4 years, our farmers would have sold their produce, then we would have been in shape to take care of the farmers. Now you find yourself in a predicament and you want to get out of it the best way you can.

Mr. FULMER. May I say to the gentleman that the trade treaties have not anything to do with what we are now considering.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I expect a letter almost any time and after it has arrived I will have a conference with the Florida delegation. I do not want to be put in the position of objecting. I should prefer not to object to the gentleman's request. If the gentleman would defer the request until about 10 minutes after 1, I will try to get my delegation together.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request at this time at the request of the gentleman from Florida.

REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10094) to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, Mr. CREAL, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. HANCOCK.

AMENDMENTS OF SECTIONS 3477 AND 3737 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contract.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000."

Page 2, line 4, strike out "this act" and insert "the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940."

Page 2, line 8, strike out "this act" and insert "the Assignment of Claims Act of 1940"

"Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, and if so provided such payments shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of the contract designated in the assignment."

Page 3, after line 5, insert:

"SEC. 2. This act may be cited as the 'Assignment of Claims Act of 1940.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill in which a slight change was made in the Senate, which changes were considered by the Judiciary Committee this morning and unanimously agreed to?

Mr. HOBBS. The distinguished gentleman is correct, essentially. Our committee unanimously authorized the action now being taken to correct an error of terminology in one of six Senate amendments.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what the changes are? We are very much interested in this bill, because it has to do with several million dollars of excess reserves. I wish the gentleman would explain the changes.

Mr. HOBBS. We believe through inadvertence the Senate in drafting its amendments used the word "contract" when it should have used the words "any claim arising under such contract." In other words, this bill is for the assignment of claims against the Government arising out of national-defense contracts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me understand this matter. As I understand the amendment, as explained by the gentleman, a contract cannot be assigned as a pledge for a loan?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That defeats the purposes of the bill, as I understood it.

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The purpose of this bill, and the purpose of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL], was to make it possible to pledge defense contracts with banks for loans in order that we may get some of this private capital working. It seems to me if you confine this to claims growing out of contracts you defeat the very purposes of the bill and you change it completely from that which we all understood it was heretofore.

Mr. HOBBS. I may say to the distinguished gentleman that he is mistaken, that the bill as passed by the House dealt only with the assignment of claims arising out of Government national-defense contracts and similar contracts. There has never been any legislation which permitted the assignment of a contract itself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, am I all wrong here in assuming that when we passed this bill the other day we were going to make it possible to pledge these contracts for loans? I wake up now and find that what you actually have done is something entirely different. That is not my understanding.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman recalls we had some discussion when this bill was pending before on this subject. May I say to the gentleman that this bill was drawn with a view of avoiding some difficulties that grew out of experience in the World War. During the World War we had what were known as contract brokers who came down here with a lot of contracts that were assigned, and a very unpleasant situation developed out of it. This bill, as has been explained by the gentleman from Alabama, has for its purpose the assignment of claims arising under the contracts as distinguished from the assignment of contract, the purpose of the bill being to make it possible for persons who have made contracts with the Government to pledge their claims against the Government to get more money with which to complete the contract. This broadens the field from which you can draw bids. That is the whole purpose of this bill. As the gentleman from Alabama has just explained, the only reason why it is necessary to have this concurrence with an amendment is to strengthen this bill from what inadvertently got into it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the gist of this whole proposition as I see it. Now you have created a situation where a contract cannot be assigned until a claim has arisen under that contract.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The contract may not be assigned at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This anticipates that there has been performance on the contract. What I thought we were doing was to authorize the assignment of these contracts to local banking institutions by which the industries having these contracts might get money from private institutions in anticipation of claims, if you want to put it that way, rather than having to come to the R. F. C. or other agencies of the Government to get the credit which should be flowing naturally and normally from the private lending agencies and the private banks of the Nation.

If that is not the purpose of this bill, I surely want to look it over a little further before I consent to its passage, because I do not believe we are accomplishing anything by allowing them to pledge claims when the purpose of this legislation is to thaw out this vast reservoir of unused capital in the banks. If we are not going to do that, I believe we should give further consideration to the measure and at least let us on this side understand what we are doing.

Mr. HOBBS. I believe the distinguished gentleman is confusing the bill with this amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe the gentleman is confusing me. I do not believe I am confused about the purpose of this bill. Unless the bill expressly provides that these Government contracts may be pledged with private banks or private institutions for the purpose of getting the cash and credit to put into this national-defense program, then the gentleman is defeating what I understood to be the purpose of this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. May I say to the gentleman that the bill does exactly what the distinguished gentleman desires and it never has done anything else.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then perhaps I do not understand the gentleman. He says that only the claim may be assigned.

Mr. HOBBS. That is true.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A claim does not exist until there has been performance or partial performance of the contract.

Mr. HOBBS. Then the claim may be assigned to a bank or trust company to accomplish exactly what the gentleman has had in mind all along. The bill does the job we all wish done, but in a slightly different way from what the gentleman mistakenly thought was provided.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is no claim until there has been at least some performance of the contract.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is mistaken, in my opinion. There is a claim for the full amount of the contract price, subject to the performance of his contractual obligations by the contractor.

This bill was passed by this House. It changed the law which theretofore absolutely prohibited any transfer of either contract or of claim thereunder. This bill opens the door of opportunity for small business concerns to bid on these Government contracts. It only permits that which is absolutely outlawed now, the hypothecation of claims under those contracts, so that money may be obtained to finance operations. It will put idle money to work and gives the little man a chance.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We were quite proud of the action taken by the House last week.

Mr. HOBBS. You should be. It is a good bill. The Senate amendment does not change the bill materially. What we now propose is merely a clerical correction of Senate amendment 5.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The press commented editorially upon the fact that here at least was one policy which would reverse a policy which has grown up in the last 7 years in this country of stultifying the endeavors of private enterprise to get private money into use on this defense program.

I do not want to be a party to letting this legislation go through now which will completely nullify the purpose as expressed on this floor and as expressed editorially in the press throughout the Nation. For that reason, I am going to object until we find out what this is about.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until the amendment which we propose is read?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to the amendment being read, but we should have some discussion and consideration of it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be read for information.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOBBS moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment to read as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in Senate amendment No. 5, insert the following:

"Any contract entered into by the War Department or the Navy Department may provide that payments to an assignee of the claim arising under such contract shall not be subject to reduction or set-off, and if it is so provided in such contract such payment shall not be subject to reduction or set-off for any indebtedness of the assignor to the United States arising independently of such contract."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I believe we should look this bill over a little bit before we pass it by unanimous consent, and I object to the request.

LAMBORN & CO.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 5937) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co., with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 12, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 2. In the proceedings upon such claim before the Court of Claims, the United States shall not avail itself of the defense that the Department of Justice of the United States acted without legal authority in making representations or requests or issuing directions or fixing restrictions with regard to the purchase, importation, or disposition of such sugar."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain just what are the changes made in the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. This reinstates the language that was in the bill as it passed the Committee on Claims but was stricken from the bill by an amendment offered in the House. The language originally in the bill has been reinstated by the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what the bill is about?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. This bill confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co. It passed the Senate and was then passed by the House, but was amended over in the Senate to conform to the language in the bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the nature of the claim?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It is a claim dating back to 1920 and I am not at the moment familiar with all the details, but I may say to the gentleman that it has been considered by a special subcommittee of the Committee on Claims and was agreed to by the committee and was passed by the House unanimously.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is not an Indian claim?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Virginia, Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, on the occasion of the dedication of the Big Levels Game Refuge, in the George Washington National Forest, on September 29, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

CONSERVATION IN THE ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as a member of the Committee on Reclamation and Irrigation, to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869), and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 9, strike out lines 21 to 24, inclusive, and lines 1 to 19 on page 10, and insert:

"(5) The Secretary shall establish the size of farm units of irrigable lands on each project in accordance with his findings of the area sufficient in size for the support of a family on the lands to be irrigated. No water may be delivered to or for more than the farm unit area of irrigable lands in the project owned by a single landowner: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply to the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate or otherwise. No water shall be delivered to or for any land, in a project area, transferred or disposed of subsequent to approval of the project by the President, and within 3 years from the time water becomes available, unless and until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his duly authorized representative that the land has been transferred or disposed of at a price not exceeding the appraised value as determined by the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives, and upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved the Secretary is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to create authority to interfere with the delivery of water under prior rights.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about this legislation. Does this create any new legislation so far as irrigation projects are concerned?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No; it is amendatory of existing legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say to the gentleman that it does not. This bill simply clarifies what is known as the Wheeler-Case law to make it more workable to conditions in the Western States and to coordinate the acts of Interior Department and Agriculture Department on contemplated projects. Also as we have gone along we have found that the bill needed minor amendments in different ways. Among these in some instances we found that it is difficult to secure 160 acres of irrigable land unless we take into consideration an entire section. This amendment is for that purpose, so that we may take out a piece of land here and a piece of land over there and finally make up the 160 acres of land as a unit of irrigable land out of an entire section. This feature was included in an amendment that the House wrote in and is now incorporated in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may explain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the objective of this bill is to coordinate the activities of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture in respect of these small reclamation projects. The bill does not add anything, but simply brings them into coordination and simplifies the procedure.

Mr. RICH. Does this legislation in any way provide for additional funds in order that we may take care of these water holes for these farmers?

Mr. WHITE. It does not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It does not add any additional funds or any new thing to the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This bill does not provide additional funds. It is not an appropriation bill. It is clarifying as between two existing laws to define the responsibility of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture and it will prevent competitive bidding between two different types of projects. It does not create authority for new kinds of projects that could not be undertaken under existing law, but it does clarify authority and responsibility.

Mr. RICH. It is about time, I may say, that the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department worked together, because if I understand things correctly, they have been at loggerheads for the last 4 or 5 years.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This bill goes further in that direction than anything now on the statute books.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the amendment have the full approval of the members of the committee on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I may say that the bill was passed out unanimously by the Committee on Reclamation and Irrigation and the amendments that have been written into the House bill were agreed to by the membership of the committee and all amendments have been approved by all Congressmen and Senators interested.

Mr. HINSHAW. By the minority members of the committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It has the support of all the members on the minority side of the committee as well.

Mr. HINSHAW. As I understood the reading of the amendment it gave the Secretary the power to set the maximum price of the land that is to be sold under a project. Is that correct?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If I may answer the gentleman, that is the so-called antispeculative provision and is limited to 3 years.

Mr. HINSHAW. It is limited to 3 years?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution passed at the ninth annual convention of the National Reclamation Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address by Hon. ALBERT GORE.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIVIDENDS ON INFLAMING CLASS HATREDS, SUSPICIONS, AND PREJUDICES

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the Nation was shocked and Michigan was shamed by the exhibition of ruffianism which occurred when the Republican Presidential candidate, Wendell Willkie, and Mrs. Willkie were touring Michigan.

The Nation is now collecting the evil dividends of an 8-year investment by the New Deal administration in class hatreds, prejudices, suspicions, and fears which have been aroused and nurtured by the New Deal bureaucracy.

The spectacle of class antagonism presented in the Michigan occurrence is almost unprecedented in this country.

No amount of regretting and no amount of rebukes of this sort of thing as reprehensible can relieve the Roosevelt administration of the responsibility for having aroused and nurtured the class hatreds and prejudices that inevitably result in this sort of un-American acts.

In the very hour when Mr. Roosevelt was characterizing these hoodlum acts against Mr. and Mrs. Willkie as "reprehensible," the New Deal administration, through the S. E. C., was releasing to the newspapers a story that the Du Ponts, the Rockefellers, and the Mellons own or control billions. The actual figures showed these billions to be approximately one billion and a half.

It is precisely this sort of propaganda played up at a time like this for purposes of political demagoguery that inevitably eventuates in the kind of acts which will make every decent Michigan citizen blush for shame for many a day to come that these occurrences should have taken place in our State.

Unfortunately, the extinguishment of chivalry is one of the fruits of a long propaganda campaign to arouse class animosities—and such was the case in Michigan. The presence of Mrs. Willkie, a very charming and retiring lady, made not a whit of difference to those who were cowardly enough to commit such acts of insult—and even of menace—against a distinguished American and his wife.

For several years the closest students of mass psychology have foreseen the dangers of just the sort of thing that has happened to Mr. and Mrs. Willkie.

No more dangerous, hateful, and contemptible policy can be followed by any political group, clique, or party than the practice of inflaming class hatreds and suspicions and prejudices.

As I took occasion to say a few days ago, should the New Deal be successful in perpetuating itself in power, we can expect even greater disorder of this character among our people along class lines. It would threaten to become the most dangerous and disrupting influence that could come into American life.

At a time like this, when all over the world hatreds—racial and class and national—are seething and boiling and throwing off their noxious fumes, and while we are endeavoring to build our national defense, unify our people, and guard ourselves from potential enemies, both within and without, these manifestations of class hatreds are disturbing indeed.

Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Ickes, Mme. Perkins, and others of the administration have all helped to plant these seeds of disunity and hatred. We will be fortunate, indeed, if we do not reap a harvest of grief as a result. Let us hope such will not be the case. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject Garbage to Gasoline.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FARM CHEMURGY

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in the House are very much interested in the subject of farm chemurgy. I am placing in the Appendix of the RECORD for today a statement concerning a new process for transmuting vegetable waste, such as the byproducts of sugar refineries, the garbage of large cities, the waste from sulphide cellulose paper mills, and low-grade starch materials, into butyl alcohol and from thence into aviation gasoline. I heartily recommend to the Members of the House interested in the subject of farm chemurgy that they read this little discussion for which I take the responsibility.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD what is believed to be the last public utterance of our late lamented friend, Will Bankhead.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from one of the papers in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, Wendell Willkie in his Cleveland speech rang the bell when he said "that the American people do not want war and have no idea whatever of joining any conflict, whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific. They are determined to keep America at peace."

The Republican Members of the House believe that keeping America out of foreign wars, except in defense of America and the Western Hemisphere, is the greatest issue in the campaign and transcends all party lines. We have no confidence in either President Roosevelt's ability or will to preserve peace. We are aware of his repeated provocative attacks on nations with whom we maintain diplomatic relations and his determination to police and quarantine the world.

I believe that I can say without any reservations that the Republican Members of the House of Representatives are unanimously for Mr. Willkie in his efforts to keep America out of war and will back him to the limit. I shall be glad to take the stump in the Middle West when Congress recesses to campaign for such issues as Americanism, national defense, keeping out of war, and the election of Wendell Willkie in order to guarantee the fulfillment of this program.

The Congress must not adjourn, but stay in session through 3-day recesses to meet any emergency at home or abroad, to safeguard national defense, to preserve our free institutions, and to keep America out of foreign wars. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, once again the gentleman from New York, who never seems to know when he is licked, is wasting his energy by coming to the defense of one Wendell Willkie. I presume that the man he is referring to is the same man who is the Power Trust candidate for President on the Republican ticket, and whose rough treatment in several places in Michigan has just been rightly deplored by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Though I myself personally regret these occurrences, I cannot help but feel that Candidate Willkie is bringing these attacks on himself by his reckless, harsh, contradictory references to the present administration. His misrepresentations are sometimes so bald and so maliciously untrue as to be unworthy of a candidate for the great office of the Presidency. Naturally this type of campaign will be and is resented not only in Michigan but in every section of the United States.

The gentleman from New York states that Mr. Willkie in a speech—I do not know which one—assures the voters he will, if elected, keep the country out of war. But how does this compare with his boast and bragging about what he is going to do to Hitler if elected? In any event, he is once more endorsing an outstanding Roosevelt policy. I must admit Candidate Willkie does seem to have some little sense, for he has now endorsed nearly all of the administration policies.

The Power Trust candidate also stated that he will find employment for 9,600,000 unemployed. He does not mention the fact that most of the 18,000,000 that were unemployed under the Hoover administration during 1931, 1932, and 1933 have already been reabsorbed in industry under the Roosevelt administration, that there are comparatively few able and willing to work still out of employment. The last report, as of October 1, revealed but 6,000,000 unemployed. Many of these, no doubt, are unemployable because of age, illness, or for other reasons.

I would appreciate it if the gentleman from New York or his candidate, for whom he states he is now willing to take the stump, would take the people into their confidence and tell them how and in what manner he will reemploy all those still remaining unemployed.

But, as we all know, this foolhardy promise of Candidate Willkie is just another of the many reckless bids that he is making in his mad dash for the White House, which he is destined never to reach.

The gentleman from New York states that he is speaking for the Republican membership of Congress. Though I dislike to question my colleague, I doubt very much that any considerable number of those 40 Republican Members who once stated Mr. Willkie's nomination would be a public calamity would be willing to stultify themselves now by saying too much. I am informed, by the way, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will this evening broadcast a speech on behalf of Mr. Willkie. I do not envy the gentleman at all. He has a tough job on hand.

I also sympathize with him because he, being a smart man, must recognize as well as I do that a vast preponderance of the voters have already made up their minds to reelect Franklin Roosevelt. This I am sure they will do regardless of the number of speeches that may be made by the gentleman from New York. It is rumored, by the way, that the former President, Herbert Hoover, may also make a few speeches for Mr. Willkie. Democrats are wondering whether this is a threat or a promise, meanwhile devoutly hoping that it will come to pass. Of all the leading, outstanding Republican leaders, Mr. Hoover is best qualified, or is he, to give Mr. Willkie advice on how successfully to run a nation. I am wondering whether the former President, the symbols of whose administration were soup kitchens and bread lines throughout the length and breadth of a despairing land, and who was responsible for the greatest crash in the history of our country, will be able to show his Power Trust protégé how to make a better and greater debacle? He certainly was very successful himself in establishing an all-time record in governmental failures.

Many Republicans and independents to whom I have talked or heard from by mail ask, Why should we vote for Willkie as long as he has endorsed nearly every act of Roosevelt? We might as well let F. D. R. stay in, because he at least has had more experience in handling public affairs than Mr. Willkie. It is true that Candidate Willkie does qualify his complete endorsement of the Roosevelt administration by bringing up the subject of a third term, but if he keeps on adding one endorsement of Roosevelt policies after another at the rate he has been going lately, it is feared by many astonished Republicans and independents that it is only a matter of time until he will come around to the soundness of a third term and endorse that, too.

I am indeed pleased that the vast majority of intelligent, thoughtful, patriotic Americans, having the interest of American institutions sincerely at heart, appreciate the great ability, service, and efforts of the President on behalf of their Nation. Especially are they grateful for his high-minded cooperation with Secretary of State Hull to the end and for the purpose of keeping America out of war.

The people of this Nation not only do but will continue to resent the childish, yes, I may say cheap, attacks on the President such, for instance, as that based on the action of his son Elliott in obtaining an Army commission where others had failed. I presume if it had been one of the Rockefellers, Mellons, or Du Ponts that had obtained the commission, it would have been quite all right with the Republican press. But that criticism is on a par with some of his other complaints. Perhaps he will try to make a great issue out of this, as, for instance, the keeping of Congress in session after it had enacted into law every important item of legislation that the President had asked for and there remained nothing more to do.

When a great major political party is obliged to resort to such trifling matters to work up an issue to hoodwink voters, a sad state of affairs has come about in the greatest nation of free men today existing on earth.

So, once more, in all candor I advise my colleague from New York and others who feel obliged to champion the cause of the Power Trust candidate, Wendell Willkie, to conserve their energy for a more worthy cause.

ADDRESS BY HON. HAMILTON FISH

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the Members of the House and to the country that our distinguished colleague the gentleman from New York, Hon. HAMILTON FISH, this evening at 10:30 o'clock p. m., over a hook-up of the National Broadcasting System, will discuss a very interesting subject, Conscription and Capt. Elliott Roosevelt. [Laughter.] If, however, before 10:30 this evening Capt. Elliott Roosevelt is made a general in charge of the Procurement Division of the Army Air Corps the gentleman from New York will have to discuss the subject, Conscription and Gen. Elliott Roosevelt. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT OF 1940

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10338) to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, and that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not—I am perfectly willing to have this bill brought up without a rule; but, inasmuch as I wish to speak on this bill, I ask the gentleman if I may not have 10 minutes.

Mr. MAY. I certainly would not object to 10 minutes, but I should like to ask the gentleman if he would not take 5 minutes?

Mr. FISH. No; I want 10 minutes on the bill. I am waiving objection to there not being a rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.

ARTICLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 100. That in order to provide for, strengthen, and expedite the national defense under the emergent conditions which are threatening the peace and security of the United States and to enable the United States the more successfully to fulfill the requirements of the national defense, provision is hereby made to suspend enforcement of civil liabilities, in certain cases, of persons in the military service of the United States in order to enable such persons to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the period herein specified over which this act remains in force.

SEC. 101. (1) That the term "persons in military service" and the term "persons in the military service of the United States," as used in this act, shall include the following persons and no others: All members of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard; and all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by proper authority for duty either with the Army or the Navy. The term "military service," as used in this act, shall signify Federal service on active duty with any branch of service heretofore referred to or mentioned as well as training or education under the supervision of the United States preliminary to induction into the military service. The terms "active service" or "active duty" shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

(2) The term "period of military service," as used in this act, shall include the time between the following dates: For persons in active service at the date of the approval of this act it shall begin with the date of approval of this act; for persons entering active service after the date of this act, with the date of entering active service. It shall terminate with the date of discharge from active service or death while in active service, but in no case later than the date when this act ceases to be in force.

(3) The term "person," when used in this act with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service or against a person secondarily liable under such right, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

(4) The term "court," as used in this act, shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

SEC. 102. (1) That the provisions of this act shall apply to the United States, the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, including the Philippine Islands while under the sovereignty of the United States, and to proceedings commenced in any court therein, and shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in such courts or under such regulations as may be by them prescribed.

(2) When under this act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court.

SEC. 103. Whenever pursuant to any of the provisions of this act the enforcement of any obligation or liability, the prosecution of any suit or proceeding, the entry or enforcement of any order, writ, judgment, or decree, or the performance of any other act, may be stayed, postponed, or suspended, such stay, postponement, or suspension may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be granted to sureties, guarantors, endorsers, and others subject to the obligation or liability, the performance or enforcement of which is stayed, postponed, or suspended.

When a judgment or decree is vacated or set aside in whole or in part, as provided in this act, the same may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be set aside and vacated as to any surety, guarantor, endorser, or other person liable upon the contract or liability for the enforcement of which the judgment or decree was entered.

ARTICLE II—GENERAL RELIEF

SEC. 200. (1) That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court, if there shall be a default of any appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff, before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit, plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest, and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require, as a condition before judgment is entered, that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act.

(2) Any person who shall make or use an affidavit required under this section, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(3) In any action or proceeding in which a person in military service is a party if such party does not personally appear therein or is not represented by an authorized attorney, the court may appoint an attorney to represent him; and in such case a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person. But no attorney appointed under this act to protect a person in military service shall have power to waive any right of the person for whom he is appointed or bind him by his acts.

(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within 30 days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than 90 days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

SEC. 201. That at any stage thereof any action or proceeding in any court in which a person in military service is involved, either as plaintiff or defendant, during the period of such service or within 60 days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

SEC. 202. That when an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay or perform was thereby materially impaired.

SEC. 203. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, or on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

(1) Stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against such person, as provided in this act; and

(2) Vacate or stay any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another, whether before or after judgment as provided in this act.

SEC. 204. That any stay of any action, proceeding, attachment, or execution, ordered by any court under the provisions of this act may, except as otherwise provided, be ordered for the period of military service and 3 months thereafter or any part of such period and subject to such terms as may be just, whether as to payment in installments of such amounts and at such times as the court may fix or otherwise. Where the person in military service is a codefendant with others, the plaintiff may nevertheless by leave of court proceed against the others.

SEC. 205. That the period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law for the bringing of any action by or against any person in military service or by or against his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service.

ARTICLE III—RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES

SEC. 300. (1) That no eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $80 per month, occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action or proceeding affecting the right of possession.

(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than 3 months, as provided in this act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

(3) Any person who shall knowingly take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(4) The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the Coast Guard, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

SEC. 301. (1) That no person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction.

(1a) Any person who shall knowingly resume possession of property which is the subject of this section otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(2) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, order a stay of proceedings as provided in this act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

SEC. 302. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations originating prior to the date of approval of this act and secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

(2) In any proceeding commenced in any court during the period of military service to enforce such obligation arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due or out of any other breach of the terms thereof occurring prior to or during the period of such service the court may, after hearing, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

(a) stay the proceedings as provided in this act; or

(b) make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

(3) No sale under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within 3 months thereafter, unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

ARTICLE IV—INSURANCE

SEC. 400. That in this article the term "policy" shall include any contract of life insurance on the level premium or legal reserve plan. It shall also include any benefit in the nature of life insurance arising out of membership in any fraternal or beneficial association; the term "premium" shall include membership dues or assessments in such association, and the date of issuance of policy as herein limited shall refer to the date of admission to membership in such association; the term "insured" shall include any person who is the holder of a policy as defined in this article; the term "insurer" shall include any corporation, partnership, or other form of association which secures or provides insurance under any policy as defined in this article.

SEC. 401. That the benefits of this article shall apply to any person in military service who is the holder of a policy of life insurance, when such holder shall apply for such benefits on a form prepared in accordance with regulations which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such form shall set forth particularly that the application therein made is a consent to such modification of the terms of the original contract of insurance as are made necessary by the provisions of this article and by receiving and filing the same the insurer shall be deemed to have assented thereto, to the extent, if any, to which the policy on which the application is made is within the provisions of this article. The original of such application shall be sent by the insured to the insurer, and a copy thereof to the Veterans' Administration.

The Veterans' Administration shall issue through suitable military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article and shall furnish forms to be distributed to those desiring to make application for its benefits.

SEC. 402. That the benefits of this act shall be available to any person in military service in respect of contracts of insurance in force under their terms up to but not exceeding a face value of $5,000, irrespective of the number of policies held by such person whether in one or more companies, when such contracts were made and a premium was paid thereon before the date of approval of this act or not less than 30 days before entry into the military service; but in no event shall the provisions of this article apply to any policy on which premiums are due and unpaid for a period of more than 1 year at the time when application for the benefits of this article is made or in respect of any policy on which there is outstanding a policy loan or other indebtedness equal to or greater than 50 percent of the cash surrender value of the policy.

SEC. 403. That the Veterans' Administration shall, subject to regulations, which shall be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, compile and maintain a list of such persons in military service as have made application for the benefits of this article, and shall (1) reject any application for such benefits made by persons who are not persons in military service; (2) reject any applications for such benefits in excess of the amount permitted by section 402; and (3) reject any applications in respect of contracts of insurance otherwise not entitled to the benefits of this article. Said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of every rejection or approval.

SEC. 404. That when one or more applications are made under this article by any one person in military service in respect of insurance exceeding a total face value of $5,000, whether on one or more policies or in one or more companies, and the insured shall not in his application indicate an order of preference, the Veterans' Administration shall reject such policies as have the inferior cash surrender value, so as to reduce the total benefits conferred within the face value of $5,000, and where necessary for this purpose shall direct the insurer to divide any policy into two separate policies. The said Administration shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of such selection.

SEC. 405. That no policy which has not lapsed for the nonpayment of premium before the commencement of the period of military service of the insured, and which has been brought within the benefits of this article, shall lapse or be forfeited for the nonpayment of premium during the period of such service or during 1 year after the expiration of such period: Provided, That in no case shall this prohibition extend for more than 1 year after the date when this act ceases to be in force.

SEC. 406. That within the first 15 days of each calendar month after the date of approval of this act until the expiration of 1 year after the date when this act ceases to be in force every insurance corporation or association to which application has been made as herein provided, for the benefits of this article, shall render to the Veterans' Administration a report, duly verified, setting forth the following facts:

First. The names of the persons who have applied for such benefits, and the face value of the policies in respect of which such benefits have been applied for by such persons, during the preceding calendar month.

Second. A list as far as practicable of the premiums in respect of policies entitled to the benefits of this article which remain unpaid on the last day of the preceding calendar month, which day is at least 31 days after the due date of the premiums, provided such premiums have not previously been so reported as in default.

Third. A list of premiums which, having been previously reported as in default, have been paid by the policyholder or someone on his behalf in whole or in part during the preceding calendar month.

Fourth. A computation of the difference between the total amount of defaulted premiums therein reported and the total amount of premiums paid as therein reported, after having been previously reported as in default. From this sum shall be deducted the total sum of any premiums previously reported as in default, upon policies in respect of which the Veterans' Administration has, since the date of such report, rejected an application for the benefits of this article. The final sum so arrived at shall be denominated the monthly difference.

SEC. 407. That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall verify the computation of monthly difference reported by each insurer and shall, within 10 days thereafter, deliver each month to the proper officer of such insurer, a certificate in the amount of the monthly difference certified in respect of each insurer. Such certificate shall be signed by said Administrator in the name of the United States, shall be in such form as the Administrator shall determine, shall be payable to the insurer within 60 days after the approval of the statement of account, as provided in section 411 hereof, and shall bear interest at the rate of — percent per annum, payable with the principal. Such certificate shall not be transferred except with the approval of said Administrator and shall remain with the insurer until settlement is made in accordance with this article.

SEC. 408. That the certificate so delivered shall be held by the respective insurers as security for the payment of the defaulted premiums with interest. To indemnify it against loss the United States shall have a first lien upon any policy receiving the benefits of this article, subject only to any lien existing at the time the policy became subject to this act, and no loan or settlement or payment of dividend shall be made by the insurer on such policy which may prejudice the security of such lien. Before any dividend is paid or any loan or settlement is made the written consent of the Veterans' Administration must be obtained.

SEC. 409. That in the event that the military service of any person being the holder of a policy receiving the benefits of this article shall be terminated by death, the amount of any unpaid premiums, with interest at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans, shall be deducted from the proceeds of the policy and shall be included in the next monthly report of the insurer as premiums paid.

SEC. 410. That if the insured does not within 1 year after the termination of his period of military service pay to the insurer all past-due premiums with interest thereon from their several due dates at the rate provided in the policy for policy loans, the policy shall at the end of such year immediately lapse and become void, and the insurer shall thereupon become liable to pay the cash-surrender value thereof, if any: Provided, That if the insured is in the military service when this act ceases to be in force, such lapse shall occur and surrender value be payable at the expiration of 1 year after the date when this act ceases to be in force.

SEC. 411. That at the expiration of 1 year after the date when this act ceases to be in force there shall be an account stated between each insurer and the United States, in which there shall be credited to the insurer the total amount of the certificates held as security under this article, together with accrued interest to the date of the account, and in which there shall be credited to the United States the amount of the cash-surrender value of each policy lapsed or forfeited as provided in section 410, but not in any case a greater amount on any policy than the total of the unpaid premiums with interest thereon at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans.

SEC. 412. That the balance in favor of the insurer in each case shall be certified by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay to the insurer the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the surrender by the insurer of the certificates delivered to it from time to time by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under the provisions of this article.

SEC. 413. That this article shall not apply to any policy which is void or which may at the option of the insurer be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium.

SEC. 414. That this article shall apply only to insurance companies or associations which are required by the law under which they are organized or doing business to maintain a reserve, or, which if not so required, have made or shall make provision for the collection from all those insured in such insurer of a premium to cover the special war risk of those insured persons who are in military service.

ARTICLE V—TAXES AND PUBLIC LANDS

SEC. 500. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply when any taxes or assessments, whether general or special, falling due during the period of military service in respect of real property owned and occupied for dwelling, agricultural, or business purposes by a person in military service or his dependents at the commencement of his period of military service and still so occupied by his dependents or employees are not paid.

(2) When any person in military service, or any person in his behalf, shall file with the collector of taxes, or other officer whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes or assessments, an affidavit showing (a) that a tax or assessment has been assessed upon property which is the subject of this section, (b) that such tax or assessment is unpaid, and (c) that by reason of such military service the ability of such person to pay such tax or assessment is materially affected, no sale of such property shall be made to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, or any proceeding or action for such purpose commenced, except upon leave of court granted upon an application made therefor by such collector or other officer. The court thereupon may stay such proceedings or such sale, as provided in this act, for a period extending not more than 6 months after the date when this act ceases to be in force.

(3) When by law such property may be sold or forfeited to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, such person in military service shall have the right to redeem or commence an action to redeem such property, at any time not later than 6 months after the termination of such service, but in no case later than 6 months after the date when this act ceases to be in force; but this shall not be taken to shorten any period, now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for such redemption.

(4) Whenever any tax or assessment shall not be paid when due, such tax or assessment due and unpaid shall bear interest until paid at the rate of 6 percent per annum, and no other penalty or interest shall be incurred by reason of such nonpayment. Any lien for such unpaid taxes or assessment shall also include such interest thereon.

(5) That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make provision in such manner as each may deem appropriate for his respective department, to insure the giving of notice to persons in the military service under their respective jurisdictions, of the benefits accorded by this section and the action made necessary to claim those benefits in each case.

SEC. 501. That no right to any lands owned or controlled by the United States initiated or acquired under any laws of the United States, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, by any person prior to entering military service shall during the period of such service be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from the land or his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon or his failure to do any other act required by or under such laws.

If a permittee or licensee under the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), enters military service, he may elect to suspend his permit or license for the period of his military service and 6 months thereafter, and the Secretary of the Interior by regulations shall provide for such suspension of permits and licenses and for the remission, reduction, or refund of grazing fees during such suspension.

This section shall not be construed to control specific requirements contained in this article.

SEC. 502. That section 1 of the act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed, after such entry or application enters military service, the Department of the Interior shall construe his military service to be equivalent to residence and cultivation upon the tract entered for the period of such service. From the effective date of this act no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment and no allegation of abandonment shall be sustained against any such person, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest and proved at the hearing in cases initiated subsequent to the effective date of this act that the alleged absence from the land was not due to such military service. If such person is discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, the term of his enlistment and any period of hospitalization due to such wounds or disability shall be deducted from the required length of residence, without reference to the time of actual service. No patent shall issue to any homestead entryman who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least 1 year."

SEC. 503. That section 2 of the act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If any person whose application for a homestead entry has been allowed or who has made application for homestead entry which may thereafter be allowed dies while in military service or as a result of such service, his widow, if unmarried, or in the case of her death or marriage, his minor orphan children, or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon such entry or upon an application which is allowed after the applicant's death, and shall be entitled to receive a patent for such land. The death of such person while in military service or as a result of such service shall be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation upon such homestead, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of this act.

"If such person is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to return to the land, he may make final proof without further residence, improvement, or cultivation, at such time and place as the Secretary of the Interior may authorize, and receive a patent to the land entered."

SEC. 504. No desert-land entry made or held under the desert-land laws prior to the entrance of the entryman or his successor in interest into military service shall be subject to contest or cancelation for failure to make or expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements upon the claim or to effect the reclamation of the claim during the period the entryman or his successor in interest is engaged in military service or during a period of 6 months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in the line of duty. The time within which such entryman or claimant is required to make such expenditures and effect reclamation of the land shall be exclusive of his period of service and the 6-month period and any such period of hospitalization.

If such entryman or claimant is honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to such service is unable to accomplish reclamation of, and payment for, the land, he may make proof without further reclamation or payments under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and receive patent for the land entered or claimed.

In order to obtain the benefits of this section, such entryman or claimant shall, within 6 months after the effective date of this act or within 6 months after his entrance into military service, file or cause to be filed in the land office of the district in which his claim is situated a notice that he has entered military service and that he desires to hold the desert claim under this section.

SEC. 505. That the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each mining claim located after May 10, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply during the period of his service, or until 6 months after the termination of such service, or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty, to claims or interests in claims which are owned by a person in military service and which have been regularly located and recorded. No mining claim or any interest in a claim which is owned by such a person and which has been regularly located and recorded shall be subject to forfeiture by nonperformance of the annual assessments during the period of such military service, or until 6 months after the termination of such service or of such hospitalization.

In order to obtain the benefits of this section, the claimant of any mining location shall, before the expiration of the assessment year during which he enters military service, file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded a notice that he has entered such service and that he desires to hold his mining claim under this section.

SEC. 506. Any person holding a permit or lease on the public domain under the Federal mineral leasing laws who enters military service may, at his election, suspend all operations under his permit or lease for a period of time equivalent to the period of his military service and 6 months thereafter. The term of the permit or lease shall not run during such period of suspension nor shall any rentals or royalties be charged against the permit or lease during the period of suspension.

In order to obtain the benefit of this section, such permitee or lessee shall, within 6 months after the effective date of this act or 6 months after his entrance into military service, notify the General Land Office by registered mail of his entrance into such service and of his desire to avail himself of the benefits of this section.

This section shall not be construed to supersede the terms of any contract for operation of a permit or lease.

SEC. 507. That nothing in this article shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in military service to take any action during his period of service which may be authorized by law or the regulations of the Department of the Interior for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated or acquired prior to the date of entering military service. It shall be lawful for any person while in such service to make any affidavit or submit any proof which may be required by law or the practice or regulations of the General Land Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated or acquired prior to entering such service, before the officer in immediate command and holding a commission in the branch of the service in which the person is engaged. Such affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before a register of a United States land office. The Secretary of the Interior may issue rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes of sections 501 to 508, inclusive.

SEC. 508. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to suspend as to persons in military service during the period while this act remains in force and for a period of 6 months thereafter or during any period of hospitalization because of wounds or disability incurred in line of duty that provision of the act known as the Reclamation Act requiring residence upon lands in private ownership or within the neighborhood for securing water for the irrigation of the same, and he is authorized to permit the use of available water thereon upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.

SEC. 509. That the Secretary of the Interior shall issue through appropriate military and naval channels a notice for distribution by appropriate military and naval authorities to persons in the military service explaining the provisions of this article except as to section 500 hereof and shall furnish forms to be distributed in like manner to those desiring to make application for its benefits, except as to said section.

SEC. 510. That during the pendency of any war in which the United States may be engaged while this act remains in force any homestead entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his entry for the purpose of performing farm labor. The time actually spent in farm labor shall be counted as constructive residence, if within 15 days after leaving his entry to engage in such labor the entryman files a notice of absence in the land office of the district in which his entry is situated, and if at the expiration of the calendar year the entryman files in that office a written statement under oath and corroborated by two witnesses giving the date or dates when he left his entry, the date or dates of his return, and the place where and person for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence.

Nothing in this section shall excuse any homestead entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation upon his entry required by law. The provisions of this section shall apply only to persons whose applications have been allowed or filed prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 511. That any person under the age of 21 who serves in the military service while this act remains in force shall be entitled to the same rights under the laws relating to lands owned or controlled by the United States, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, as those over 21 now possess under such laws. Any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until 6 months after his discharge from military service. Applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States or any foreign country authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated.

SEC. 512. That citizens of the United States who serve with the forces of any nation with which the United States may be allied in the prosecution of any war in which the United States engages while this act remains in force shall be entitled to the relief and benefits afforded by this article, if such service is similar to military service as defined in this act, and if they are honorably discharged and resume United States citizenship or die in the service of the allied forces or as a result of such service.

ARTICLE VI—ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

SEC. 600. That where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made, the provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 601. (1) That in any proceeding under this act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army of the United States, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the United States Navy, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the United States Navy, and signed by the Major General Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service, the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and the place where such person died in or was discharged from such service.

It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person purporting upon the face of the certificates to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

(2) Where a person in military service has been reported missing he shall be presumed to continue in the service until accounted for, and no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall begin or end until the death of such person is in fact reported to or found by the Department of War or Navy, or any court or board thereof, or until such death is found by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall be extended hereby beyond a period of 6 months after the time when this act ceases to be in force.

SEC. 602. That any interlocutory order made by any court under the provisions of this act may, upon the court's own motion or otherwise, be revoked, modified, or extended by it upon such notice to the parties affected as it may require.

SEC. 603. That this act shall remain in force until June 30, 1942: Provided, however, That should the United States be then engaged in a war, this act shall remain in force until such war is terminated by a treaty of peace proclaimed by the President and for 6 months thereafter: Provided further, That wherever under any section or provision of this act a proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or other transaction has been authorized or provided, the due exercise or enjoyment of which may extend beyond the period herein fixed for the termination of this act, such section or provision shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect so long as may be necessary to the exercise or enjoyment of the proceeding, remedy, privilege, stay, limitation, accounting, or transaction aforesaid.

SEC. 604. That this act may be cited as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments from the Clerk's desk may now be considered. They are some 10 in number and are merely clarifying in character so as to make this bill conform as nearly as may be to a Senate bill which is on the Speaker's table, having already passed the Senate. After we dispose of the committee amendments I will yield some time to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, line 20, after the word "jurisdiction", insert the following: "Provided, That such contract may be terminated or canceled by mutual consent of the parties thereto or their assignees, executed in writing, and possession of such property resumed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, line 9, strike out the words "and shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, beginning in line 18, strike out the words "originating prior to the date of approval of this act and".

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 20, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 303. No court shall stay a proceeding to resume possession of a motor vehicle, tractor, or the accessories of either, or for an order of sale thereof, where said motor vehicle, tractor, or accessories are encumbered by a purchase money mortgage or conditional sales contract and 50 percent or more of the purchase price of said property has been paid, but in any such proceeding the court may, before entering an order or judgment, require the plaintiff to file a bond, approved by the court, conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any such judgment or order should the judgment or order be set aside in whole or in part."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY to the committee amendment: Page 12, line 24, after the word "mortgage", strike out the word "or" and insert a comma.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY to the committee amendment: Page 12, line 24, after the word "contract", strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or a lease or bailment with a view to purchase unless the court shall find that."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 23, strike out all of lines 21, 22, and 23, and insert:
"SEC. 502. That if any person whose application for a homestead entry."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 24, strike out all of lines 21, 22, and 23, and insert:
"SEC. 503. That if any person whose application for a homestead entry."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer several amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 24, line 3, after the word "service", insert "or if any person who has a valid settlement claim enters military service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 24, line 6, after the word "entered", insert "or settled upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 24, lines 18 and 19, after the word "any", strike out "homestead entryman."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 24, line 20; page 25, line 13; page 25, line 18, strike out quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 25, line 4, after the word "minor", strike out the word "orphan."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 25, line 7, after the word "death", insert "or upon the homestead application thereafter allowed based on a valid settlement claim."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 25, line 11, after the word "homestead", insert "or claim."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 25, line 12, after the word "section", strike out "1" and insert "502."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 25, line 18, after the word "entered", insert "The act of July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. 248), is hereby repealed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 7, strike out "508" and insert "512."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 34, line 1, strike out "1942" and insert "1945."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, after line 16, insert:
"SEC. 605. The provisions of section 4 of the act approved August 27, 1940 (Public Resolution No. 96, 76th Cong.), and the provisions of section 13 of the act approved September 16, 1940 (Public, No. 783, 76th Cong.), are hereby repealed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill comes before us with the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs and I am heartily in favor of the measure as far as it goes. It aims to help those who are in the military service get some protection from conditional sales or installment contracts on their automobiles, refrigerators, and furniture, and so forth, and rents on their homes and apartments. I would like to know if there is anything Congress can do, through appropriations or otherwise, to enable members of the National Guard to vote in the coming national election.

It is important before Congress adjourns that it protect to the limit of its powers the right of members of the National Guard called into the Federal service to vote on election day. It may be necessary to provide appropriations to defray traveling expenses to permit members of the guard to return home to register as most of them come from cities where personal registration is necessary. I assume under existing laws in New York State that they could then vote an absentee ballot.

I appeal to Governor Lehman to call a one-day session of the New York State Legislature in order to amend the election law so that members of the guard in Federal service may register by mail and vote by absentee ballot if there is no such provision in the law.

There is no more loyal and patriotic group of Americans than those who have enlisted in the guard in time of peace. By their service they have proved their devotion to our institutions and national defense. It would be a travesty on free elections if men who have been called out in this emergency to defend the Government should be disfranchised.

It is the duty of the State to enact appropriate legislation immediately, and, failing that, for Congress to provide sufficient funds for traveling expenses where personal registration is required.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that this bill carries no provision for transporting these National Guard soldiers back to their voting districts on election day. I am also sorry that the Committee on Military Affairs has failed to report or bring up in this House a bill giving sergeants in the National Guard longevity pay and rental allowance. These sergeants with long military experience are now resigning from the National Guard because of the failure of the Congress to act. They need this rental allowance to maintain their families at home, and I hope that Congress will not adjourn without providing rental allowance and longevity pay for them. If Congress fails to act we will lose the much needed services of some of the finest-trained soldiers in America, these sergeants of many years military training and experience.

Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to raise, unfortunately, another issue, one that I am very sorry to bring up in Congress as an American who believes in the best possible national defense. I received today from my own district three letters protesting about the deplorable housing and poor feeding of the members of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Field Artillery, from my district, who are now stationed at Camp Dix. I propose to read to the House a letter from a private of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Artillery published in the Poughkeepsie Evening Star yesterday. I do not guarantee the correctness of his criticisms, but I want to put it in the RECORD before we recess. I propose to investigate these charges immediately, and hope that other Members of the House from New York and New Jersey will do so also. It is dated September 29, 1940, Fort Dix, N. J., and is addressed to the editor of the Evening Star, which is the largest daily newspaper in my district:

DEAR SIR: I am writing to you so that you may acquaint your readers, our families, and our friends of the conditions that actually exist at Fort Dix.

I am a private of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth, which so proudly left Poughkeepsie a short time ago. But now I am one of the many hungry, disgusted soldiers at Fort Dix.

The food is poorly prepared, and after eating our rations, still leave the mess shack hungry. The food is poorly prepared, never seasoned, frequently burned, and never enough. Many of us have suffered serious weight losses.

The whole regiment of about 800 men eat in a single mess shack which necessitates standing in the rain and standing to eat.

We did not expect a bed of roses, and cheerfully accepted the many hardships, which we felt would be justified in wartime, but we are at peace. However, there are many things we cannot stand without resentment.

First of these is the food situation. Second is the sanitation facilities.

The wash bowls are nearly always stopped up, leaving them full of dirty, filthy water. Many of us do not wash any more. The toilets are frequently stopped up for days. There is seldom warm water for showers.

Our families were assured that everything would be done to safeguard our health. But evidently those people have forgotten about us. Most of the boys suffer from the cold at night due to lack of heat and blankets.

We appeal to you, our friends and families back home, "Can't you do something to help us?"

Thanking you for any consideration you may give this letter of appeal.

The letter is signed "A Private, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Field Artillery." However, he adds:

P. S.—We are still loyal, patriotic Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I regard this as a very, very serious charge. If it is so, it means that we have called the National Guard into service without proper housing, without proper sanitary facilities, and without proper food. There is not a single Member of this House, Republican or Democrat, who will condone any such deplorable situation. It is up to us to find out if this situation exists and to remedy it at once. I know the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will be the first to protest any such situation if these conditions actually exist.

Now, let me read to you a release from the War Department dated September 24 in regard to this situation as affecting men to be inducted into the service under the Conscription Act.

In all instances, it is expected that the selectees will be called only after the actual housing, sanitary, and hospital facilities, which are building or are to be built, are completed.

I hope that is so, even if it takes months, even if it takes to January or February. I hope no draftees will be called and put into inadequate cantonments in the midst of the coming winter.

The last page of this memorandum released by the War Department states:

The folks at home can be assured that their young men will be well cared for, etc.

Mr. Speaker, I have today received from my constituents, who are very good to me and who very seldom send protests to me without legitimate reason, three letters making these complaints, based on the letter from a guardsman from the city of Poughkeepsie. They protest, and very properly, the complaint that these volunteers should have to live under any such deplorable conditions, with the weather getting colder and colder every day. They are entitled to know all the facts and I propose to get them immediately.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. Has the gentleman investigated any of these conditions himself?

Mr. FISH. I purposely said that I have not. I received these letters today from my own constituents. I propose to investigate them at once. I know that the Forty-fourth Division, of which this man is a member, is one of the best divisions in the National Guard. I do not believe it is necessary now for this House to take action, but I propose to check on these charges and to take whatever steps that are necessary. I know this, that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will be the first man to try to remedy any such conditions, if they do exist. I said at the outset that I was not making this statement on my own knowledge.

Mr. McGRANERY. It is my observation from what the gentleman has said that he would demonstrate his sincerity to the House, to his district, and to these soldiers in a better manner if he would make his investigation and then come to the House.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows that the House is about to recess. I do not believe the gentleman will be here in 2 or 3 days himself. If the gentleman knows all about the conditions at Camp Dix that is all right but I do not. I am inclined to believe in the sincerity of this private soldier, as his letter rings true and he seems to know what he is talking about. I intend to investigate the charges and I want the people in New Jersey where Camp Dix is located to investigate them also. My constituents who have written me have a right to be heard. Does the gentleman mean for one moment that a member of the National Guard has not the right to petition his Member of Congress and have his views expressed on the floor of the House?

These are not my views. They are the views of a soldier from my district and I am submitting them as a petition from him. The gentleman can investigate if he wants but I intend to and I hope other Members of the House will do the same. [Applause.]

The people of my district are very proud of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Field Artillery, and rightly so. I attended and spoke at two farewell dinners to units of this regiment in Newburgh and Poughkeepsie. I promised then that nothing was too good for them and I propose to keep my promise. The Congress has a definite responsibility as it voted to call the National Guard into the Federal service. I shall ask for a thorough investigation and report from the War Department tomorrow in addition to making my own. I also promise that there will be no delay, as the mothers of these boys and their families are worried and if conditions are unsanitary and unhealthy they must be remedied at once. The following letters from three constitutents are self-explanatory.

NEW HAMBURG, N. Y., October 2, 1940.

DEAR MR. FISH: Although I realize you are probably not on any committee which would be able to take care of, or look into, a situation such as is explained in the enclosed article, isn't there something you can do to help rectify it? Certainly it is a very poor way for soldiers of our United States to have to live—and the weather keeps getting colder all the time, which doesn't help matters any.

I shall look forward to seeing you at the dinner October 15 given by the Women's Republican Club of Dutchess County.

Sincerely,

AGNES VAN VOORHIS.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., October 1, 1940.

Congressman HAMILTON FISH.

DEAR SIR: I am one of the many mothers of which my boy has went away last Wednesday with the National Guard for a year's training at Camp Dix.

I am enclosing a clipping for which I would appreciate it if you would take it into consideration, as we mothers are all so worried.

Thanking you,

BULL MARKETS, INC.,
Kingston, N. Y., October 2, 1940.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FISH: I would like to call your attention to a letter from Fort Dix, which appeared in the Poughkeepsie Evening Star, Tuesday, October 1, in regard to the food being served to our National Guard.

I am presuming to call this to your attention because I personally have reason to believe that there is some truth in it. I have received several cards from the boys at Fort Dix, which complain not only of poorness of food but also of the shortness of the rations.

I fully realize that in times like these there are hardships which the boys in training must endure until such a time as things are organized. I can fully understand that a boy who is used to home cooking might not like the preparation of or the quality of foods given to him in camp. However, by no stretch of the imagination can I see any excuse at this time for giving them insufficient rations. Because of the fact that the officers of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth are aware that I am personally acquainted with several of the recruits, I hesitate to write directly to them for obvious reasons.

When these boys enlisted they did so in a spirit of patriotism and enthusiasm. I believe that everything possible should be done to foster that spirit.

Yours truly,

E. J. HUGHES, Manager.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 23, line 2, insert a new provision as follows: "(6) The payment of income taxes on the income of any person in the military service shall be deferred if such person's ability to pay such taxes is impaired by reason of his military service, and no interest or penalty shall accrue on such taxes because of the nonpayment thereof."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this amendment simply provides for the deferment of income taxes in the event any might be due from any of the trainees who would be called into the service. The amendment only provides for the deferment of such taxes in the event the ability of the person is impaired to meet these payments. This amendment would not affect the income taxes of the officers in the Army at the present time. Their ability to meet the payment of their current income taxes is not impaired in any way because their situation has not been changed, but in the case of many individuals who are earning a limited income and who frequently make no provision to meet their income tax when it comes due in the succeeding year, except out of their current income, they would find great difficulty, by reason of their being called into the service, in meeting the income tax which would be levied next March. By reason of this amendment, such an individual would be able to defer that payment until he had come out of the service, when it would be possible for him to meet the payment. In addition no interest or other penalty would accrue by reason of the fact the income taxes were so deferred.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The bill, as reported by the committee, provides for the deferment of the payment of taxes on real estate, rent, and various other things.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK. And it is just as much of a burden on a man to pay an income tax as any other tax.

Mr. COSTELLO. Very often it might be a greater burden.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. It seemed to me from listening to the reading of the amendment that no date was fixed for the ultimate payment of the tax by the gentleman's amendment. Does the gentleman intend to have it deferred indefinitely or until a date certain in the future?

Mr. COSTELLO. It would be deferred like all the other taxes during the period the gentleman was in the service.

Mr. HINSHAW. It is deferred in accordance with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. The same as the other taxes mentioned in the same section.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Do I understand that in the bill proper there is an amortization of debts pertaining to these draftees as well as those who might enlist in the National Guard?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct. It covers all persons in the military service, the Army, Navy, and the Coast Guard and includes the National Guard, Reserve officers, and the trainees when they are actually in the service.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I have examined the amendment and I have no objection to it, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time because I want to raise a question with the committee. I recall that when the conscription bill was before the House, I believe on September 7, I proposed an amendment which was intended to protect the draftees, or any men in the service, who had certain claims upon the public domain, as, for instance, in regard to homestead entries or assessment work on unpatented mining claims. At that time my amendment was defeated, perhaps largely because some thought the language of the bill already accomplished it, but I was assured by the committee that pending legislation would definitely take care of that very problem. I would like to ask the chairman whether that has certainly been done in this bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, the committee has three or four different amendments on pages 24 and 25 of the bill which have been adopted, and all of them take care of the question, not only of persons who have settled on claims or entered the military service while living on a claim, but one who has even settled on one, whether he owns it or not. All those questions have been covered.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman. In the Western States, where so large a portion of the area of the State is controlled by the United States Government, I think it only fair that the draftees and service men should be protected in all such claims, as I expressed to the committee earlier, and I hope they are adequately protected.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the gentleman will find that various sections of the bill, particularly sections 501, 502, 503, 504, and 505, fairly cover both homesteads and mining claims. The Department of the Interior has recommended a number of these amendments which have been offered, and I think the gentleman will find that the matter which he desires to have covered is very adequately covered in the legislation, as he was informed at the time he offered his other amendment to the Selective Training Act.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman from California. No doubt this is the legislation which the gentleman had in mind in making his reply to me on September 7 when I offered the amendment to the selective-service-training bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I do this because it seems to me that this bill ought to be as thoroughly understood as possible.

I do not propose to make an oration here, but I do propose to try to interpret the bill as I understand it, with the request that I be corrected as I go along.

I am afraid there are many Members of the House and there may be men who are going to be affected by the terms of this bill who are not going to understand what we are doing.

As I understand what this bill provides, it is roughly the following: It says that if a person who is drafted into the service of the country under the terms of legislation recently passed, is renting a home or purchasing a home or has some other contract on which he is liable to make payments, then he shall not be dispossessed or his family shall not be evicted or no action of that sort shall be taken without court permission during the time he is in the service or for 3 months thereafter. I do not understand, however, that his payments are in any way forgiven to him, or anything like that. He is still liable to make the same payments at some future time as he would have to make under these circumstances. The only thing that happens is that his family cannot be evicted or the property cannot be taken away from him, which he is in the process of purchasing.

In the case of insurance I understand that the Government guarantees the difference between the amount of premium that the man can pay and the full amount of the premium, but that the man must repay the Government for the amount that the Government pays on his behalf during this period, at some future time. In other words, I think we should not give the impression that this is a moratorium on payments of various sorts. It is not. It is a suspension of action against men who are put into service, which may affect these instruments of theirs, and in effect a postponement of payment to such time, if the court decides it is fair to do it, as they are able to pay. As I understand it, such action on the part of the court is permissive and not mandatory; that the court may grant this relief. It does not have to grant it.

If I am wrong about any of these remarks, I want to be corrected now. I am only a layman. I am not a lawyer and I have not been on the committee, but I just made these remarks because I think it is a very important bill to many thousands of people and that Members of Congress ought to consider it carefully and that we ought to be clear in our minds as to what we are doing.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Did I understand the gentleman to say that where a person has an insurance policy and is unable to meet the payments, the Government will assume that responsibility?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Perhaps the chairman of the committee had better answer it, but my understanding is that the Government pays the difference between the amount a man is considered able to pay and the full amount of the premium, while he is in the service.

Mr. ARENDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. ARENDS. The gentleman is correct. However, he will be issued a certificate and he will have to pay this back. In other words, the Government will have a lien against this man's insurance policy until such time as the owner of the insurance policy reimburses the Government.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And how long does he have to pay it back? A year?

Mr. ARENDS. A year after he is out of service.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And during that year he must repay the Government what it has paid on his policy?

Mr. ARENDS. That is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Who is to determine whether or not the selectee is able to pay and how much?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would rather the chairman of the committee tell us that.

Mr. MAY. In case of a controversy of that kind it goes to the court, and this committee debated that question quite a great deal and felt that if there was any part of the Government we could trust implicitly it is the courts of the country in the communities where the men live and where they owe their obligation.

I will say, in answer to the apparent sincerity of the gentleman from California, who is always looking after the underdog, and justly so, that this committee debated and debated and discussed this bill and had meeting after meeting time after time. After we had completed all of our studies on it we wondered if there was anything we could do that we had not done for these enrollees, and finally this morning the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] discovered we had overlooked payment of the income tax and he offered an amendment to take care of that situation. That is the last effort we have made. If we have overlooked anything else we will be glad to do it if we have an opportunity to do it. But this bill is important. It is urgent and the War Department is anxious to begin its administration in the interest of the National Guard men who are already in the service and the enrollees who are coming in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words in order to ask my good friend, the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, a question.

It may be true that the Congress has tried to take care of the selectee in every respect, but in a few words I am afraid when the selectee receives his $30 on the first of each month so many deductions will have been made he will find himself in debt to Uncle Sam, just the same as the World War veteran did during the World War.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the chairman of the committee how the selectee, when he is in camp down in Louisiana, is going to be able to get to the court, say, in Ohio, whence he came, in order to take care of that little matter.

Mr. MAY. In the first place, these things are all deferred until he is out of the service at the end of the year and back home. Then he is given a year in which to pay them.

In answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I may say there are no deductions allowed against the $30 a month under this bill, and the War Department nor anybody else can force a deduction regardless of what his obligations are.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman is correct, but rest assured the selectee will be instructed by his commanding officer to take out a war-risk insurance policy in addition to the allotment he has been told to send back home. Then, of course, another Liberty-bond drive will be staged, and once again the selectee will receive instructions, this time to buy a Liberty bond.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman agree with me that if the officer in charge directs him to deduct something for war-risk insurance that it is an important thing to him and more important to him than to anybody else, and that it ought to be done?
